Those students were all rather nervous because the rank this time would decide whether or not they could go to the cosmic observatory and see the space in person!

Ali couldn't help but clench his hands tightly. Recently, he had forgotten all about sleeping and eating and was completely devoted to his studies, because he knew that his foundation was weak and that he had to make up for it with his hard work.

"... His name is Ali!"

BOOM!

Brian's voice burst out in Ali's head like a clap of thunder. His head became fuzzy, and he could not hear what his teacher said next.

"... Because there is a queue up ahead, the time of the visit has been scheduled at the end of August or the beginning of April..."

Have I really made it?

That was the only ecstatic idea in Ali's head.

Chapter 765: The New Vacuum Model

Chapter 765: The New Vacuum Model

In the classroom, all the students focused their eyes on Ali, but he sensed none of it and simply stared at his teacher Brian, as if he were trying to confirm that what he heard just now was not his hallucination or a dream.

Brian was mostly interested in illusion and psychoanalysis in the magic school. Therefore, he nodded with a smile and repeated what he said just now, “Yes, you are the most distinguished student in your grade in the monthly exam. Congratulations. You won the special prize.”

It's true!

It's true!

Ali's mind suddenly burst out. His clenched hands shivered softly, and his head was filled with only a few words.

The cosmic observatory!

The Atom Institution!

Jane!

The boundless space!

“Ali, are you not going to share your joy and your experience in learning with everybody?” Brian's voice made Ali back to himself.

“Yes, Ali. None of us has ever touched the basics of arcana and magic before. How can we learn it well?” Some of the students who were born as common civilians just like Ali opened their mouths.

It had only been half a year since they came to school. They hadn't suffered major setbacks or given up on themselves yet. Therefore, they were more curious about Ali's miraculous rise in rank than they were jealous.

Ali stood up and was about to say something, but he suddenly remembered the difficult journey recently and how he had been toiling. Immediately, his eyes became sour, and it was impossible for him to see what was clear around him.

“I... I was only thinking that my father is not a sorcerer, not a noble, not a banker, not a merchant, and my talents are not nearly as good as those geniuses who have been admitted by the magic school, so I can only work harder than them if I want to keep up with them...” Ali said, half sobbing. He wanted to express something, but he did so rather poorly.

...

The Month of Harvest (September) came again. None of the islands controlled by the Congress was attacked by Maltimus. It seemed that all his attention had been dedicated to uniting the sea clans. Therefore, Brook returned to Allyn in advance.

Inside the Atomic Universe, the complicated magic circles on the top floor of Babel were now gradually perfected. The ripples of space and time were spreading out in the hall.

“Are you prepared?” Natasha sensed the strangeness after she returned from the Nekso Palace.

Lucien collected the materials for the magic circle and smiled. “I still need to modify the details. They will be completed in probably a few days.”

“It’s a shame that the Shield of Truth hasn’t been totally restored yet, or I would like to jump over with you and see what the real sun is like...” Natasha scratched her chin, apparently enticed. She sounded rather regretful.

Without the protection of the Shield of Truth, it was impossible for her to resist the ultra-high temperature near the sun. Therefore, she decisively held back the thought of trying, or it would’ve been irresponsible for her family, her father, and her subjects. After all, even Lucien could not tell whether he would reach an appropriate distance away from the sun or simply land on the sun after his teleportation.

Lucien smiled. "You have to hold Maltimus responsible for that."

He paused and continued, "If I can really find the sun, you can take a look at it whenever you want to. Right now, I have a paper that I would like you to submit in Allyn for me tomorrow."

Natasha chuckled. "You still have time for papers?"

To seize every moment to set up the magic circles, it had been a couple of months since Lucien went to the Atom Institution.

"It's a paper that I wrote earlier." Lucien took out a paper from the magic pouch and handed it over to Natasha.

Natasha picked it up and glanced at it, reading the title aloud. "Positive Electrons Discovered in Cosmic Radiations and Some Heuristic Thoughts on the Model of Positive and Negative Particles', you are ready to submit the paper?"

"Yes." Lucien nodded softly. "After the cosmic observatory is established, it will only be a matter of time for positive electrons to be discovered. Also, I already used 'Positron Cannon' in the battle against the Lord of Hell. It might've been caught by the elven queen... After all, the magic model cannot be built so easily."

For a very long time, it was his unique spell.

...

At the beginning of the Month of Harvest, a group of vigorous boys and girls arrived at the gate of the Atom Institution.

"What will the Atom Institution be like?" Ali took a deep breath and said to Anderson, whom he just met. The guy was the top student of the second grade in the generic school.

While Ali was speaking, he was actually glimpsing at the girl who was wearing a daisy dress not far away. She had a delicate face, and her curled black hair dangled on her shoulder gently.

The students from all the schools had introduced themselves just now. Therefore, Ali knew that it was his pen pal, Jane.

However, under the watch of the teachers of the noble school, Ali dare not speak with Jane in case the teachers got suspicious and informed Jane's parents. In such a case, they wouldn't even be pen pals anymore. In the tales and plays of the bards, most of the relationships between the noble lady and the poor boy would be highly rejected by the noble families.

Sensing that Ali was looking at her, Jane turned around and put on a gentle smile, which excited Ali and made his blood boil.

"It definitely won't disappoint you." Anderson had visited the Atom Institution before, but he was still nervous and excited. "What will the real cosmos be like?"

How would the place that carried so many tales and so many beautiful wishes present itself?

"What did you see last time?" Ali intentionally asked, in case his knowledge caught suspicion.

Anderson was a rather flamboyant boy, so he said proudly, "Last time, we completed the particle collision experiment under the guidance of Mr. Lazar and Ms. Heidi..."

During the last visit, most arcanists in the Atom Institution were busy with their own experiments. Also, they were not allowed to draw close for the sake of confidentiality. Only arcanists like Lazar, Rock, and Heidi, who were better at dealing with people, showed them around and did the famous experiments.

"... They're very knowledgeable... The whole laboratory is absolutely quiet save the noises..."

The picture of the Atom Institution in Ali's head was more and more clear thanks to Anderson's introduction. The only thing that dissatisfied him was that Anderson's narration did not reflect the cutting edge of the microscopic domain.

At this moment, the gate of the institution was opened, and noises came out of the room.

“Alfalia, read this issue of ‘Arcana’!”

“What?”

“Mr. Evans has discovered positive electrons. Antiparticles do exist!”

“This world is too amazing...”

The exclamations came into the ears of Ali and the other students. They were rather confused. What were positive electrons and what were antiparticles? Why did they sound familiar?

As hypotheses that hadn’t been proven, the notions of positive electrons and antiparticles were not introduced in their textbook. That was why those students were confused.

However, Lucien was best famous for his disruptive theories. His speculations often piqued people’s attention and curiosity. They were mentioned a lot in the newspapers and by the radio stations.

In other places, they might have remembered it soon, but this was the cutting edge of the microscopic domain. How could the terms in stories show up here?

“After Ms. Hellen and Mr. Oliver extrapolated the Lucien equation to the microscopic particles whose spin is not integral, enshrouding the whole microscopic particles with its splendor, I knew that Mr. Evans’ speculation on antiparticles would be proved sooner or later.” Lowi said excitedly, “Then, the odds that the vacuum ocean of negative energy exists have increased too!”

Layria and Alfalia were reading the same copy of “Arcana”. They understood Lowi’s excitement well because they were also very thrilled. Suddenly, they exclaimed as they read the following paper.

“Our teacher did not mention the vacuum ocean of negative energy and abandoned the description of negative energy. He gave a new model, where positive particles and negative particles would appear and perish in pairs in the vacuum.” Chelly raised her head and hoped to see the same amazement on Lazar and Alfalia’s faces.

Layria read part of the content on the paper. “... According to the field theory and the new material point, all the particles could be seen as different fields. They’re the activated status of fields, and the base of fields is the vacuum. Therefore, different fields that are in the base status can overlap... There is no absolute vacuum in our world... Vacuums are not empty...

“... According to the uncertainty principle, there will be great energy fluctuations in a small, fixed time range... Therefore, the vacuum is itself an ever-surging ocean of energy. The conservation of energy is maintained in general... During the process, the fields enter the activated status from the base status, yielding a pair of positive and negative particles. Then, the pair of particles perish with each other, release energy, and the total is the same...

“... Because the process is too short to be investigated, the positive and negative particles are virtual particles. However, under special circumstances, those virtual particles might be separated because of external force and become the real positive and negative particles. That is perhaps one of the sources of materials. It has been generated from ‘nothing’ because of the uncertainty principle...”

The whole Atom Institution was quiet as she read the content. Lazar, Chelly, and the others tried to understand the model. They were still too shocked.

The ever-surging ocean of energy in the vacuum, the appearance and disappearance of particles, and the generation of matter disrupted their understandings in the past, raising a storm in their brains.

Also, the ever-surging ocean of energy seemed able to explain the source of magic energy!

Alfalia, who was rather good at astrology, suddenly mumbled to herself, “The uncertainty principle that is regarded as a demon because it might disrupt determinism is actually the source of matter...”

Ali was so dizzy at the gate that he turned to Anderson. “Do you have any idea what they are talking about?”

Anderson shook his head quickly. “Not a clue... What about you?”

Not far from them, Jane also shook her head.

“Me neither...” Ali looked more than confused. “Perhaps... this is the landscape at the bleeding edge of the microscopic domain...”

“That’s right.” Anderson couldn’t have agreed more.

Lazar managed to get back to himself from his shock. He turned to Ali and the other students and said, “You’re here? You will be divided into groups of four. Each group will spend half an hour in the cosmic observatory. Heidi and Annick are waiting for you up there.”

Five people could be teleported at one time, but they had to be accompanied by a middle-rank sorcerer. In the cosmic observatory, even though the laboratory was only big enough for five experimenters to work in, there was enough place for more visitors. Besides, the magic gems and energy consumed would be covered by the Congress of Magic.

Ali and the other students were no longer confused. Their hearts were racing again.

...

Inside the Atomic Universe...

Lucien walked to the center and was ready to activate the magic circle.

Natasha, who came to see him off, scratched her chin and said, “To be honest, it has only been three months since we explored the Boundless Ocean and confirmed the ideas with data. I feel that this is too easy, like a child’s game.”

“It did not begin from the exploration of the Boundless Ocean...”
Lucien blinked his eyes and smiled rather cunningly.

Then, the light was on, and the gate of space and time was opened.

Chapter 766: The Discovery

Chapter 766: The Discovery

The silver lines lit up one by one and outlined the space-time gate. Lucien walked into the gate in one stride.

A dazzling light burst out, and Lucien's figure gradually disappeared. After the light was gone, Natasha could only see the empty magic circle and the pale space-time gate.

.....

"The transmission to the cosmic observatory is ready. Please make sure you have finished the potion in your hand," said Layria to the four students, Ali, Anderson, Jane, and Philomena.

Ali took a glance at the light blue tube in his hand and could still feel the spicy taste. However, after taking the potion, he did feel a strange feeling, as if his soul, brain, and his body had been put into a magic freezer.

Earlier, when signing up to be the volunteers, he saw Jane stepping out first, so he hurriedly followed. Luckily, he was the fourth.

He looked to the side and into Jane's eyes. He saw that Jane's black eyes, which were always quiet and peaceful, were now shining with excitement and exhilaration. The light in her eyes came from the most sincere passion that a human being had toward the mysterious and boundless universe.

One would never be able to realize how small and insignificant an individual was until one saw the starry expanse.

Looking around and seeing the look on the students' faces, Layria smiled. The Congress was obviously very generous to these students. The magic potion called Strong Chirga that was given to each student was very expensive, and it was used to help with nausea. Most sorcerers who entered the cosmos would endure this themselves.

Chirga was a fruit of Holm, but its annual yield was very low. Chirga could be used as the main material for some senior-rank magic potions.

But Layria knew that there was a reason behind the Congress' generosity. When the students saw the cosmos, they would understand that the so-called God of Truth on the small planet, which strived to gather more followers and resources, was in fact not that almighty at all.

Then the students would go back to their schools and promote the idea among more students. The Congress would then introduce more projects, including cosmos museums, experience centers, and more radio programs, to widen people's horizons as much as possible.

"Attention. The transmission has been activated," said Layria.

Ali suddenly became very nervous. Before this space jump, he never even tried flying!

But his heart was also full of expectation and excitement.

The dazzling light streaks blurred Ali's eyes.

.....

Tower.

"There are positive electrons... It's true..." said Rachel to Samantha. In her hand, there was the latest issue of Arcana. Rubbing her forehead, she felt both excited and frustrated.

"We can't see it before we do the experiment on our own," said Samantha with a meaningful look on her face.

Although she said so, she did believe that Lucien had found positive electrons. The Lucien equation had gained great significance in the field of microscopic domain study, and its validity had been proven many times. Lucien was also well-known for his rigorous attitude, and he had never published a paper unless he was a hundred percent certain. Perhaps this was the power of authority.

“The world is so wonderful! In the past thousands of years, not a single intelligent creature has ever realized the existence of antimatter. But now, arcana will lead us to the truth of the world.” Rachel’s eyes were shining with excitement. No arcanist could resist the charm of arcana.

Although most arcanists started their studies for power, for money, for treasures, or for material enjoyment, and they could easily forget their most sincere passion because of the tedious, repetitive experiments and wealth, but every time when there was a major finding, they could still recall the passion and pure joy from exploring the truth of the world.

Samantha nodded. “Actually, according to symmetry, the existence of antiparticles shouldn’t be something too surprising. When there are particles, there must be their antiparticles. Mr. Evans has also abandoned the most doubtful concept of negative energy and chosen to replace it with the pair production of particles and annihilation.”

“I wonder how those supporters of the model of the ocean in the vacuum are feeling right now. The grand arcanist who was supposed to be the one most likely to support it has given it up,” said Rachel. Although the model thrilled every sorcerer, as it provided a possible insight into the nature of magic, many leading arcanists found it unreliable because of the experiments on some particles with integer spins.

Samantha finally smiled. “No matter what, the falsifiability of the model hasn’t been proved yet, nor has the validity of Mr. Evans’ model.”

Then the smile on her face disappeared, and she murmured a bit confusedly, “Does the uncertainty principle apply to how matters come into being...?”

Then what about determinism? Should it be dumped?

“At the end of the paper, Mr. Evans discussed a possible experiment for verifying the uncertainty principle...” said Rachel in low voice. “According to the principle of field theory, there are tiny electromagnetic pulses in a vacuum space...”

Staring at the paper on the desk, Samantha remained silent. Lucien’s fame and past glory had proved that he was by no means a daydreamer. As he had specified the experiment in his paper, he must have been quite certain about it.

After the uncertainty principle was put forward, although many microscopic domain experiments had shown great conformity to it, no solid experiments could directly prove it yet, which provided arcanists in the school of astrology precious time to slowly adjust themselves to adopt the new concept safely.

“If Mr. Evans had come up with this idea two years earlier, only low-rank sorcerers would have survived,” said Rachel.

Samantha sighed. After the recent two to three years, the many setbacks she had gone through had forced her to start accepting the falling of determinism, and she believed that this was also true for other countless arcanists. The world showed no mercy to any individual and would never change itself because of an individual’s unacceptance.

She looked out of the window and the bright sunlight made her squint. She felt that she could see a bright but a bit sad future.

“Anyway, the discovery of antiparticles will be forever remembered by the history of arcana. We’ve stepped out of the world that had been trapping us. Now we’re even closer to the truth.”

“Maybe nothing bigger than this will show up for a very, very long time,” said Rachel, who also turned to look at the blue sky outside. “After the past ten years of rapid development, it seems that arcana has hit the plateau. The next groundbreaking finding has to keep brewing for a long time.”

.....

Traveling through the layers of space and time, Lucien saw the countless shadowy and overlapping sections in front of him, just like when he cast Regather.

.....

When the dazzling light retreated, Ali felt very uncomfortable, but the refreshing feeling brought by the potion gave him the energy to look around eagerly.

Ali did not take a glance at the mysterious magic circles or the cold alchemy facilities, and he did not even greet the arcanists on-site. Instead, he directly looked out of the window.

The incredible darkness and endless deep space had instantly struck Ali's mind.

Against the darkness, the white light spots were pure. They were not shining, but just hanging there quietly, as if nothing in the past millions of years ever changed them.

He turned to look down, and there were the same boundless darkness and pure stars. The students were deeply shocked by the loneliness and the realization of their own insignificance.

Was this cosmos?

Nothing mattered when compared to it...

Layria walked to her friends and handed them the journal, "Our teacher has found positive electrons! From cosmic rays!"

"That's awesome!" Annick said very cheerfully.

Katrina also had a big smile on her face. "There will be more observatories in the future as more people will want to use them!"

"Heidi, you don't want to take a look at it?" Layria asked.

Heidi muttered, "The experiment is in the key stage... I believe that Mr. Evans has actually founded positive electrons a long time ago, or he wouldn't all of a sudden want to set up a cosmic observatory... Ahh!"

However, her muttering was cut off by her shout.

The rest of them turned around and asked in surprise, “What is it?”

“A new track... different from that of an electron or a proton...”
Heidi muttered in a low voice while calculating fast in her mind.

Then she sprang up from her seat and exclaimed, “Its mass is more than two hundred times heavier than that of an electron! It’s a new particle! Very likely to be the one predicted by Her Excellency Hathaway!”

“What? A new particle?!” They were all very surprised.

Ali looked at them with confusion. He saw the boundless cosmic, the pure stars, and Heidi, whose hands were still on the alchemy device.

New particle?

Why wasn’t it mentioned in the textbooks?

Did he just witness a historic moment?

.....

COMMENT

Lucien could see better now. But then the blinding glare came at him.

Even though Lucien had cast the special spell to protect his eyes, he still could not help squinting. A huge fireball was burning in the air. Although Lucien had the protection from Space Staff and he was still far away from the fireball, the incredible and extremely high temperature was still formidable.

The fireball looked a bit blurry and distant.

Lucien closed his eyes and gently sighed.

“Sun...”

The space and time around him suddenly started to change, and it began to project a starry sky.

Chapter 767: Two Suns in the Sky

Lucien's eyes closed tight, and he could feel the arrival of the boundless cosmos. The starry sky that was so almighty and detached looked down upon everything coldly from above.

The projection of the starry sky cast in Lucien's half-substantialized cognitive world made the entire cognitive world more and more clear, like a real one. Meanwhile, the cosmos had also set Lucien's Host Star of Destiny ablaze. The host star was now going through a series of fusion reactions like a real star. The black hole was sucking in some of the power to form the new balance.

The electron cloud drifting in the air, the charged particles exchanging virtual photons, and the electromagnetic force in the space had also become much more real.

In the strange boom, Lucien's cognitive world was further substantializing and transforming to the top legendary status.

At this time, Lucien was supposed to carefully observe what was going on in his cognitive world. However, he suddenly opened his eyes.

He wanted to see the true world, the world that offered all the feedback but was never discovered by anyone.

If any legendary sorcerers or knights had known what Lucien just did, they would have made a mockery of Lucien. Ever since the most powerful men in the world first knew the existence of this feedback from the true world, they had tried everything they could to find it and to master it, since it would, for sure, contain the deepest and ultimate truth as well as the secrets of the world. However, none of them did it, no matter if it was those top legends or even Thanos and Viken. None of them managed to capture the existence of the real cosmos in the real world. The only thing they could find was the powerful feedback.

Therefore, it was believed that only gods could touch the secret.

When Lucien opened his eyes, he saw that something was blocking the blinding light. Then, the clear vision of a starry cosmos appeared around him. However, it was beyond his touch!

The “real world” had revealed itself right in front of Lucien for the first time! No one ever did this before!

If it had been another legendary and demigod standing here, they would have been totally shocked. However, as if he had expected this, there was a faint smile on Lucien’s face.

He reached forward with his right hand and the cosmos suddenly started responding. Galaxies rapidly flashed backward until Lucien’s hand finally touched the familiar blue planet, behind which the huge fireball was burning indistinctly.

Boom!

The substantializing process had been boosted, and Lucien’s Host Star of Destiny suddenly burst out the dazzling and mighty glare. The glare had partially blended into the starry sky to enhance the glory of the big fireball!

Boom!

The blue planet had disappeared. The big fireball had occupied the entire “real cosmos”. It looked so huge and bright with its tremendous momentum, but at the same time, it also looked very illusory!

.....

After coming back to Atom Institution from the observatory, Ali, Jane, and Anderson had always been absent-minded. They were deeply shocked by the cosmos and the discovery of the new particle and thus realized the almighty power of nature in person. Now they were totally in awe of arcana as it could explore the deepest secret of the starry sky.

Ali had stopped peeking at Jane. Instead, his eyes had lost their focus as his mind was lost in his many thoughts. Meanwhile, the next group of students was walking toward the transmission magic circle.

Suddenly, he felt that the light coming in from the window somehow had become much brighter. He looked up.

The autumn sky was high and blue, but in the sky, there were two bright suns.

“Two... suns?”

Ali murmured out of confusion, but then, he suddenly realized what it meant.

“Look! Two suns!” Ali’s voice suddenly became sharp.

All the people in the institution turned to look at him, having no idea what he was talking about, although they did understand every single word Ali said.

“Someone’s cognitive world has half substantialized?” Chelly suddenly came up with the possibility. She was dressed like a married lady.

Lazar quickly walked to the window and shook his head.

“Impossible... There are no other changes in the environment. No thunder, no lightning... but two suns...”

His voice suddenly became very low. He stared at the sky, at the two suns.

No matter if it was the half-substantialization or substantialization of one’s cognitive world, according to all the records, they could only change the environment within a couple of hundred meters. The dimension discovered before was a very rare exception since almost everyone over the world saw it. However, the two suns in the sky were almost identical. It was impossible to be something unusual within the atmosphere!

If it was because something was going on just beside the sun, then the influence range was just too wide!

Lazar was definitely much more trustworthy than Ali. The rest of them had all flowed to the window and let out a gasp. There were indeed two suns in the sky!

“What is going on...?” Ali asked the famous arcanists around confusedly.

Lazar, Jerome, and the rest of the arcanists all remained silent.

At this time, they could finally tell the difference between the two suns. The one on the left was dazzlingly bright, giving out light and heat. The one on the right, however, was an illusion, but a very real illusion.

“Something big happened...” Alfalia murmured. She had never seen this before even in the textbooks.

The two suns in the sky brought no change to the world other than the brighter sunlight. Although more and more people had started noticing the wonder, no one knew what was going on.

.....

In Lance, the Holy City.

Viken, the pope, was listening to Melmax’s report and thinking about how to stop Maltimus. At this time, the host star of destiny in his soul suddenly flashed a bit. In the next second, he had blinked to the window and looked up.

In the early morning sky, two big fireballs were rising, dyeing the entire sky orange!

“This is...”

Even for someone as profound as Viken, he had never seen anything like this. For a moment, he had no idea what it was, until he picked up his platinum staff.

“Lucien Evans has found the sun? But he hasn’t studied Blue Gate...”

Viken knew that Lucien had found the sun and got the feedback from the “real world”. What was going on in the sky came from the top legendary power that Lucien just gained. However, Viken could not help but frown. “But two suns... Impossible...”

Normally, it should be a really bright star beside the sun. The light of the star should be easily covered by the sunlight.

At the moment, Viken felt both excited about the discovery of the sun but also the apprehension from the unknown.

.....

In Observer’s Castle, the Dark Mountain Range.

Holding the wine glass, Rhine was waiting for a descendant’s visit. Suddenly, he spread out his big bat wings and filled the entire hall.

In space, an illusion moon quickly rose in the air and transformed into a blond young girl. Her red eyes looked out of the window. In the darkness, the radiance of the silver moon had been overwhelmed by the dazzling sunlight.

Rhine stopped his movement. The glass wine pressed against his lips.

Alterna stared at the sun until it slowly disappeared. When the night sky resumed, Alterna said seriously, “He has found the sun.”

“I wonder if he can explain this.” Rhine smiled.

Neither Alterna nor Rhine looked very surprised.

After a while, Alterna sighed. “But it was just too big...”

.....

In the Blue Ocean, Maltimus was sitting on his throne, holding the gold trident in his hand. Suddenly, he looked up at the sky through the body of seawater, and a sarcastic-looking smile appeared on his face.

But soon, the smile was replaced by a shocked expression.

.....

On the Pearl Islands.

Douglas was still studying his project using alchemical items to replace space jump in order to reach the sun. Suddenly, his eyes opened big when he felt that a starry sky just appeared around him, which had caused a series of great changes in his cognitive world.

After a while, his cognitive world was fully substantialized. His cognitive world had just gained some direct connection to the real cosmos.

Douglas was a bit confused but also amused. He was just sitting in his place, but all of a sudden, the feedback from the real world had come to him.

It was basically a million arcana credits hitting him while he was just sitting on his couch.

However, he quickly figured this out. Douglas knew that his many theories were built upon the assumption that those planets and stars did exist. Therefore, the sudden change must have come from someone's discovery of the planets. Was it Lucien?

So far, only Lucien and Douglas himself were still exploring planets.

Douglas then immediately asked Brook to take over the shift for him and headed for the Atomic Universe.

He had so many questions to ask Lucien in person.

.....

The "real world" had disappeared. Lucien squinted at the huge fireball from a distance and thought to himself out of pity, It was almost there. Something that hasn't been proved. Or I could've...

Meanwhile, the two host stars of destiny started spinning around each other and affecting each other. His body suddenly went illusionary and ethereal, but he recovered within a second.

It turned out that this transformation could, in fact, be achieved by an individual, and the belief that only a primeval devil could do so had been proven wrong. Lucien put on an ironic smile, which was quite rare. He was now a real top legendary, and he had mastered the method of status transformation, which differed from that of Viken. It was a magic model integrated into his soul, like blood power.

Chapter 768: Douglas Decision

Chapter 768: Douglas' Decision

Babel, in the Atomic Universe.

A cluster of dazzling light flew out of the space-time gate. Like a water ball rippling, it instantly lit up the magic circle, and the complicated lines and patterns in the air were now shimmering.

Meanwhile, the gate no longer looked gray and pale. Instead, it was now covered with a layer of dreamlike gloss.

The layer of light, which was like rubber, then protruded all of a sudden. A vague figure walked out. As the figure was becoming more and more clear, it turned out to be Lucien.

As soon as Lucien stepped out of the gate, its gloss was instantly taken off, and the gate collapsed to the ground into ashes. One by one, the shining lines in the air had also broken and became a pile of trash.

At this time, Lucien finally realized that Natasha was not the only one standing in the hall waiting for his return. The president was also waiting. Douglas looked quite anxious, which was rare for him, but not in a bad way. The anxiety was from his eagerness to find the answer.

However, Lucien was not surprised by Douglas' presence at all. After what he just did, it would have been more perplexing if the president had not been here.

As for Natasha, her waiting was out of her care for Lucien and her own curiosity.

“How did you find it?” asked Douglas straightforwardly.

Natasha opened her mouth, but she did not want to cut Douglas off. She also had lots of questions to ask, like how far the sun was and how it existed. Compared to Douglas, she had plenty of chances to ask.

Lucien smiled, as it was so rare to see Douglas being so solicitous that he had forgotten the most immediate thing that he should have done after reaching top legendary. It looked just like a Fernando was living within him.

“A second, please,” Lucien said calmly.

A starry sky then unfolded behind Lucien, where a huge fireball was burning. The stars surrounding the big fireball formed the many mysterious patterns, while behind the fireball, there was a cluster of deepest darkness.

Against the sky, there were protons and neutrons forming into atomic nuclei. From time to time, they would drift, and sometimes, they would collapse. Together with the electrons, they formed elements. In the different sections where the elements gathered, there were different beautiful wonders, like the extremely cold liquid and crystals.

Light was flowing among the charged matters, and it was divided into portions, which reflected the nature of electromagnetic force, and it joined the “wind power” in the illusionary space harmoniously.

The edges of the entire world bent slightly, and beyond the edges, it seemed that there was something else that was connected to them, which enabled the changes in the cognitive world to affect the material world.

Seeing that, Douglas realized what he had forgotten, and he was a bit amused by himself. How could he forget this? After reaching the top legendary level, one should reflect the changes in his or her cognitive world to one’s own demiplane as soon as possible to make the demiplane resemble the dimension better.

As soon as Lucien unfolded his cognitive world, Babel tower started shaking fiercely, and the shaking was from the planet it was on.

The stars in the dark cosmos in the dimension suddenly burst out splendid light and became very real. And the star, which resembled the sun, was now on fire, and the intimidating and extreme temperature was also close to that of the real sun.

When the projection of Lucien's cognitive world disappeared, Douglas finally asked, "How did you do this...?"

Lucien answered briefly, "Since it seems that our planet was insulated by something like a 'fog', the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean would go around and around. When we fly out of the atmosphere, we lose the observation of the planet at some point until we enter the universe. After that, we have to consider two things. One, does light also bend when casting through the atmosphere? Second, are other planets also being 'trapped'?

"... So I combined the data obtained from the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean and an idea I once had, and thus revised the calculation of the coordinate of the sun. In the end, I finally found it..." said Lucien after a short pause.

"Long time ago, we did think of the possibility that the atmosphere might have changed the transmission of light and considered it a possible reason why we could not find the planets. However, after so many years, we still haven't got a full idea about the secrets of the Boundless Ocean and the 'fog'," said Douglas.

The previous generations of arcanists were no fools. What Lucien just said had already been put forward years ago. However, they all failed to find the problems among the data and records. If it had been as easy as Lucien's narration, those arcanists would have found the sun a dozen hundred years ago!

Therefore, the key question Douglas had to ask was how Lucien managed to find the problem in the data and figured out the accurate coordinate.

Lucien's right hand climbed onto his chin and rubbed it. He responded with some hesitation, "I can't be very clear right now. I think the 'fog' and the abnormality of the Boundless Ocean should both have something to do with the unusual abnormality in the space."

Seeing Lucien's unconscious movement, Natasha knew that Lucien was not hiding anything. Instead, his mind was indeed filled with questions.

"Something unusual in space... The bending of space shows gravity, and the gravity there does look strange... but..." Douglas murmured.

But he suddenly realized why Lucien was being so ambiguous. "You're afraid my head is going to explode? It's something contradictory to the general theory of relativity?"

Lucien rubbed his forehead out of a bit of embarrassment. "...Yes, there are some conflicts between the general theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. I'm more on the side of the latter, but I can't be sure that I'm a hundred percent correct. My bold guess might mislead you, sir. So I cannot just burst out my own thinking recklessly."

"You're now sure about it. So I'd like to listen to it as I won't let something uncertain shake my cognitive world," said Douglas with a smile. "If you don't want to be very clear, you can give me some hint, and I'll explore it on my own. During the process, I can keep adjusting myself. So even if the final result does go against the general theory of relativity, my cognitive world wouldn't collapse."

Lucien nodded slightly. "A long time ago, I started thinking about why the planets can't be spotted, but I was totally clueless until I opened the chamber and saw the mysteries."

"The mysteries of immortality?" Douglas and Natasha both asked at the same time. They had never expected that this would have anything to do with the mysteries of immortality.

Lucien said seriously, "The missing of planets, the strange things about the atmosphere and the ocean, the gravity-less stars in Stars' Grave, Furnace of Souls, and even the 'real world'... They are all around the same question, so we have to see them all together."

"Make sense," Douglas agreed, but he soon got confused again. "If it's like what you said, then the atmosphere should share the same peculiarity with the ocean, as their surroundings are not different by nature. But why when we were heading for the atmosphere, there was nothing preventing us from flying into the cosmos, yet when we were in the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean, we couldn't go any further?"

Lucien answered seriously, "This is why I'm confused as well. I've built up a special math model for it, but it turned out that it was almost impossible for the math model to form naturally, although it did go into the strange dimension."

"Impossible to form naturally... You're saying... someone did it?" Douglas also became very serious.

Natasha also looked very astonished for a moment as her big silver-purple eyes opened big. Lucien's words might mean something very terrible.

"Possibly. There might be someone really, really powerful there that we don't know, who created the peculiarity deep in the ocean, but this is very unlikely because there's no point, as we can always find planets with the data. Therefore, I suspect that it has something to do with the age of mythology. After all, we know very little about the age. The only one," said Lucien.

The last time when Lucien risked his life entering the Temple of Spirits, he saw a library where lots of books from the age of mythology were stored there. However, at that time, he did not have enough time to copy them, and when he came back, the spirits had removed them.

Douglas nodded slightly. "Possible. Perhaps it's preventing Maltimus and the abyss from coming to the main material world."

"After the age of mythology, Silver Moon has also started pulling away from influencing the 'ground'," said Lucien. Then he took a deep breath and said, "To verify my guess, I'll visit the Dark Mountain Range soon to see Mr. Rhine and see what he could get from the 'Silver Moon'."

"Make sure you're ready," Douglas agreed. "If the 'Silver Moon' doesn't want to say anything, we'll go back to the library in the temple again."

Douglas smiled. "Give me the coordinate of the sun so that I can see it with my own eyes. After that, I'll get ready to reach the demigod level."

"Demigod?!" Both Lucien and Natasha were slightly shocked. Obviously, Lucien did not agree with Douglas' plan.

"My cognitive world is basically complete once planets are found, and from my previous studies, I've figured out how to transform my status and reach the level of demigod," said Douglas with the same facial expression. "I'll replace the power of feelings with my own cognitive world and replace the power of faith with the corresponding real environment. I will overlap them and combine them together. In this way, I should be able to achieve the transformation and open the gate to become a demigod."

Lucien knew that this was the most orthodox path for a sorcerer to become a demigod, but he insisted, "But sir, we can wait until we figure out why this method works and what a demigod is. We can probably find the answers within decades."

"I know your confidence, but we can wait no more. Maltimus' arrival and Viken's power are big threats to the Congress. If the Congress can't produce a demigod in the upcoming five years, we'll all be in trouble. I'm not sure if I can do this, but I'll still give it a shot." Douglas smiled, as if it were someone else's business.

"But..." Lucien kept on trying.

Douglas stopped him. "If you come up with a better method, I can still improve my foundation after becoming a demigod, and also..."

He looked out at the universe outside and said in the peaceful tone, "Also to me, the most intriguing thing in this world is to solve its mysteries one by one. The power that comes with it is just a complimentary gift.

COMMENT

“Even if I’ll forever stop at the demigod level, I’ll never regret it as I will have done my contribution to figuring out the truth of the world. I think I’ll be more than happy.”

“Sir...” Lucien did not know what to say.

Chapter 769: The Birth of a Custom

The square near the Rose Boulevard was jam-packed with people after the lights were on.

It was the habit of many citizens of Rentato to take a walk to the nearest square after dinner and wait for “Arcana Voice”. However, after the promotion of offering a magic radio with enough subscriptions, it was no longer as crowded as before. But of course, the people here were not few at all in terms of absolute number.

“Hello, everyone. This is FM 592.6M, ‘Arcana Voice’. I am your old friend, Nightingale. Thank you for listening to our program...” As the sweet voice that sounded like their family member came out of the trumpet, all the audience focused their attention and stopped talking with their partners. Also, after the live stream last time, they were already able to picture Ms. Nightingale’s look with her voice.

After many programs, “Magic Room”, a session that people couldn’t quite follow but were very interested in, started.

“Dear audience, I’ll teach you how to resist the shallow hypnotization spells... Zi. Zi. Zi...” Before the magnetic male voice finished his sentence, shrilling noises came out of the loudspeaker. Then, the noises were replaced by messy sounds of electricity. However, everything was back to normal soon, except that the low, magnetic male voice went back to Nightingale’s sweet but exciting voice.

“Dear audience, dear audience, this is ‘Arcana Voice’. Now, I would like to announce a piece of breaking news...”

“What’s going on?” The audience looked at each other in bewilderment. They had experienced signal interruptions before, but it had never been restored so quickly, and even the program had been changed!

Breaking news?

That was something that they had never been through. Therefore, they could barely realize what was going on.

In the noble villas, the civil houses, and the schools, the members of the audience who were listening to “Arcana Voice” looked similar. They had no idea what had happened that called for a piece of breaking news.

...

Inside the Atom Institution, after Layria, who brought the students up above, told Heidi and Annick about the unusual phenomenon of two suns in the sky, they decided to return to the ground by paying the cost themselves so that they could know what had happened as soon as possible.

It was both because of their curiosity and because they hoped to brace for the worst situations as quickly as possible. After all, if they stayed in space, they probably couldn’t return if anything happened on the ground. After the energy ran out, they would become floating corpses in space. For similar reasons, most of the researchers who were unmarried did not leave the Allyn magic tower.

“Heidi, you’ve discovered a new particle?” The discussion about the two suns had been going on for a whole afternoon and a dinner. So, Layria couldn’t help but change the subject, asking about Heidi’s discovery.

Looking at her friends’ sparkling eyes, Heidi smiled in satisfaction. “After repetitive confirmation, it’s a new particle that is different from any known particles. Its mass is about two hundred times that of electrons, and it is very fast.”

“A new particle? Does the number of fundamental particles not agree with the principle of simplicity?” Many arcanists believed in the philosophy that the more fundamental, the more simplistic, just like the amazing “symmetry” that existed everywhere. Rock took off his black top hat and asked in confusion.

“We can only respect the experiment results for now. Maybe, fundamental principles are not fundamental?” Heidi spoke while she looked at the clock on the wall of the laboratory. She exclaimed, "It's the time for Arcana Voice!"

She seemed to prefer Arcana Voice to News of the World.

Rock said with mixed feelings, "Possibly. Right, did you receive feedback from the truth of the world after the discovery of the new particle?"

"Very abundant feedback." Having always been straightforward, Heidi replied with a brilliant smile.

"Hehe. Heidi, haven't you been complaining that you never won the prizes like the Holm Crown Prize? The discovery of the new particle will probably fulfill your wish." Katrina was happy for her friend.

Heidi shook her head and said, not too expectantly, "I don't think the discovery of a new particle deserves any, unless it's a very important one, like what Ms. Hathaway predicted, or if the particle is discovered through a new approach. I'd better wait for the breakthrough in artificial intelligence."

"Is it not the particle that Ms. Hathaway predicted?" Both Annick and Katrina were surprised. From the properties measured so far, the new particle was quite similar to the meson that Ms. Hathaway predicted.

Heidi sniffed. "We can only know the result by testing if it participates in the strong interaction. For now, we can only assume that it is not."

She was certainly not entirely unaffected after her friends won the highest prizes in different fields, but it did not stop her from making the rational choice. She was more and more confident about the future of artificial intelligence, and she believed that she would win a certain highest prize, and maybe even an Evans Prize in Arcana, for that.

In the middle of their discussion, weird noises came out of the magic radio and caught their attention.

"Dear audience, dear audience, this is 'Arcana Voice'. Now, I would like to announce a piece of breaking news...”

Heidi and her friends immediately became solemn after Nightingale’s voice came out. The only thing that deserved such interruption could be the special phenomenon of two suns during the day!

The whole Atom Institution fell into silence, and a sweet voice spread out of the magic radio.

“According to the announcement given by the Highest Council, at 11:37 a.m. today, Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans, a grand arcanist, a legendary sorcerer, and a member of the Highest Council, discovered the sun at the coordinates of... in the standard universe location, proving the existence of planets and stars. It raised unprecedented feedback from the truth of the world and resulted in the unusual phenomenon of two suns in the sky.

“Dear audience who witnessed the phenomenon, there is no need to panic. This is not the end of the world. On the very contrary, it marks the most solid first step for intelligent creatures to explore the universe. We will no longer be bothered by whether or not planets exist.

“Although Mr. Evans must’ve garnered abundant returns, they cannot compare to the great significance of his discovery for all the intelligent creatures and the confirmation of the existence of planets for all the arcanists. This is a small step for Mr. Evans, but this is also a great leap for all the intelligent creatures. It’s a major monument of our exploration in the world and the universe...”

The announcement used all sorts of words of compliment, but Heidi did not feel that it was exaggerated at all. They would’ve been thrilled and offered their sincere congratulation even if it were any other legendary sorcerer who discovered it. Those who did not study arcana and never read the history of the Congress of Magic would never know how important and significant the discovery was for the arcanists.

“It’s about time. The sun has been hiding for so long...” Alfalia suddenly said with mixed feelings. It had been so long that some arcanists suspected that they were not in a real world but a “laboratory” of a certain almighty god.

Heidi and Annick looked out of the window. It was pitch dark outside except for the lights from the lamps down below. However, the darkness was gone in their eyes, and the whole world had been illuminated.

The heavy darkness that had covered magic since the Magic Empire was finally driven away by the sun at this moment!

Heidi stood up in excitement, as if she were trying to do something, but she eventually got scared and stopped.

“Heidi, what do you want?” Layria held back her shiver and asked in curiosity.

Heidi raised her arms. “I want to cheer. I want to launch a fireball at the sky. The explosion will be the horn of our triumph!”

“I want that too.” Sprint, who had always been a rogue, apparently loved the idea, but Allyn had strict regulations.

Annick, who was relatively rational, suddenly realized that, if Allyn did not have so many regulations, it was possible that many gigantic fireballs would have been shot at the sky, and fire would be spluttering out everywhere. Sorcerers tended to express their happiness through the most violent approaches in their excitement, and what they were best at was certain magic.

“What a splendid view it would’ve been...”

...

In the square, in the villas, in the houses, and in the schools, all the listeners were stunned by Nightingale’s announcement.

The Church had been attacking the sorcerers because they couldn’t find any planets to prove the correctness of their celestial bodies’ motion system and their gravity theory. Some clerics preached that the Lord covered the space because of their blasphemy, preventing them from seeing the truth of the world. Some mocked that their arcana studies were buildings without foundations and would collapse at any moment.

Although arcana had been proven correct one step after another, winning the support of most of the people of the four countries on this side of the Storm Strait and filling them with curiosity and awe in arcana, those people would never be entirely convinced until the stars in the sky were discovered.

After the South Church was exiled, the people who acknowledged the reign of the Congress of Magic began to hope for the discovery of planets as desperately as the arcanists did, trying to prove that it was not a punishment of the Lord and that their betrayal was not blasphemy.

However, now that the good news came and hit their mind just like that, they felt that they were caught in a dream.

“Great!”

A roar broke the silence. An elegant-looking gentleman took off his black top hat in excitement and threw it high into the sky, as if he could not find another way to unleash his excitement.

After the silence was broken, exclamations burst out like a tsunami. Under the influence of the first gentleman, the people all took off their hats and tossed it into the sky.

Wearing hats was a fashion in Rentato. So, the whole sky was occupied with hats. Some were the black top hats, some were round, some were soft, some were the broad-edged hats with beautiful ribbons, some were convenient hats embedded with feathers and flowers, and some carried hazy veils...

“Great!”

Looking at the thrown hats and hearing the tide of roars, a reporter from “Rentato Weekly” wrote subconsciously, “Perhaps, from today onward, there will be a new custom in the kingdom for celebrations in the kingdom, which is hat-throwing.”

All kinds of hats fell like rain.

Chapter 770: Revisit

Chapter 770: Revisit

Inside the Atom Institution, Annick, who had more or less calmed down after hearing the exclamations that were vaguely coming from all directions, hurried to switch the magic radio to the channel of “News of the World”. He believed that the channel, whose target listeners were arcanists, would have more detailed reports, including how his teacher adjusted the location of the sun.

They did not directly ask Lucien because Butler Leo told them that their teacher had closed the top floor of his magic tower and probably wouldn’t open it until a long time later. They had been trying to reach out to him to report Heidi’s discovery of new particles ever since they returned to Allyn from the cosmic observatory.

“... According to the report of Mr. Evans, he discovered the weird deviation of light and the unusualness of space when he conducted the following experiments, and he adjusted the standard coordinates of the sun according to his conclusion...” “Lark” Samantha, as Annick predicted, read Lucien’s report in detail and interpreted the whole process so that the senior-rank sorcerers could redo the experiment and the middle-rank sorcerers could understand the theoretical foundation of the adjustment of the solar coordinates.

The report undoubtedly convinced every arcanist who listened to it that Mr. Evans had indeed found the sun with reasons. Otherwise, his report wouldn’t have been so detailed and copyable. Reproducibility was a symbol of arcana!

“... What... What a complicated experiment.” Although her particle collision experiments and her modifications on artificial intelligence were rather complicated themselves, Heidi was still rather stunned, because the experiment was so intricate that no common arcanists could have devised it.

Even Sprint, who had always been proud and confident, had to admit in a low voice, “I’m afraid that only our teacher could’ve designed such a complicated but effective experiment...” He, for one, couldn’t have achieved it.

Despite his fundamental disagreement with Lucien regarding the observer effect, Annick still admired his teacher, who was the pioneer of many new domains, the proposer of many revolutionary theories, and the main booster of the great development of arcana studies and social development in the past decade. There was still a major gap between them.

“Yes, I don’t think that there can be more than ten experts who have such amazing ideas and such a solid arcana foundation. However, I still think that it is too complicated. Perhaps our teacher partly counted on luck, or perhaps he was doing some other experiments...” Hesitating, he proposed his guess.

Such a guess did not raise the anger of Heidi, Katrina, or other people. Having been engaged in arcana and magic studies for a long time, they knew very well that certain discoveries needed a bit of luck. For example, back when they were in the cosmic observatory, the experiments that everybody devised were identical, but Heidi discovered the new particle ahead of everybody else. The reason was that she made a minor mistake during the design... But of course, only the arcanists who had been doing experiments for a long time with a solid knowledge foundation could have grasped the gift of the goddess of fortune.

“In any case, the sun has finally been discovered! The chronicle of magic has been turned to a new page!” Heidi declared; her eyes glittering.

...

On the thirty-first floor of the Allyn magic tower, all the arcanists in the Sky Radio Station listened to Samantha’s broadcast in excitement. Louise’s news was for the ordinary people and contained nothing that they did not know.

Also, different from before, Samantha was no longer as nonchalant as usual when she read the report. The insuppressible smile on her face suggested her good mood and quite surprised the arcanists who were used to her previous style.

For years, the continual defeat of determinism had made most arcanists of the school of astrology, but they had to gradually change their paradigm slowly. So, they had always been rather sad. Many poets of Rentato had praised them for their excellent poetic vibe and thought that they deserved to be the arcanists who studied space. However, the discovery of the sun ignited the long-buried passion in their hearts, which burnt up all their miseries and melancholy. At least for now, they were delighted and exalted from the bottom of their hearts.

The puzzle that bothered the school of astrology for thousands of years had been solved today!

After reading the last word, Samantha put down the document in her hand and hinted to the host of the next program to begin with a smile. Then, she left her seat, walked out of the room, and took a deep breath of the refreshing air at night.

“I thought that the discovery of positive electrons was shocking enough. I did not expect that Mr. Evans also found the sun.” A few arcanists who were familiar with her joined her.

Looking at the cold, dreamy moon in the sky, Samantha said with a tone of delight, “If it weren’t for this... this grand arcanist, I’m afraid that nobody could’ve devised such a complicated and unimaginable experiment. This is perhaps the kindness of the goddess of fortune and her acknowledgment for the school of astrology’s thousands of years of pursuit. That’s why she gave us him.”

Although no names were mentioned, all the arcanists around knew that she was referring to “Atom Controller” Mr. Evans and that she was not saying “grand arcanist” at first but “monster”.

It was one of the nicknames for Lucien that many arcanists used in private because most of his achievements couldn’t have been accomplished by any other arcanists in their entire life. However, the guy had been proposing one every once in a while. What could possibly be a monster if he wasn't?

It was for that reason that they did not suspect why Lucien could've devised the unbelievably complicated experiment. He was the synonym of a miracle.

"From today on, the school of astrology will no longer be an ungrounded school anymore..." Another astrology arcanist observed with mixed feelings.

For the arcanists of the school of astrology, they wouldn't suspect the foundation of their prophecies just because planets were real material existences, because the Host Stars of Destiny were indeed right there.

Samantha nodded. "In the next, the focus of our studies will be divided into two directions. The first is to study the black holes, the stars, and the star systems, in order to unravel the mysteries of the real universe, search for its origin, and predict its future development. The other is to explore the connection between the real universe and the host stars, in order to figure out why the operation of stars affects our fate."

"That's right." The eyes of the first arcanist seemed to be burning with fire. Just because something went wrong with determinism did not mean that astrology was dead!

Staring at the silver moon out of the window, Samantha thought to herself. "As a matter of fact, the background that the Church made up for him suits him well. He's both an angel and a devil..."

...

Inside the Theater of Destruction, Oliver did not listen to the broadcast but perused Lucien's report carefully.

He pushed his gold-edged glasses and frowned. "This experiment is too complicated to be devised. It's more like a product of inferring the process after you have known the result. Is this Lucien's reverse engineering?"

As a grand arcanist who had a profound understanding of the universe and who explored the space many times, he noticed something wrong after the first glance. However, he thought that it was because Lucien accidentally got a magic model through the feedback when he researched other things before he reverse-engineered the magic model.

Inside Thunder Hell, on the other hand, Fernando threw the report in his hands onto the table and roared, "This boy must've devised the experiment after he discovered the sun! Don't take me for an idiot!"

With his understanding of Lucien, he had every reason to believe that Lucien must've decided the location of the sun according to other knowledge. Chances were that he even had complete theoretical supports.

After throwing away the report, Fernando saw the words on the latter pages of the report, which were in a different format from the first half. So, he picked up the report again and read carefully.

"It can only be published after verification?" Fernando repeated in a low voice. The few pieces of papers contained a complete record of Lucien and Douglas' conversation, which had only been provided to Fernando and Hathaway, two trustworthy grand arcanists.

Fernando thought for a long time and tried to solve the puzzle in Lucien's words, but he barely made any progress due to the lack of files.

"Why do you give me a record? Just come here and talk to me!" Fernando snorted in fury and activated electromagnetism messaging.

After background noises of electric currents, Fernando heard Natasha's voice.

"Lucien has gone to the Dark Mountain Range?" Fernando repeated what Natasha said and cursed, "This boy is really a fast runner!"

...

The sunlight was blocked by the tall trees. Together with the dangerous space gaps in midair and on the ground, the whole mountain seemed to be forever covered in darkness, giving a devastating and ominous feeling.

It was not Lucien's first trip to the Dark Mountain Range, but he still had no good feelings about this place that reeked of decay and corruption. However, he was not as paranoid, fearing that he might run into any powerful dark creatures, as he used to be in his previous visits. Unknown to him, it was those dark creatures who were so intimidated that they only wanted to keep as far away from this "monster" as possible.

The cold moonlight illuminated the cliff, donning it in a silver gauze. However, the lonely castle standing at the edge of the cliff was nowhere to be seen.

"The Observer's Castle has been moved away?" Lucien looked around in confusion. The forest, which was shattered into a gigantic pit, during the attack of Prince Dracula had been filled up by rainwater and turned into a peaceful lake that was rippling under the moonlight. The reflection of moonlight in the lake was beautiful and agreed with the landscape around. It shouldn't have made Rhine feel that the place lost the grace of nobles and forced him to move his house away.

"What exactly is the reason?" Lucien brought out his crystal ball and began his prophecy, and the result was rather ambiguous, which was within his expectation. It was not an easy thing to predict the whereabouts of Rhine who was supported by the power of the Silver Moon.

Therefore, Lucien took back his crystal ball and planned to ask a local of this place who lived nearby in order to empower his prophecy.

"Well, there's a dark castle over there..." Lucien spread out his spiritual power and discovered intelligent creatures. He blinked and disappeared from where he was.

Chapter 771: Daily Life of the Dark Mountain Range

The castle of the Magic Empire seemed to be enshrouded in the dark fog. Terrifying roars of beasts were coming out, mixed with devastating and miserable moans.

If it were any other places, such a situation would've caused all kinds of horror stories. The kids would've been too scared to cry at night, the clerics or the battle sorcerers would've been attracted to cleanse them, and the adventurers would've come to explore the place. However, in the Dark Mountain Range, it was just a regular situation, and chances were that even more spooky castles were somewhere else.

In a glamorously-decorated room, the carpet from the southern desert of the Gusta Empire lay on the ground, next to the artworks that reflected the passage of time. A big window, which had only gone popular in the recent hundred years, was installed in the room. Everything emanated the air of nobles except for the man and woman on the carpet, who were wearing chain mails that made their action easier and holding longswords in their hands.

Before them stood a thirty-year-old man in a classic robe. His cheek and his body were extremely slim, but his head was much bigger than usual.

The smile on his lips was particularly creepy under the contrast of the dark fog outside. His eyes were filled with passion as he observed the man and the woman greedily. It seemed that he could barely control his desire.

“Both the mind and the body are so delicious. My trophies this time are really delightful...” The man squatted and extended his slim right hand, touching the lady's pretty face and the man's chiseled cheek as if he were appreciating two pieces of thrilling artwork.

Such a touch immediately raised reactions on the two sleepers, whose eyes rolled as if they were about to wake up. However, the big-headed man showed no wariness at all but kept on touching every inch of their skin.

Half-awake, Sharon sensed something cold and smooth wandering on her face and her body like a wriggling long snake. As someone who loathed such a creature, she was immediately woken up and opened her eyes abruptly.

She saw nothing but a gold ceiling where crystal lamps were descending, as well as a familiar face. The face was much closer to her than she thought.

“Brother Finn, you... my strength!” Sharon called his name subconsciously, but halfway through her sentence, it suddenly occurred to her that she was unable to activate her blood power. Her blood power of the grand knight had vanished!

“Finn, what are you doing?!” The man next to Sharon woke up a few seconds earlier and therefore noticed Finn’s anomaly.

Finn burst into laughter. “Constantine, what do you think I am doing?”

“You captured us here? Why?” As a battle-tested knight, Sharon soon held back her panic and realized that the reason she could not activate her blood power was because of the shackles and manacles on her.

However, her question was still filled with an intense shock. Constantine and she had known Finn ever since they were little kids. They had been going for adventures and growing together. They were knighted by the kingdom and were no strangers to the Dark Mountain Range. This time, Finn announced that he found a relic in one of his solo adventures. He believed that there should be a lot of good stuff inside, so they had come together.

Little did they anticipate that the castle was not as simple as Finn claimed. They were attacked by many powerful dark creatures. After a bloody battle, they encountered a weird mist and passed out. By the time they woke up, they found that Finn had become a stranger.

“Finn has been my slave ever since a long time ago.” “Finn” laughed crazily. All of a sudden, his eyes bulged, as if they would burst out soon. Then, from his nostrils, his mouth, and his ears, tentacles that looked like those of an octopus grew out. His skin became crimson.

“A Mind Stealer!” Constantine screamed in desperation. Such monsters were good at controlling the mind and the relevant spells. Now that they had been captured, their lives would be more miserable than death. It was possible that they would become his loyal slaves while maintaining most of their memories and personalities.

“Finn” shook his head. “I am not a Mind Stealer; I’m just a radiant knight who has the blood power of Mind Stealers. I was heavily wounded and could not heal myself, but the message of relics that I spread out earlier attracted many adventures to come. Their brains became the source of my revival. Finn was one of them. Hehe. Greed is truly the harbinger of doom. For nothing but rumors of treasure, they would come to my castle one group after another.

“By the time I absorb your brains and modify you into my slaves, my wounds will basically be recovered.”

Finn couldn’t have looked more hideous under the black fog when he said that. Sharon shivered even though she was a determined grand knight. It was even scarier than death.

The raging tentacles next to Finn’s head spread out to Sharon and Constantine, aiming directly at their heads.

Unable to make use of their blood powers, Sharon and Constantine could only back off by holding their bodies with their hands, until their backs stuck to the cold wall.

“It’s useless. I did not let you obey me by mind control exactly because I want to enjoy your fear.” “Finn” laughed cockily.

Dark knights and regular knights were basically the same, except that the dark knights often had bloodlines that were associated with demons and devils, which would affect their personality and mental status. If their willpower was not good enough, it was possible that their blood powers would be out of control, turning them into real demons.

Sensing that the cold and smooth tentacles already touched her mouth, even the strongest willpower could not stop Sharon from screaming in desperation and fear.

“NOOOOOOOO!”

“It’s useless. This is the Dark Mountain Range and my castle. There are no living creatures around except my slaves. Nobody can hear you however loudly you scream. Hahahaha.” “Finn” obviously enjoyed Sharon’s fear and stopped touching her, giving them even more desperation.

Dum, dum, dum.

Somebody knocked on the door at a fixed pace, and the three persons in the room were frozen as if someone had hit a pause button.

Who was it? Why would someone knock the door at such a time and place? Finn was the most scared one of all. Nobody knew the neighborhood better than him. There might not be one intelligent creature who had the courtesy of knocking the door passing by in a whole year. Also, this was his own castle, and the “dark fog”, which he asked the elder Mind Stealers to set up for him, was out there!

At this moment, he seemed to be back to his childhood when he pestered his parents to tell him horror stories only to be too scared to go to sleep at night. Whenever he heard any noise, he would have goosebumps all over his body, and coldness would then rise in his heart.

Dum, dum, dum.

The door knock was neither too quiet nor too loud, suggesting the manners of the visitor.

“Who is it?” Finn recalled his tentacles and asked warily. As a radiant knight, he controlled himself well enough to not take action recklessly.

Sharon and Constantine were surprised, panicked, and somewhat hopeful. Even though their miserable fate had been avoided for now, they did not feel relieved. Whoever visited the castle of “Finn” couldn’t have come to specifically save the two of them but was more likely to be the enemy of “Finn”. If they were the experts of the Dark Mountain Range, they wouldn’t go easy on the captives more than Finn would’ve.

“It’s me.” A gentle male voice came from outside. “Since somebody is at home, I’ll let myself in.”

Who the hell is “me”?

Unclear about the stranger’s strength, “Finn” secretly cursed and stayed where he was without opening the door. This place was the core of the castle surrounded by multiple defense circles. It was not so easy to break in!

At this moment, he saw that the doorknob turned on its own, and the door of the room was opened.

No! The eyes of “Finn” bulged even more widely. Where are my extraordinary circles? Where are my defenses? This is the most heavily defended place of my castle, but why does it look like a common hotel room right now? Why are those defenses gone?

“Finn” stood there like a stone statue as the door was completely opened and a handsome man in a double-breasted suit walked in slowly.

“I... I surrender! Don’t kill me!” “Finn” did not need to think to realize the gap between them, so he begged for mercy without any hesitation or self-esteem.

Then, he added, “I’m very close to the tribe of Mind Stealers nearby, and I once visited the Elder Mind. Whatever you need me to do, I can get it done for you.”

He was introducing his supporters so that the stranger wouldn’t think too little of him.

Lucien was amused. "I'm only here to ask directions. There's no need to be so serious."

If he couldn't find any information, he would have to go to the King of Nightmare.

"To ask directions..." "Finn" felt that he was about to vomit blood.

Suddenly, clings echoed nonstop as Sharon and Constantine's manacles and shackles broke off one after another, but there were no unusual waves in the whole room at all.

This... This is even more unbelievable than the Elimination blood power... "Finn" had witnessed many bloodlines, but he had never been through this before. He did not know what the power was at all.

Right when Sharon and Constantine were about to express their gratitude in excitement, Lucien smiled and said, "So, I was meaning to ask why the Observer's Castle nearby was moved away."

.....

Ten minutes later, Lucien left the castle in satisfaction.

According to "Finn", the Observer's Castle was still here yesterday, but the headquarters of the Dark Congress sent a message and called for all the legendary members.

It seemed to be a motion from Danisos, the primordial dragon of time, and Dracula, the vampire prince. They wanted to truly unite the Dark Congress. After all, the Congress of Magic, the Church, the Elven Court, and the Boundless Ocean were more and more powerful nowadays, and the Dark Congress could not remain as divided as before.

It was what "Finn" learned from the Elder Mind. He was rather panicked about the sudden disappearance of the Observer's Castle.

Considering that "Finn" provided satisfactory intelligence, Lucien did not kill him but simply put the shackles and manacles on him. Generally, those tools worked only on people below the senior rank, but Finn hadn't entirely recovered.

As for what would happen later, it would be none of his concerns.

"It can be rather difficult to stop the division and the internal strife of the Dark Congress. Is Dracula willing to contain himself and live in peace with the werewolves?" Lucien shook his head with a smile and planned to join the meeting while he was visiting Mr. Rhine. "I hope that brains will not be flowing everywhere on the ground by then..."

Chapter 772: Confrontation

Chapter 772: Confrontation

After making it through the difficulties, the tiny bit of sunlight finally penetrated through the clouds and the fog in the sky that was full of gaps, as well as the dense crown and the leaves of the tree, leaving gold spots of light on the dark and cold mountain.

Crack.

A thick foot wearing a knight's boot stomped on one of the gold spots, collapsing the rotten leaves piled on it and breaking a branch that was hidden among it.

Nasdell, the werewolf who was following him, thought to himself in surprise, Why did the prince fail to control his foot? Was he considering something important?

It was Dubenal, the werewolf prince, who was walking in the front. He had silver-gray short hair and a brawny body, with arrogance all over his face. One could easily tell that he was a legendary knight who was adept at melee battles.

Dubenal was wearing a strange black armor. It was not as clumsy as the full-body armor, and it did not have the small pieces. It was more like a leather armor that was crafted with the materials and skills for full-body armor. He played with many stones in his hands as he said in an unpredictable tone, "Nasdell, are you surprised?"

"My prince, how did you know?" Nasdell blurted out in shock. The prince was able to tell what was on his mind without resorting to the supernatural powers at all? He truly deserved to be the smartest of werewolves and the most cunning schemer!

Dubenal squinted and looked at the pillars of light that leaked in through the dense leaves. It was so clear and brilliant that he saw grains of dust flying in the air.

"I know that you must be wondering why I did not go to the Valley of Fiery Stone through the Portal to Alternate Realm but decided to walk slowly in the forest.”

The Valley of Fiery Stone was where the Dark Congress was headquartered.

Well, I was only wondering why you failed to control the force of your foot. Wait, I did not find it strange that the prince chose walking at all. It would take us hours before we could reach the Valley of Fiery Stone! I'm still too far away from the wisdom of the prince that is as boundless as an ocean. I did not notice the most obvious anomaly, and the prince had to enlighten me in person!

Nasdell, who always considered himself smart, was stunned at first. Then, he understood the “thoughtfulness” of the prince. Half ashamed and half touched, he couldn’t have admired the prince more. “Yes, my prince. I was indeed surprised.”

Haha. Dubenal chuckled without a sound. Your mind is too easy to read. As the most clever prince of werewolves, I can easily know what you are thinking.

“This meeting is summoned by Danisos and Dracula together. They’re hoping to unite the Dark Congress into a well-organized group, instead of a loose organization where nobody is under any restraint, in which case internal strife might burst out when everybody has their own thoughts.

“It’s a good thing in general, but not necessarily so for us the werewolves, because only I and Sonite are legendary. Compared to the seven primordial dragons and the four first-generation vampires, our legends are too few. Also, Sonite and I have been lingering on level three of legendary, and Danisos and Dracula are both at the peak. If we are united, it’s possible that we will become slaves to those goddamn vampires.”

As his prince analyzed the situation and prospect of werewolves clearly and elaborately, Nasdell’s eyes were shining. He was shocked, worried, and awed. Prince Sonite and the other princes always mocked that his prince had nothing but muscles in his head and that he was too bloodthirsty and brutal to think. However, could they have been so visionary?

There were several princes among the werewolves, but only two were legendary.

Dubenal looked rather solemn. "So, I chose to walk so that I would have time to think about how the werewolves could get away from the dilemma and earn enough benefits from the matter..."

Looking at the tall and strong shadow of his prince, Nasdell felt that his eyes were wet. It was so touching. Even a tough werewolf such as himself could not control his feelings anymore. His prince was truly the conscience and the hope of werewolves. He was their savior...

"Have you come up with any solution, my prince?" Nasdell asked anxiously.

"... It's a complicated and difficult problem that cannot be addressed so easily..." Dubenal's tone became heavy. Then, he suddenly sniffed and said solemnly, "There's a strange smell."

A strange smell? A stranger who has successfully reached such depths of the Dark Mountain Range? Nasdell felt that his wolf hair was rising, but he was reassured after seeing the magnificent back of his prince.

Dubenal suddenly turned around and pounced forward. The enormous wind blew apart the trees, revealing the glistening lake far away.

At the edge of the lake where the wild wind was blowing, time and space rippled, and a shadow slowly popped out. He was wearing a black double-breasted suit and a top hat of the same color, with a delicate silver pocket watch in his right hand. It was Lucien.

Lucien was neither surprised nor panicked but simply nodded his head in approval. The legendary werewolves did have keen senses about the changes in the environment around them. It was even more unbelievable than what the Congress recorded.

Hooooooooo!

Dubenal's silver short hair rose, and his mouth was opened. Sharp fangs protruded out, and his gold eyes were dyed silver.

His body half bent, he was like a longbow that was full of power, with dozens of shadows surrounding him.

His eyes suddenly glittered, and the silver in them was gone.

However, in the dark forest, a cold moon was rising on the top of the trees!

Under the silver moon, the hundred shadows dispersed and lunged at Lucien from all directions. Some slithered on the ground like real shadows, some swooped like black ravens, and some waved their paws like real werewolves.

After the shadows dispersed, Dubenal lost his traces, as if any of the shadows could've been him!

"Luxury Cracking!" Lucien pointed his finger and cast his spell.

Crack, crack, crack, crack.

The shadows were broken without any resistance, melting in the darkness where the moonlight could not reach.

Suddenly, the shadow next to Lucien's feet was enlivened and turned into an exceptionally brawny werewolf, who snatched Lucien's body with its silver, glittering claws!

Dubenal's previous shadows were all disguises, and this was his fatal attack!

Crack.

By the time he saw the beautiful and mysterious pocket watch, he heard a crisp sound. Then, he could not see anything anymore, as if he had been locked in a different world.

Crack.

Something on Dubenal's body was broken. It released silver rays, resonating with the cold moon in the sky.

So, the grayness around faded away, and all the colors returned. However, Dubenal could not see the stranger anymore, although the distant noise of “Mental Fulmination” surged into his ears.

Boom!

Dubenal felt that somebody just threw an alchemical bomb into his head. The gigantic noise made him dizzy. He could barely keep himself balanced. In the meantime, his mind became slow, and his soul trembled uncontrollably.

As a legendary knight, he fell to the ground without considering his image thanks to his natural instincts, before he rolled and jumped in the shadow, dodging the subsequent attacks.

“Hehe.” A gentle chuckle came from the forest nearby. “Dubenal, I never thought that you could look so terrible. If Mr. Evans had intended to kill you, you would not be in one piece right now. Neither ‘Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness’ nor the antimatter spell that heavily wounded the Lord of Hell is something that you can resist.”

As she talked, a little cat whose body was pitch black but whose paws were white crawled out of the forest and lay on the ground lazily, playing with its own belly. Behind the cat, a seemingly weak and sick girl was floating in midair. She had a pretty and delicate face, and she was wearing a long robe in the style of the Magic Empire, which was full of complicated and mysterious patterns.

Just like the cat, the girl had a pair of green and deep eyes. Her honey-colored long hair was curled behind her back.

Although she was trying to cover her air, Lucien, who had reached the peak of legendary, keenly sensed that she was a vampire, and a legendary one. However, she was not any of the vampire princes that he knew, and she did not have the unique vibe of the first-generation vampires.

After making fun of Dubenal, she turned her eyes to Lucien, who was standing not far away. “Mr. Evans, I am Fitia, Prince Dracula’s subordinate. He sensed your battle and asked me to inquire about the reason for your visit to the Valley of Fiery Stone.”

Although she admitted that she was Dracula’s subordinate, her tone lacked respect. She spoke so casually as if he were just a common friend.

“Am I not allowed to come to the Valley of Fiery Stone?” Lucien asked back with a smile. “I’m told that Mr. Rhine is around?”

Fitia? That name sounds familiar...

“The Silver-Eyed Count has always been mysterious, but I’m sure that he will participate in the following meeting,” Fitia told Lucien the things about Rhine with a smile, not obeying Dracula’s order at all.

Hehe!

A sniff echoed. Intense darkness rose and covered the forest. The deterrence of the top legend bent all the dark creatures in the forest.

His face unchanged, Lucien stepped forward, and the time and space around him were immediately changed. Stars in different colors rose from the darkness. The one at the center emitted such strong heat and light, illuminating the darkness like the sun.

Soundlessly, darkness faded and stars were gone. Everything was back to normal. The two top legends had given each other a test remotely.

Mr. Evans, who had just stepped onto the peak of legendary, was as good as Prince Dracula...

The smile on Fitia’s face was gone.

Chapter 773: Weird Invitation

After the pitch dark where one could not see one's own fingers was gone, the forest seemed to have been caught in extreme quietness. Even the slithering bugs below the rotten leaves stopped making any noise.

“Lucien Evans...” The low gnashing sound came over from the dark clouds in the sky and the dispersing smoke, and it was mixed with intense fury.

For Dracula, Lucien represented a memory that was the opposite of pleasant. As a vampire prince who had lived tens of thousands of years, and an expert who ranked among the top ten in the whole world even including demigods, he was actually tricked by a bug who had just reached the sixth circle and suffered a failure that his capabilities did not deserve at all. He could have smashed the guy into pieces just with his intimidating air, but he could only watch the guy summon the Primordial Ancestor and wound him.

Whenever he recalled that, Dracula felt that his face was burning and his heart was full of humiliation. He intended to find an opportunity to kill Lucien, but the guy was devoted to arcana studies and barely went out. When he was indeed out, it was impossible to determine his location through the Host Stars of Destiny. Also, as a vampire prince with self-esteem, Dracula could not do things like lurking around Allyn for a long time. Even if he were to abandon his pride, he might not be able to fool the grand arcanist who watched over Allyn. So, the thing had been postponed until this day.

Of course, for vampires who had long lifespans, it was not so much as procrastination, even less so for Prince Dracula, a top legendary expert who could create a prosperous city in his dream that might easily last a hundred years. For him, ten years could be as short as a dinner. It was not procrastination at all. Who could've thought that Lucien would grow from a sixth-circle sorcerer into a top legend in only ten years and reach the same level as him?

It was a miracle that he had never seen before!

Considering that her “boss” was quite moody, just like everything when he just woke up, Fitia sighed and said courteously, “Mr. Evans, the Valley of Fiery Stone is the headquarters of the Dark Congress, and an important meeting is to be held soon. So, unless invited, no outsiders are allowed to approach. Do you want to fight against the entire Dark Congress?”

She was both polite and reasonable, so Lucien smiled and said, “I’m only here to visit Mr. Rhine. I can wait for him here.”

To be honest, Lucien would rather not enter the Valley of Fiery Stone even if he were invited. The place had a powerful defense and a top legend who was hostile to him. Danisos, the primordial dragon of time, was not particularly fond of human beings either. Entering the place recklessly was like entering the Holy City. His life would be at somebody else’s mercy.

Suddenly, Dubenal, who had gotten back on his feet again, spoke loudly, “What if Mr. Evans is invited? We, the werewolves, invite him to attend the meeting as a witness of the justice and impartiality of the meeting.”

Nasdell was shocked. Why is the prince, who fought a life-and-death battle against Lucien Evans just now, suddenly inviting the legendary sorcerer of the Congress of Magic? Is the moon rising from the west?

For a moment, he felt that his brain was in a mess, and he could not understand what was going on at all. He couldn’t help but realize that although he was smart, he was a clown compared to the wise prince. It was impossible for him to comprehend his mysterious plans!

“Dubenal, do you have any idea what you are doing, you hideous monster whose head is full of hair?” Dracula, who was hiding in the high darkness, said arrogantly and bluntly.

Under normal circumstances, Prince Dracula was a gentleman who appreciated manners, but manners were unneeded when he was faced with a filthy werewolf and a cunning reptile.

Dubenal laughed loudly. "This is the right of werewolves acknowledged by all the members of the Dark Congress..."

"I did not say that I want to attend the meeting," Lucien interrupted him at a leisurely pace.

Crack.

Dubenal's smile was frozen on his face. He said both in shock and in fury, "Then, what are you doing here?"

Why are you here if you haven't come to attend the meeting and disrupt Danisos and Dracula's scheme?

"I'm here to visit Mr. Rhine." Lucien did not know the werewolf prince very well, but according to the files of the Congress, he was a legend whose mind was a simple straight line. So, Lucien repeated himself again.

"Why didn't you say it early?" Dubenal's roar shocked the bizarre-looking birds in the forest, which fluttered out in fear. Aren't such reasons all excuses? Do you not know what excuse is?

"I already said it before..." Lucien couldn't help but rub his forehead. What were you thinking?

Dracula fell into silence while listening to their conversation. Nasdell found it even more impossible to keep up with the pace. Fitia, on the other hand, blinked her green eyes, and her lips were cramping slightly.

Fitia couldn't bear to watch the conversation continue anymore and said in a gentle voice, "As a matter of fact, Mr. Evans, you can attend the meeting."

In the meantime, she waved her hands at the black cat that was moving toward Dubenal and said, "Skoy, come back."

"Fitia, what are you doing?" Dracula said in surprise.

Completely ignoring her "boss", Fitia went on to say, "Because the content of the meeting was exposed in advance, at the request of most members, the meeting will be held outside of the Valley of Fiery Stone, in case certain ambitious schemers silence the oppositions with the defense. Therefore, attending the meeting is not dangerous.”

“Fitia!” Dracula already sounded angry.

“Skoy”, the little black cat, disregarded its master’s summoning and went on to Nasdell. It liked playing with big dogs the most!

“About that...” Lucien thought for a moment.

Fitia chuckled. “Stanis will attend the meeting too.”

“I’m very curious about the result of the meeting.” Hearing that the King of Nightmare was coming and that the meeting was not to be held inside the Valley of Fiery Stone, Lucien naturally wouldn’t refuse to attend it. This way, he could know what was going on as early as possible.

Hearing that Lucien was willing to attend, Dubenal burst into laughter. It was indeed an excuse! I’d seen through you!

Nasdell admired his prince even more, feeling that his prince was truly visionary.

The darkness in the sky was much shallower, suggesting that Dracula might have left. Fitia gestured and said, “Mr. Evans, I’ll show you to the entrance of the Valley of Fiery Stone.”

Then, she blinked and said with a smile, “It’s really a great thing that the sun is discovered.”

Ever since she appeared, vague sorrow and melancholy seemed to have been hidden in her smile, as if she had complicated feelings about the whole world. However, her smile was pure and brilliant this time, like the flower blooming in the northern ice field.

Her attitude reminded Lucien of the files he saw before. Wasn’t Fitia the Empress of Snow, the legendary sorcerer of the Schachran Empire in the north? She went missing in the War of Dawn!

“The Empress of Snow?” Lucien recited the legendary title in confusion. How did she become a vampire?

Fitia smiled. “It’s actually a long and monotonous story. All in all, because of the problems of my own body and my soul, I could only succeed in my life by transforming into a vampire. Right, don’t discuss too much arcana with me. I fear that my brain might explode.”

“Am I that infamous?” Lucien said in self-mockery. When he walked into the forest with Fitia, he remembered that she was allegedly good at many ancient mysterious rituals.

Most of the legendary sorcerers today had little to do with the Magic Empire. The few of them were merely senior-rank sorcerers or archmages during the last years of the Magic Empire and were far from the center. Therefore, the legendary sorcerers who knew the weird rituals in the past well were only the ones in the Dark Mountain Range and Pope Viken. Fitia was apparently much more important than the former.

During the last few years of the Magic Empire, there were only two top legends in the three empires. Other than them, it was the almost twenty level-three legendary sorcerers such as Fitia.

Seeing that its master had left without bothering him, the little cat Skoy hurried to turn around and follow her.

Following Dubenal to walk in the forest, Nasedell held himself back for a long time and finally asked, “My prince, why did you invite Lucien Evans?”

“Because Dracula opposed it,” Dubenal replied. Then, feeling that it was not enough to reflect his wisdom, he added, “Lucien Evans has already reached the peak of legendary, and he has the special, powerful legendary spells such as Advanced Time Stop, Eternal Blaze, Luxury Cracking, and Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness. It’s barely possible for me to defeat him in a head-on battle. So, I can only carry out my strong suit and crush him with wisdom.”

“This meeting is very complicated and will be a perfect place for my scheme. Lucien Evans cannot attend it safely at all.”

Nasdell was thrilled. It was truly as expected of his prince. He had come up with a solution to deal with Lucien Evans so quickly!

.....

Inside the Valley of Fiery Stone, volcanoes were erupting, covering the sky with thick dust that looked like lead clouds. However, the place was not dark at all. The overflowing magma illuminated everything around.

Outside of the valley, black chairs that looked like thrones had been placed in the open air.

The chairs had been occupied by the experts who were in different attires and appearances. There was a legendary knight with six arms, a Spirit Absorber—the formal name coined by the Magic Empire, but they were more commonly known as the Mind Stealers because they were good at controlling the mind—who had an octopus head, a legendary sorcerer covered in a black cloak, a middle-aged man who spread out the aura of a dragon, and a brown eye that spread out many tiny tentacles that had little eyes in different eyes.

Now that Fitia brought Lucien over, the six-armed knight among them suddenly burst out, “Lucien Evans?”

He was apparently both shocked and suspicious.

“Lucien Evans?” The other legendary experts had recognized Lucien’s identity too. The atmosphere was suddenly frozen.

Although they had hardly been away from the Dark Mountain Range, it would be an insult to their wisdom if they did not know the most dangerous person in the world.

Chapter 774: Disaster Bringer

Chapter 774: Disaster Bringer

Every legendary expert had the ability to influence the environment around them. When they were shocked and suspicious, the atmosphere was naturally as frozen as the ocean before a storm, depressing and gloomy. An unimaginable storm might burst out at any moment.

The six arms of the dark legendary knight emitted cold, sharp brilliance, as if they were six legendary longswords themselves. The octopus head of the Spirit Absorber raised its tentacles, as if it were playing the piano of mind in the sky. The middle-aged man who looked more like a necromancer and a vampire than a dragon squinted, with crimson scales growing on the forehead, the face, and the hands. The Demogorgon of Eyes stared at Lucien with its every eye.

It was not because they were making a fuss and lost the calmness as expected of legendary experts. It was because the seemingly handsome and harmless young man before them was too famous. The legendary experts that he killed in the past few years were perhaps more than what most people killed in their entire lifetimes. None of the unintelligent specters, the manipulative spirits, or the Demon Lords and the legendary knights were weak creatures at somebody else's mercy. They also blamed the death of Congus on Lucien.

Also, more importantly, even though Lucien Evans was not the one who gave a fatal final blow, his appearance often meant the death or decline of legendary experts, such as Lankshear, the former Prince of Demons, Harex, or the incarnation of the Lord of Hell in one of his arrivals. The names that were more astounding than those killed by himself made the intelligent creatures in the Dark Mountain Range respect Lucien Evans as "Embodiment of Misfortunes" and "Disaster Bringer".

Therefore, after seeing Lucien Evans in such an important meeting where everybody might burst into a fight, they couldn't help but feel that their blood was running fast. Who would be the unlucky guy?

Lucien pushed his monocle in confusion under the eyes that could've collapsed a radiant knight. Even though they were vigilant of a strange top legend, they shouldn't have behaved so obviously, should they? If they did not want any outsider to attend, they could've said it out aloud. Why were they glaring at him so angrily? Did they still want to talk to him nicely in the future?

With a shallow smile, Fitia said, "Everybody, this is Mr. Lucien 'Atom Controller' Evans. He happened to be in the Dark Mountain Range visiting a friend. After he learned that we are about to hold an important meeting, he decided to come to attend in order to learn firsthand information."

Seeing Fitia's attitude, the legendary experts on the spot contained themselves and did not ask who invited Lucien.

The sorcerer whose whole body was covered in a black cloak said with a hoarse voice, "Are you here on behalf of the Congress of Magic?"

"Although it's my personal decision, I represent the will of the Congress as a grand arcanist," Lucien said ambiguously.

"Hehe. A grand arcanist..." The sorcerer of ancient heritages did not seem fond of the term "grand arcanist".

Fitia chuckled. "Ogre, admit it or not, every sorcerer who has obtained the title of grand arcanist can't be any worse than you."

The sorcerer of ancient heritages was Ogre, the Umbral King, who was adept at shadow, darkness, curse, illusion, and other spells. He was merely a level-two legendary sorcerer when the Magic Empire collapsed. Therefore, Fitia, who was senior to him, mocked him rather straightforwardly.

Lucien glanced at Fitia in surprise. She did not seem to reject arcana too much, but she had unmistakably expressed her dislike of arcana... No wonder she always gave a contradictory feeling.

“Hehe.” Ogre stopped talking. Although he was of the same rank as Fitia now, he was still rather scared of Fitia, who knew more mysterious spells and rituals and who had transformed into a vampire.

Fitia pointed at a glamorous chair that looked like a black throne. “Mr. Evans, you will be seated here.”

That chair was at the last row of the legendary members of the Dark Congress. Further behind were the followers of the legendary experts.

Lucien nodded and did not object. From their early conversation, he knew that Fitia was not a member of the Dark Congress; she was attending the meeting as Dracula’s “subordinate”.

At this moment, the experts of the dark world moved their eyes back and looked at each other. Cracking sounds immediately burst out in the air, and tiny sparks leaped out. They seemed to be engaged in undisguised communication of the mind.

Ogre said angrily, “Perhaps Dracula is conspiring with the Congress of Magic. That explains why he is so confident in trying to unite us.”

“Dracula works with the Congress of Magic?” The Demogorgon of Eyes waved the tentacles of little eyes. Of all the legendary members of the Dark Congress, other than Ogre, Dubenal, and the few primordial dragons who loathed the Congress of Magic, Dracula and Danisos were among the people who disliked arcanists most. After all, they had been suppressed by the sorcerers because of their internal strife in the Magic Empire.

The Elder Mind sneered with a mysterious voice, “With enough interests, why wouldn’t Dracula work with the Congress of Magic? If he is indeed working with the Congress of Magic, and Douglas and the top legends are hiding in the dark, what are you going to do? Do you oppose or concur?”

The Elder Mind was not a real legend but merely a representative of the “Mastermind” of the Spirit Absorber. That monster who was hiding in the deepest part of the Dark Mountain Range never left his lair, and most of the experts who fought him had been either killed or enslaved. Therefore, even Dracula and Danisos would not piss him off easily. They had no idea how strong he was exactly.

Every time the Dark Congress had important issues, or it was the turn of the “Mastermind” to watch over the Valley of Fiery Stone, he would send out an “Elder Mind”. By controlling the mind, soul, and body of the subordinate, he would make his puppet legendary.

Therefore, the Elder Mind spoke for the mysterious “Mastermind”. The legendary experts on the spot fell silent. If that were true, what should they choose?

Thinking about that, they shifted their focus to Lucien again, as if they were trying to obtain something from him.

Black short hair, handsome face, deep eyes, and fashionable clothes. The more the experts like Ogre watched, the angrier they became. A boy whose age was only a fraction of theirs was not a top legend!

Although most of them kept their appearances young, the vigor in Lucien’s soul was not something that they could simulate. It clearly indicated his youthfulness.

Sensing the concentration of spiritual power and consciousness domain, Lucien chuckled unhurriedly and snorted as a way of greeting.

The snort came at such a perfect moment that thanks to his demiplane, a scorching, dazzling fireball suddenly appeared in Ogre’s senses. It shined before them like the sun!

In grunts of pain, Ogre and the rest of them moved their senses away from Lucien’s body. However, they were not infuriated but clearly realized that the young man was indeed a top legend. No matter how young he appeared, he was still a top legend who was much stronger than them. He was one of the strongest regular powers of this world!

In the meantime, they thought of the legendary spells that Lucien revealed; Advanced Time Stop, Luxury Cracking, Eternal Blaze, and Snow Goddess' Forgiveness... When those legendary spells were combined, if they did not have the supernatural abilities or items to resist "Time Stop", even a level-three legend would've been instantly killed!

Which legendary experts on the spot dare say that they could resist one round of Lucien's attacks?

Except for the mysterious and terrifying "Mastermind", Ogre probably would've been the only lucky dog, because Lucien Evans did not seem to have spells that could directly destroy the phylacteries like "Light of Judgment" or "Fateful Meteor". But of course, things would be different if he carried his wife's "Sword of Truth".

After slightly awing the experts of the dark world, Lucien waited patiently for the meeting to begin and for Mr. Rhine to arrive.

"Evans?" Stanis, the King of Nightmare, saw Lucien the moment he was teleported to the valley. "Why are you here?"

"I'm here to greet Mr. Rhine and see how the meeting goes." Lucien did not cover his purpose.

The King of Nightmare still looked like a common middle-aged man, but he was covered in a mist under the perception of Lucien's top legendary spiritual power, as if he were a dream that nobody could see through.

Casting "Whispering Wind", the King of Nightmare asked solemnly, "What's the intention of the Congress? Do you want to see Dracula succeed in uniting them, or do you want him to fail?"

He asked the Congress of Magic's stance.

Lucien smiled. "Either is fine. For the Congress, there is barely any difference."

Of course, Lucien personally did not have high hope in that.

The King of Nightmare nodded and stopped asking about that. Instead, he discussed “psychology”, which had only grown popular in the Congress during the past decade, with Lucien. “I believe that the analysis of dreams is also a kind of psychology. You’ve paid too much attention to the results of actions...”

“Dreams are prone to the interference of too many irrelevant factors...” Lucien was rather interested in psychology too.

During their discussion, the legendary experts of the dark world came one after another. Except for Dubenal, they were all shocked to see Lucien sitting in the rear.

After a while, Natravos, a legendary sorcerer known as “Lord of Abyss”, and the Silver-Eyed Count were the only two participants who hadn’t arrived. At this moment, the bright sky of the Valley of Fiery Stone became dark due to an enormous creature that was flying above the area.

It was an elegantly-shaped dragon, whose whole body was in gray. Scales covered his body, including the eyes, like hourglasses. Circles of blackness that resembled annual rings could be found on his body, marking the passage of time.

Cold, indifferent, and slow, but never to stop. That was exactly the feeling that Danisos, the primordial dragon of time, gave. If one were to observe more carefully, they would discover that although his scales seemed lackluster, a layer of light seemed to be floating on them all the time.

Around Danisos, time and space overlapped naturally. When rays of light illuminated it, the sky seemed to be snowing.

“The meeting begins now. Those who are late will be informed of the result.” Danisos opened his wings and looked down.

His voice was more solemn than ever.

Chapter 775: The First

Danisos' appearance as a dragon instead of a human suggested his deepest hate against mankind. After all, the pope who killed his wife, Aflora, was a human, and most members of the Saint Truth were human beings too.

As he talked, an invisible wind seemed to be blowing across the field, bringing the feeling of aging and distance. His eyes that were covered in gray scales did not have pupils, and there were only layers of transparent ripples that looked like the ever-running river of time. It also made Danisos a high and mighty witness of history, who observed the changes of worlds and lived indifferently without ever being involved.

For a moment, Lucien sensed that Danisos was staring at him coldly. He had a subtle, uncontrollable shiver, as if he had been paralyzed because of the changing time and space. The Moon Timer in the pocket of his waistcoat had also been dimmed by the ruler of time.

Right when Lucien was about to unleash his air and resist Danisos by melting the projection of his demiplane, Danisos suddenly moved his eyes away. Instead of questioning why Lucien was invited to come here, he looked at the dozen legendary experts in the dark world and repeated, "The meeting now begins."

"Dragon of Time and Luminosity, the Silver-Eyed Count and the Lord of Abyss haven't arrived yet. Both of them are very influential among their people or in their territories, and they may have different opinions. I believe we should wait a bit longer." Few members of the Dark Congress dared to argue with Danisos, and the Elder Mind was one of them because he was the representative of the mysterious "Mastermind".

The Silver-Eyed Count, Rhine, was a first-generation legend, and the only legend who could directly summon the Silver Moon. His influence among vampires was as good as that of Dracula. If he was absent, it was estimable that the decision of the meeting would not necessarily be carried out among vampires. The Lord of Abyss, Natravos, was only a level-two legendary sorcerer, but he was the greatest collector of the bloodline experiments in the Magic Empire. After transforming his body into a Demon Lord's, his real combat ability was as good as that of level-three legendary sorcerers. He was sort of a central member of the Dark Congress.

Of course, after being transformed into a Demon Lord, Natravos seemed even more brutal and bloodthirsty, with additional masochism.

Before Danisos replied, a low voice came from outside of the valley. "Rhine's absence will not change the decision of vampires. If Natravos is late, it means that he has abstained. All he needs to do is to choose whether or not to accept our final decision."

A male in a tailcoat walked to the front of the meeting field in a seemingly slow way but covering hundreds of meters in every step. He was a mature, charismatic middle-aged gentleman, with a well-trimmed mustache. He looked around at the meeting field with his crimson eyes.

After he appeared, the whole meeting field became dark again, as if the light had been absorbed by him. Around his cape, which was red inside and black outside, humans, dragons, elves, villas, towers, and other objects seemed to be hidden.

It was exactly Dracula, the vampire prince known as "Night Dominator".

Dracula looked around at all the experts of the dark world and stopped briefly on Lucien's face, before he raised his head proudly and announced, "The vampires have reached an agreement with the dragons. We will establish a new Dark Congress, which will not be a loose alliance but an association against common foes. It's time for you to make a decision whether or not to join it. If you are unwilling to, please leave."

He was so arrogant that it was more like a notification than a discussion, and the attendees could only choose to accept it or not to accept it. Also, he seemed not worried that it would push the other legendary experts of the Dark Congress away. Perhaps they were not significant in his eyes at all.

However, Dracula had indeed been well-prepared about this despite his arrogance. When the vampires and the dragons were united, he already boasted an overwhelming advantage, and he could totally establish a new force without being restrained by the Dark Congress. Also, although he had only one-half of the legendary experts, there were two top legends, multiple level-three legends, and absolute solidarity among them. Without internal strife, their combat ability would be much higher than that of the Dark Congress right now!

Hearing Dracula's announcement, all the legendary experts on the spot fell into silence. They had expected a debate on the matter. After all, every legend's opinion should be appreciated. Little did they know that Danisos and Dracula would be so dominating and arrogant that they did not give the other legends a chance to speak at all. They could only reply with yes or no.

Dracula looked at them coldly with his crimson eyes. "After the new Dark Congress is established, the Dark Mountain Range will be our main territory. Whoever doesn't belong to us will be attacked, if they are not hiding too well." There were too many dangerous places in the Dark Mountain Range, and even Dracula could not promise that he knew every secret hideout.

The atmosphere was frozen again after his speech. The tension that Lucien felt upon his arrival reappeared.

Arrogant! That's too arrogant! We're legendary experts, not vampires under your command!

We can always leave the Dark Mountain Range for the north to join other forces that are willing to take us in! Will there be any place that does not welcome a legendary expert?

Stanis was the calmest of all. He had been conspiring with the Congress of Magic since a long time ago. Had it not been for his remaining fear for arcana, he would've gone to Allyn.

Lucien looked at the King of Nightmare with a smile, feeling that he should thank Dracula for helping Stanis make up his mind and helping the Congress of Magic to secure yet another legendary sorcerer.

Previously, Lucien told the King of Nightmare that the Congress of Magic did not really care whether or not the Dark Congress was successfully united because there would be no difference. However, Lucien admitted that he was wrong and felt genuinely delighted. Based on what Dracula and Danisos were doing, the thing was definitely in favor of the Congress.

Well, should we try to win the two legendary knights over? The Congress of Magic has plenty of prosperous islands, and we are short of hands to defend our territory in the ocean. We can reach out to the Spirit Absorbers, the Eye Demons, and the werewolves too, and see if they are willing to participate in the research work, or rather, to be researched on in the territory of the Congress...

Of course, the odds of success couldn't be too high, because the Spirit Absorbers and the Eye Demons were probably unwilling to leave the Dark Mountain Range that was most suitable for their survival and development.

When Lucien considered that, the legendary experts of the dark world considered their future.

We don't know if the Congress of Magic is fully supporting Dracula. In that case, we will be in a very disadvantageous position...

Also, there will be much fewer choices...

The minds communicated with each other remotely, and Fitia had achieved her purpose. As long as she brought Lucien to the field, whatever Lucien said, it would be considered an excuse because his arrival suggested that he was on Dracula's side, unless Lucien simply attacked Dracula.

Under normal circumstances, Lucien would hardly attack with his prudence. As a result, the legendary experts might be mistaken and make the wrong decision.

Sensing the changing atmosphere in the shabby meeting field, Lucien suddenly understood Fitia's intention. He couldn't help but thought that every legendary sorcerer had remarkable wisdom as long as they were not corrupted by the negative air of death or abyss. Dubenal, on the other hand, was an idiot to invite him here. Even if Dubenal told everyone that he had invited Lucien, nobody would believe that the Congress of Magic was working with werewolves, because they knew exactly what a fool Dubenal was...

Right when Lucien was about to speak while disregarding the rules, the Elder Mind stood up. His eight tentacles were drifting in the wind as he said, "Prince Dracula, is the Silver-Eyed Count aware of the decision that you have made on behalf of all vampires?"

If the Observer did not know, it would mean that half of the vampires might be unwilling to work with dragons, and that the God of Silver Moon's attitude was obscure.

"Rhine has gone missing and is out of reach. We cannot wait for him due to the urgency of the matter. Now, the three first-generation princes of vampires, as well as all the members of the Council of Elders, have agreed with my decision." Dracula's face was so pale that he seemed to have been away from the sun for decades, but his lips were in the weird sanguine color.

The "Mastermind" behind the Elder Mind was slightly surprised. Even Sate, the prince who was closest to the Observer, had agreed with Dracula's proposal?

The two enormous eyes on his octopus head looked at the unusually handsome man, only to discover that the vampire prince had closed his red eyes slowly, giving connivance to what Dracula said.

The atmosphere was frozen again. Suddenly, ripples of time and space spread out, and an illusionary gate appeared. A "young man" in a black magic robe stumbled out, with a loud voice that was enhanced by magic. "Mr. Danisos, Prince Dracula, my teacher has perished!"

He couldn't have sounded more panicked.

“What?” Everybody was shocked. All the legendary experts knew that the young man was a student of Natravos, the Lord of Abyss. He claimed that the Lord of Abyss had perished!

How could a sorcerer close to level three of legendary, who mastered all kinds of weird spells, have died so easily?

“What happened to Natravos? Give me the details...” said Danisos solemnly. The invisible wind blew again, appeasing the young man.

As a legendary sorcerer’s student, the young man hadn’t even reached the senior rank yet. However, all the experts on the spot knew that it was very normal. Natravos was a demon-like lunatic, and his students had a surprisingly low survival rate.

The young man took a few deep breaths and said, “Your Excellencies, I received the notification of gathering yesterday, but my teacher was engaged in his experiment and had been locking the top floor of his magic tower, making it impossible for me to inform him. This morning, I gave it another try and activated the reminder magic circle, only to discover that the defenses of the laboratory had collapsed.

“... The whole top floor of the magic tower was absolutely destroyed except for the outer wall. I searched for a long time and found my teacher’s phylactery in the remains, but it was already broken. It might’ve even been the source of the destruction...”

Has Natravos really died?

The legendary experts were both vigilant and surprised. Was it done by Danisos and Dracula in secret to eliminate their toughest opposition? Or was it the reason why Lucien Evans came to the Dark Mountain Range?

Ogre brought out his crystal ball and performed astrology to determine the life status of the Lord of Abyss.

Chapter 776: Investigators

Chapter 776: Investigators

Not just Ogre, every expert on the spot who was capable of astrology or who had similar prophecy powers began to predict the life status of Natravos, the Lord of Abyss.

They trusted their own judgment on such important matters, particularly when they were faced with “partners” that they couldn’t really trust.

Lucien was no exception. The crystal ball in his hands soon lost the colors and became dark, with stars emerging in uncanny trajectories.

Since nobody was interfering with or covering Natravos’ life condition, Lucien reached a result soon. The legendary sorcerer with the title of “Lord of Abyss” had indeed completely perished.

“Natravos is really dead...” After a dozen seconds, Ogre spoke of the result with his coarse, rusty voice, somewhat at a loss.

Following him, the other legendary sorcerers reached similar conclusions. The atmosphere was even more frigid, and a storm seemed to be brewing.

All of a sudden, Danisos, the Dragon of Time and Luminosity, said in his indifferent but intimidating tone, “I examined the traces of time but failed to find the cause of Natravos’ death or the murderer. Perhaps an expert intentionally destroyed the traces, or perhaps all the traces were destroyed in the destructive storm that caused Natravos’ death.”

Danisos could not travel back in time. However, every matter would leave traces in the river of time more or less. Only the experts who had grasped the mysteries of time could examine them.

The longer it was delayed, the more such traces would be worn out. Even Danisos would not examine the landscape that was too distant unless it left too deep a mark on the river of time. Of course, purposefully or inadvertently, there were always cases where things could not be examined clearly even though they had just happened.

The Demogorgon of Eyes, Sonite, Dubenal, Cervantes who was the legendary knight known as “Six-Armed Inquisitor”, Sterling, Sate, the King of Nightmare and the other experts were not entirely convinced by Danisos’ words. They looked at Ogre, the Elder Mind, and Lucien. After all, it was very possible that Danisos and Dracula were behind it.

Lucien put his crystal ball back and nodded at the King of Nightmare and Sate, the vampire prince, solemnly, hinting that his result with the Moon Timer, the crystal ball, and the Mirror of Fate was the same. In the meantime, Ogre, the Umbral King, had also confirmed Danisos’ words through other prophecy spells.

The Elder Mind stiffened, his body so empty that the soul seemed gone. The two eyes on his octopus head, however, turned dirty and old but showed no senility. Every expert who looked at him in the eyes felt that their mind had been slowed.

“The ‘Mastermind’ has completely taken over the body...” Lucien nodded his head slightly. How the “Mastermind” could control the Elder Mind over such a long distance in the Dark Mountain Range that was brimming with space gaps was certainly something worth studying.

The Elder Mind’s voice became extremely coarse. “I only ‘saw’ that Natravos’ mind was full of pain and delight before his death...”

Pain and delight? The former was easier to understand. Most of the ways of death were usually very painful, but what was the delight about?

All the legendary experts on the spot subconsciously asked the question, but they soon realized that Natravos was a masochist. The more pain he was in, the more delighted he would be. It was exactly like when normal human beings had a taste of wonderful food or wine or met certain satisfactory things.

“Did Natravos go a bit too far when he ‘played’ with himself? But blowing up his phylactery was still too much... Or maybe the pain that did not cause his real death was not enough to bring him any pleasure?” The same idea that everybody was thinking of popped up in Lucien’s head. For some people, they would never be gratified without the pressure of death. “It seems that Natravos had severe psychological conditions. It’s a pity that he did not go through any therapy in time.”

However, it was only the judgment of the “Mastermind”, and it was not backed by any proof. Also, even if the conclusion was true, the possibility that Natravos was killed could not be ruled out. It was possible that he was both in pain and delight when somebody brutalized him.

When all kinds of thoughts were popping up in Lucien’s heart, Ogre, Cervantes, and the rest of them already began their mental communications.

“Whether or not Natravos was really murdered, we have to seize the opportunity and postpone the meeting!” Ogre said in a hurry. He seemed strongly opposed to Danisos and Dracula’s reorganization plan.

Sterling said solemnly, “Yes, we have to figure out the cause of Natravos’ death first. Otherwise, we will not end well even if we agree with Danisos and Dracula’s demand. It’s possible that we will die a mysterious death exactly like Natravos in the future!”

He also objected to the reorganization and wouldn’t let go of the opportunity.

“However, if we agree with the reorganization, as legendary experts, we are too influential for Danisos and Dracula to ignore us. Why would they kill us?” Cervantes, the Six-Armed Inquisitor, asked confusedly. He was rather neutral about the reorganization.

“Hehe. What if their real purpose is not reorganization? We do not know why so many legendary experts perished in the past few years yet...” Sonite, another werewolf prince, detested vampires from the bottom of his heart.

Seeing that everybody fell silent, Dubenal held his head high and controlled his tone in the mental communication. "This thing happened quite unexpectedly. Although somebody leaked the message in advance, little time was left for us, and many ways cannot be put into use."

The Demogorgon of Eyes, the Elder Mind, and the other experts were all shocked at his eloquence. Since when had Dubenal become such a philosophical thinker?

"I haven't come up with any good solution on my way here. I believe you are the same, right?" Dubenal looked at the other experts, looking for acknowledgment.

So, it's the same old Dubenal!

However, Dubenal seemed to have inspired Ogre, who sneered and said, "Therefore, Natravos' death gave us an opportunity to postpone it. With enough time, it is possible to disrupt Danisos and Dracula's scheme."

"That's right. The Silver-Eyed Count is not present. Things would've been different if he objected on behalf of some of the vampires. After all, he is not scared of fighting Dracula since he can summon the Silver Moon," the Demogorgon of Eyes and Cervantes said at the same time.

The Elder Mind pondered and said, "The dragons are not absolutely united either. Milereas and Danisos have been rivals in love for ages. Their relationship hasn't gone better at all even though Aflora perished. As long as we can convince him, it will be possible to divide the dragons.

"Also, Danisos and Dracula are both very arrogant. Even if they are working together for now, I don't think that they really respect each other. If we have reached a consensus, we can pretend to agree first and instigate them to fight against each other for the leadership of the new organization. Then, the new Dark Congress will be the same as the one right now.

"Even if it is not destroyed, we will win enough benefits and positions in the new Dark Congress.”

Most of the legendary experts were wise and sophisticated. The situation was only one-sided because it came too unexpectedly, and Danisos and Dracula were more tough and arrogant than they expected. Now that they had an opportunity and plenty of time, they were naturally able to come up with a sabotage plan with high odds of success.

Dubenal nodded in satisfaction at their discussion. Just as he expected, everybody’s wisdom couldn’t be activated without him.

The mental communication moved fast, and they finished the discussion very quickly. Before Danisos and Dracula spoke, Ogre stood up and said, “Dragon of Time and Luminosity, Prince Dracula, Natravos has abruptly died, and the murderer is unknown. A great scheme might be looming over the Dark Mountain Range. We have to put down our prejudices and leave other problems alone in order to focus our attention on the cause of Natravos’ death and the potential dangers. I believe that this is also a great opportunity for you to demonstrate that the new Dark Congress is better than the one right now.”

“That’s right. How can we join the new Dark Congress relaxedly if we do not figure out the reason behind Natravos’ death?” The Elder Mind agreed with Ogre.

Natravos’ sudden death was a major shock for dragons and vampires too. Even the hardcore supporters of Danisos and Dracula couldn’t help but agree. After all, it concerned their own safety.

At this moment, the King of Nightmare suddenly said to Lucien in a low voice, “If the Lord of Abyss was really killed by someone, I can’t think of a murderer who could’ve done it in the victim’s own demiplane and magic tower. Even a demigod couldn’t have done it so quickly and secretly.”

“Perhaps he took advantage of the Lord of Abyss’ hobby of auto-sadism, and perhaps he was not in his demiplane when he died. The destructive effect was actually caused by the connection between the soul and the phylactery through weird spells. About that, Viken is an ancient sorcerer who possesses many unusual spells. He can transform into the status of primeval devils, and he is much stronger than the Lord of Abyss. So, he is the greatest suspect.” Lucien guessed the intention of the King of Nightmare and purposefully pointed the matter at Viken.

As he expected, all the legendary experts on the spot changed their faces. Was it really Viken who had come to sabotage it when he heard that the Dark Congress was to be reorganized? Was he still around?

“For our own safety, we have to investigate Natravos’ death,” the rigid middle-aged man who looked like a necromancer said in a low voice. He was Maier, the primordial red dragon.

Under such circumstances, it was impossible for Danisos and Dracula to insist. So, Danisos said, “Then, we will go to Natravos’ magic tower for investigation together, in case anyone suspects that Dracula and I destroy the clues and fake the conclusion.”

“Alright,” Ogre agreed. “Evans, Stanis, I invite you as witnesses of the investigation on behalf of the Dark Congress.”

“That’s not a problem,” Stanis replied with a smile.

There had to be undestroyed magic files and notes in Natravos’ magic tower. As a great collector of the ancient bloodlines, his stuff would be very valuable. Ogre had proposed the invitation exactly because he wanted to exchange the knowledge for their witness service. Therefore, Lucien also nodded his head with a half-smile.

Chapter 777: Jungle of Demons

The space-time gate toward “Jungle of Demons” was still near the valley. Bizarre-looking trees could be vaguely seen.

The young man wearing a black magic robe was directing Danisos, Dracula, Lucien, and the other legends to approach it in panic.

“After Natravos closed the top floor of his magic tower, did anything unusual happen, or was there any visitor?” Ogre asked Natravos’ student while he walked.

The young man recalled carefully and shook his head. “It was the same as usual. There were neither guests nor weird stuff.”

Pausing for a moment, he gnashed his teeth. “In fact... In fact, because my teacher was too ‘rigorous’, I often kept as far away from his magic tower as possible after it was closed...”

A student speaking evil of his teacher behind his teacher’s back was punishable by death in the Magic Empire. Even in the Congress of Magic today, it was still not a likable behavior. However, it was of great significance and might concern the real cause of his teacher’s death. Therefore, the student still confessed about the real conditions truthfully.

The black cape covered Ogre’s face in the shadow, revealing only two spots of greet light that seemed to be from his eyes.

He observed the young man with his green, emotionless eyes, making the young man sweat in panic, before he opened his mouth. “Natravos was a lunatic. He could’ve modified himself into anything that was better than the senseless and brainless demons.”

It was because his legendary class was “Lord of Abyss” and modifying his body into a Demon Lord had the best prospect. The young man defended his teacher in his heart, but he did not object to the conclusion that Natravos was insane.

On their way toward the space-time gate, Ogre, the Elder Mind,

Dubenal, Danisos, and the other experts asked the young man every once in a while to confirm the results that they achieved by astrology, prophecy, superpowers, and deduction. Fitia was left behind in the Valley of Fiery Stone to watch over the headquarters of the Dark Congress.

The short journey took such a long time for the experts, who could arrive in a blink, because it was a process of communication, but however slow they were, they reached the space-time gate very soon. Danisos, who was flying in midair, flapped his gigantic gray wings and raised his skull while roaring.

The time and space around immediately quaked, and the illusionary gate was suddenly expanded. Then, Danisos' enormous body dived into it as if he were swimming in the ocean.

At this moment, Lucien, who had been quiet the whole time, suddenly asked, "What's your name?"

"Me?" The young man pointed at himself and replied respectfully, "You can call me David, Your Excellency."

It was a common name that could be heard anywhere.

The other legendary experts looked at Lucien in confusion, wondering why he raised the unimportant question. Was it the courtesy before the real question? After all, the Atom Controller used to be a musician, and he was the queen's husband. It was not strange that he appreciated manners.

Lucien, however, merely nodded his head and said, "David, lead the way." Then, he became as silent as before.

The unusual question was only a brief episode, but most experts on the spot were too sophisticated to let it go. Their magnificent willpower and weird spells all fell upon David to make sure that there was nothing wrong with him. Otherwise, it would be the greatest humiliation if they were tricked by the sorcerer who hadn't even reached the senior rank yet.

After a few seconds, they looked at each other and slightly nodded, suggesting that there was nothing wrong. Then, they stepped into the space-time gate with David, reaching the Jungle of Demons.

Space and time changed, and the fuzzy scene before him turned clear. A weird jungle was unfolded before Lucien.

The trees in the jungle were only in two colors. Some were as dark as ink, and the others were as red as blood. However, they were in an assortment of appearances. Some were in the shape of humans, some had eyes all over the trunk, some had mouths baring the sharp fangs as their leaves, and some were upside down, with the crown at the bottom and the root extending into the dark clouds. There was even a gigantic leaf floating in the wind, with veins stretching out to all directions as the trunk, branches, and fruits...

Natravos' demiplane was even more chaotic than the abyss. All the creatures seemed to have been randomly jumbled together.

However, those creatures were only relatively terrible. In the eyes of the investigators, they were too weak to be bothered. The real things that called for attention were the "chaos" spreading in the mud, the air, and the water. They were the cores of the demiplane and the origin that caused everything. Even a legendary expert might be affected if they did not pay enough attention.

David cast a spell and paved a broad path in the jungle. At the end of the jungle was a pointy magic tower with a top that rose into the clouds. It was pitch black and twisted, exactly like the trees in the jungle.

Danisos swooped at the magic tower from the sky, blowing invisible wind that scattered all the chaos. The other legendary experts were not stopped either, and they entered the magic tower in their own ways.

The hall at the bottom floor of the magic tower had a black carpet but not any lamps. The only sources of light were the silver candlesticks on the wall. The red fire in them did not drive away the darkness in the room at all.

Every candlestick was surrounded by different things, including thorny whips, sticks with rising steel stings, and little creepy silver needles. All in all, everything that shouldn't have appeared in the house of a legendary sorcerer was there.

"Those were the tools that Natravos used for his self-brutalization a long time ago. They cannot satisfy him right now..." Ogre, who was relatively familiar with Natravos, introduced them to the legends who had never been here with a coarse and helpless voice.

Nobody said anything, because they really did not know how they should comment on it.

Lucien shook his head in amusement and turned to the front side of the hall where a painting was hanging. On the painting was a middle-aged man with a special look.

The man had a solemn face, with a pair of demon horns full of patterns on his forehead. His pupils were crimson, his nose collapsed, and his cheekbones were rising, full of the feeling of disunity.

"It's Natravos' self-portrait..." Noticing Lucien's eyes, Stanis introduced it for him.

As I expected... Lucien guessed that it was Natravos. He chuckled and thought that it was probably his last picture...

"Dear sirs, the four destroyed levels in this magic tower start from level nine." David directed the legends to the top. "We'll go to the scene now."

Although this magic tower did not have many levels, every level was extremely broad and high. Danisos had only reduced the size of his body, and it was already spacious enough for him to pass.

"There's no need to rush. Let's investigate floor by floor. We may find other leads," Ogre interrupted David. That way, they might be able to find a lot of good stuff.

The other legendary experts, particularly Stanis who had come for Natravos' books and notes, certainly wouldn't let go of the opportunity either. So, the investigators pressed forward rather slowly and only approached the “crime scene” after several hours.

In the process, Lucien and Stanis had both obtained a lot of trophies. They copied and recorded many useful files. Although they were not the core of Natravos’ current research, they were still the distinguished results of the bloodline synthesis studies in the Magic Empire.

“It will be the ninth level in the next...” David stood on the stairs, and it was a chaotic, gray stone gate before him.

Dracula covered his nose with a pair of white gloves and said, “Open it.”

As the stone gate was slowly opened, the gory view inside was exposed before everyone. All the floors and ceilings from the ninth level to the thirteenth level had little left now.

Halls, anatomy rooms, synthesis rooms, alchemy rooms, binding rooms, and libraries were no longer distinguishable. Dilapidated walls were everywhere. The central part had been completely shattered and almost vaporized.

“I’m afraid that the files have been destroyed...” Stanis sighed with a low voice.

Thanks to the protection of the magic tower, the window on the outer wall was still intact. However, different from the fashion nowadays, it was narrow and emitted the feeling of rigidity.

Through the window, the Jungle of Demons outside could be clearly seen. The clouds corrupted by the air of the abyss seemed even dimmer and darker now.

“Let’s walk together in case anyone destroys the clues,” Ogre said, as if he were not scared of Danisos and Dracula.

Danisos said emotionlessly, “Then, we should examine Natravos’ phylactery first.”

Nobody objected to the proposal, because it was indeed the object that most likely contained clues.

Natravos' phylactery was kept in a hidden interlayer between the twelfth level and the thirteen level, but it had completely collapsed under the storm of destruction and was no longer hidden.

"The explosion took place from inside to outside..." The Elder Mind's withered hands picked up a deep black object, on which gems seemed to have been embedded. However, the gems couldn't be found anywhere now. "This is also the place of the initial destruction."

It was not hard to imagine how hard the phylactery of a legendary sorcerer could be. So, there were still remains in this place even though it was the center of the explosion.

"Either Natravos blew it up himself, or somebody affected the phylactery with weird spells through the soul..." Dubenal reached a conclusion.

Nothing that we do not know. The other legendary experts secretly thought to themselves. Among them, Danisos and Dracula kept away from the place where the pieces of the phylactery were gathered, as if they were trying to avoid suspicion.

Lucien looked out of the window. Chaotic and dark clouds were surging there.

Chapter 778: Revelation

Chapter 778: Revelation

Crack.

A bloodred bolt of lightning struck in the rolling clouds. It did not seem real but more like an illusion caused by the chaotic air, which was similar to many floors in the abyss.

The rolling clouds and the falling bloodred bolts of lightning didn't raise the attention of Ogre, the Elder Mind, the Demogorgon of Eyes, and the other legendary experts because the weather was normal in the Jungle of Demons. As a matter of fact, it would be unusual if such phenomena did not exist.

Suddenly, a bolt of enormous lightning glowed in the sky and spread out like a gigantic tree. Half of the demiplane was illuminated by the bloodred light.

Even though the magic tower had no windows on this level and only a few narrow ones on the upper level and the lower level, it was still illuminated into redness by the lightning.

BOOM!

After the lightning, it was naturally the deafening thunder, which was so terrifying that the whole magic tower was clattering as if it were trembling in fear. Even the legendary experts were somewhat stunned.

Right then, Danisos, the Dragon of Time and Luminosity, who had been squatting at the edge with his eyes half-closed, suddenly opened his eyes. Lucien's reflection was clearly displayed in the shaking invisible waves in it.

He then opened his mouth. The gray scales on his body somehow showed the air of passing time, and the twelve black circles on his body that looked like annual rings slowly revolved. He spewed out a mouthful of transparent dragon breath, which seemed both real and illusionary.

The time around Lucien was immediately slowed down. It was so thick that he seemed to have fallen from the sky into the ocean. None of the defenses seemed to be working before the breath of the primordial dragon of time.

Danisos had attacked Lucien without any hesitation!

A silver item glowed in the pocket of Lucien's waistcoat, cold and dreamy as it ticked nonstop.

The slowed "water" immediately resumed normalcy after the ticking, and the thickness was no more. It was exactly the passive effect of the Moon Timer after it was upgraded into a level-three legendary item—Real Vision!

After the Moon Timer was improved to a level-three legendary item, the maximal usage of "Advanced Time Stop" and "Gravity Collapse" had been increased to five times, significantly enhancing Lucien's control over time and space. Also, its anti-interference abilities against space-time effects had been transformed into an innate quality. Once space and time were controlled and had unnatural abnormalities, the Moon Timer would be automatically triggered, keeping the time and space in the zone around it relatively regular.

Danisos did not hope to restrain Lucien, who was an authority when it came to space and time, with only a breath. After the ticking broke the thickened time, the black circles on his body revolved even faster, and he began to chant dragon roars to perform his magic.

Supposedly, the short duration of the passive effect was not enough for a complete spell, not even extraordinary items were employed. However, the case was different for Danisos. He seemed to have been enshrouded in hastened time, or he might have "stolen" time from the future. He had indeed performed a mysterious and powerful spell in the dragon tongue!

Generally speaking, any legendary sorcerer or powerful magic creature could only speed up their cast but could not change the legendary spells, which had specific requirements, no matter how many acceleration abilities they enhanced themselves with. However, the Dragon of Time and Luminosity was not within the range of normal. His “Time Acceleration” could double the speed of his spell-casting!

It was the most terrible part of the primordial dragon of time. After all, no matter how many extraordinary abilities he had grasped to attack or affect other people, his opponents could deal with it as long as they were strong enough, but this “Time Acceleration” was influencing himself as well. During the same time, there would be two Danisoses that would attack Lucien at the same time!

The scales that constituted Danisoses’ black rings opened, and his hair stood erect. Spots of light emerged out of the void and gathered into an invisible, glistening river that surged toward Lucien.

At this moment, Lucien had just got rid of his breath!

The shadow of the river of time washed away the heavy defense around Lucien and constructed a cage of frozen time outside of Real Vision. It was impossible for those inside to get out, and it was impossible for those outside to break in. It appeared that he intended to imprison Lucien.

However, Dracula was thinking of something else!

When Danisoses cast the dragon-tongued spell, he extended his right hand that was wearing a white glove and snatched into the void.

His right hand seemed to be enshrouded by the night. Layers of shadows blurred the real entity, and the cage-like frozen time did not seem to exist at all. Dracula’s right hand passed through it and caught Lucien’s chest!

It was “Night Travel”, the vampires’ natural endowed ability, which could break any space-time barriers!

The other vampires mostly performed “Night Travel” to run away, but different from them, Dracula had such amazing control over the ability that he could allow part of his body to travel. So, “Night Travel” became an attack method that could break most defenses!

In the meantime, Danisos, who was still in “Time Acceleration”, began to cast the second dragon-tongued spell to offset Lucien’s triggered spells.

The red lips on Dracula’s pale face were particularly eye-catching. His eyes were filled with vague passion, as if he had been looking forward to avenging himself.

In his crimson pupils, Lucien, who was wearing the black double-breasted suit, seemed rather stunned, but it was quite normal. Whoever was not immune to space-time magic would have no time to take any reaction when faced with the serial attacks from Danisos and him.

Now that you have fed yourself to me, don’t blame me for settling the scores!

Right when Danisos and Dracula went on a rampage and attacked Lucien, the six primordial dragons and the two vampire princes, who backed off a moment ago to prove their innocence, launched attacks toward the Demogorgon of Eyes, “Six-Armed Inquisitor” Cervantes, and the King of Nightmare. The gigantic bloodred lightning seemed to be their signal.

Although it was quite unexpected, the legends like the Demogorgon of Eyes had been through blood and death too. They realized what was going on immediately. Rays shot out randomly, and the six arms span like a tornado, mincing everything that they touched into pieces... They managed to resist the first round of attacks.

Stanis was covered in elemental halos. He did not find it too difficult to resist the attacks of Milereas, the primordial red dragon. Suddenly, the shadow below his feet and the shadow of the dilapidated walls were enlivened and gathered into a longsword that cut his body from the floor!

Crack.

Stanis' body was broken like glass, but a vague mist emerged from it and enshrouded the area, creating what appeared to be a dreamland.

"Ogre?" Stanis' voice echoed in every corner of the mist, fuzzy and obscure, like a mental communication in the wind, but he was apparently shocked. It was neither the primordial dragons nor the vampire princes who ambushed him just now, but Ogre, the Umbral King!

Ogre's body appeared in the dreamland of mist. He stood right next to Milereas and chuckled in the mental communication with a hoarse voice. "What about me? Do you still not see what is going on?"

"Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!"

A miserable roar suddenly burst out. Sterling, who had been suppressed by a primordial silver dragon, had one tentacle on his head. It was extended from the head of the Elder Mind and pierced into Sterling's brain!

Sterling's face suddenly lost all the organs, as if he had put on a mask. Then, his body also turned blurry. He got rid of the control of the Elder Mind.

"You're on their side too?!" Sterling wandered in the mist angrily. Had the "Mastermind" been conspiring with Danisos, Dracula, and Ogre?

"You killed Natravos? It was Danisos himself who buried the traces of time?" The Demogorgon of Eyes raised dozens of tentacles and shot out different rays, suppressing the two primordial dragons.

How could they have not seen the truth of the whole matter? This meeting had been a scam since the very beginning!

The inside information that Danisos and Dracula intended to unite the Dark Congress was leaked, but it was leaked at such perfect timing that the legends who were reluctant to accept it had to focus all their attention on it without considering anything else. Also, the time left was too little for them to sow discord among the members of the Dark Congress. Everything was obvious now. Dracula and his accomplices leaked it on purpose in order to distract everyone's attention from their real scheme!

Danisos and Dracula's arrogance and toughness were perhaps their nature, but they did help build up the tension at the meeting. The other legends were so focused on resisting them that they tried to seize every opportunity. So, the death of Natravos, the trap that they had prepared in advance, was offered at the most appropriate timing.

In the following discussion, some legendary experts might be worried. However, as "spies", Ogre and the Elder Mind misled everybody into thinking about how to sabotage Danisos and Dracula's plan of reorganization without considering if there were any other schemes. Also, they made the victims under the impression that the trip was not dangerous. Therefore, the victims fell into the trap one step after another.

This place, on the other hand, was Natravos' demiplane that was blocked from the outside world. It was the perfect place for a battle!

The whole plan was well devised based on the perfect control of the mind. It couldn't have been drafted by Danisos and Dracula as they were too arrogant. Was it the proposal of the "Mastermind", or was it the wisdom of the ancient legends like Fitia and Ogre?

"Ever since the beginning, we have never thought to include you. It's better to eliminate you in advance than to keep you, the cancer of our group. That way, you can still make contributions by increasing our strength!" Ogre's voice was coarse and cold.

Everybody could tell that the takeaway point of the sentence was in the latter half. It was because they believed that their strength that would be improved after the operation was enough to compensate for the lost legends that Danisos, Dracula, the Mastermind, and Ogre attacked blatantly.

Lucien's participation was an unexpected factor in the plan, who made their power less overwhelming than before. However, Danisos and his teammates still had absolute advantages. Other than Danisos and Dracula, who were dealing with Lucien, they had six primordial dragons, two vampire princes, one level-three legendary sorcerer, and one representative of the mysterious “Mastermind”. They had ten top legends and three level-three ones.

On the other side, Sonite and Dubenal, the werewolf princes, were level-three legends, the Demogorgon of Eyes was level-three, and the Six-Armed Inquisitor, Sterling, and the King of Nightmare were level-two. Although the top experts were of similar levels, their number was almost half their enemy’s!

Chapter 779: Attack

However, Stanis, the Demogorgon of Eyes, the Six-Armed Inquisitor, and the other legends were not too devastated. Now that the top experts were on par with each other, although they were outnumbered, they would still have a chance to escape, especially when people like the King of Nightmare had plenty of ways to preserve their lives. After all, when they were on the same level, they would be overwhelmed in a battle against twice as many people, but they would not be killed instantly, and as long as they were not killed instantly, there would always be a chance for them to escape with their life-preserving approaches.

Therefore, for the experts of the dark world who had plenty of battle experience, they were far from desperate and scared.

In the mist created by the King of Nightmare, their minds communicated with each other via their respective extraordinary abilities. They decided to concentrate their strength to break the siege. At this moment, they both hated and felt lucky about Lucien. This wretched “Disaster Bringer” and “Embodiment of Misfortunes” had indeed brought death and disasters, but it was also a fortune for them to have him here. Otherwise, few of them would have survived if Danisos and Dracula, two top legends, joined the battle!

For a moment, Stanis had considered abandoning the Demogorgon of Eyes and everybody else and escaping on his own. After all, he had been enhanced with legendary spells similar to “Regather”, and he could return to his own demiplane after they were activated. However, he decided to stay in the end. Both Ogre and Fitia were very familiar with the legendary sorcerers’ ways of running. They must have prepared for his escape. If he were to run off recklessly, it was possible that he would be trapped. So, he might as well stay with the team while looking for a better opportunity.

Therefore, he affected the primordial dragons, the vampire princes, and the other enemies with the mist as the real King of Nightmare, traveling in their minds, creating illusions, and reflecting reality, while he secretly performed prophecy spells to determine the safest path of escape.

In the meantime, he paid attention to Lucien's status. Although Lucien was rather stunned before Dracula and was under the ambush of Danisos' breath and space-time spells, Stanis believed that he had created too many miracles and defeated too many enemies stronger than himself to not be prepared for emergencies.

Suddenly, the crimson bolts of lightning outside fell densely from the dark clouds, and these bolts of lightning were almost at the same level as this floor of the magic tower. So, with the hazy mist blackened, the chaotic "dreamland" was even more chaotic and illogical now that some of the psychological reflections were lost!

The six primordial dragons including Milereas also abandoned their human forms and revealed their real appearances to carry out 100% of their strength!

The red dragon, which was hundreds of meters long, spurted out fire, and horrifying heat spread out. In the dazzling fire, the ruby scales emanated brutality. The piton-shaped breath, which carried freezing coldness and deepest paralysis, came out of the elegant-looking dragon, consolidating the mist into ice that blocked the storm of blades from the Six-Armed Inquisitor...

When the primordial dragons unfolded their bodies, even the shortest of them was a hundred meters long. Although Natravos' magic tower was rather tall and spacious in every level, it shouldn't have been huge enough to accommodate such gargantuan creatures at all. However, things were out of the expectation of the legendary expert. The destroyed magic tower seemed to have been connected to the Jungle of Demons, deep and boundless. Even though all the seven primordial dragons were rolling and breathing blatantly, they were not restrained at all.

"What's going on?" Such an anomaly made the experts like Stanis who knew legendary sorcerers well feel strange.

To carry out the overlapping effect of the magic tower and the demiplane, it would either require the control of the tower guard when the magic tower was not too severely damaged, or the control of the master in order to summon the power of the demiplane when the magic tower was almost destroyed. Since the tower guard of the magic tower had obviously perished in the storm of destruction, who was controlling the magic tower, and who was summoning the power of the Jungle of Demons?

Had Natravos not died yet?

Was he Danisos and Dracula's ally, too?

No. Natravos could've prevented Lucien Evans from getting a certain conclusion from covering his life status, but he couldn't have feigned his death under a top legend's astrology. Therefore, the "Lord of Abyss" must have died!

Then, who could it be?

While they were shocked and suspicious, a chuckle came from the clouds outside of the window. "I was waiting for someone to escape through a teleportation spell. The greatest ability of the chaotic 'Jungle of Demons' is to mess up such spells."

The clouds dispersed, and illuminated by the bloody bolts of lightning, a handsome man who had crystal long hair and a dark skin stepped close in midair. He was wearing a black tailcoat, elegant and handsome.

"Demogorgon of Darkness!"

"Gonheim!"

The different titles confirmed the identity of the stranger. He was exactly Gonheim, the new Prince of Demons!

Stanis, Sonite, and the Demogorgon of Eyes suddenly realized something. The terrible scheme that manipulated everyone accurately must have been created by the Prince of Demons!

Just like the devil dukes in hell, he was best famous for his cunningness and schemes!

However, how could he have arrived at the main material world so easily? And how could he control Natravos' demiplane?

As if he knew their question, and in order to create desperation, Gonheim smiled. "As a matter of fact, you may also call me 'Natravos', because he is a part of me now."

As his words dawned upon them, his body suddenly turned illusionary, as if it existed in everyone's mind, and his handsome face became hideous, with three eyes, high cheekbones, and protruding lips. It was 'Natravos'!

Stanis, who knew a thing or two about the situation, felt that his heart was heavy. The Demogorgon of Darkness had completed the status transformation with Natravos as the container. Also, through his demiplane and his body, the Demogorgon of Darkness could arrive at the main material world steadily!

Stanis' heart was sinking not just because of that, but also because they now had one more top legendary enemy. The previous situation, which was not too devastating, was now sliding into the abyss. Also, the top legends who fought in their own demiplanes were close to demigods. Even though this was only "Jungle of Demons" that belonged to a level-two legend, it was still enough to let the Demogorgon of Darkness carry out 130% of his strength.

For him, it was almost a death sentence. It was impossible for him to resist the Demogorgon of Darkness' attack. He must and had to flee immediately!

The Demogorgon of Eyes, the werewolf princes, and the dark knight, regardless of whether they knew the secrets of status transformation or not, were secretly cursing, "Damn you, Natravos! Why do you love tormenting yourself? You've got yourself killed, haven't you? But why do you have to drag us to death with you?"

In the meantime, due to the slowed time, the other side where changes happened more slowly had new situations.

When Dracula, the Night Dominator, extended his right hand that was wearing the white glove through the space-time that was as frozen as a cage, he snatched Lucien's chest steadily, accurately and rapidly.

The defenses around Lucien collapsed under the blast of Danisos' previous dragon-tongued spells and could not resist Dracula's attack at all. Also, he seemed to be reacting more inertly, and he was hit by Danisos precisely!

Hehe. I'll humiliate you a hundred times more than what you did to me!

Hardly had delight rose in Dracula's heart when his right hand that was covered in dark shadows felt empty.

Empty?

Dracula's crimson pupils constricted. He saw that Lucien suddenly turned illusionary and seemed to be spreading out in midair without any real entity. Therefore, his attack that was not attached to any extraordinary abilities completely missed the target!

"He has finished the status transformation?"

"Doesn't he always despise the primeval devils' status transformation?"

Shock and confusion proliferated in Dracula's heart uncontrollably, but he soon had a fixed answer. Lucien Evans' despise was a mere disguise, and he was actually no different from the Demogorgon of Darkness, the elven queen, the Master of the Boundless Ocean, Danisos, and himself!

The overwhelming and illusionary mist seemed everywhere, but it immediately collapsed and gathered into Lucien's body somewhere far away.

The moment he was gathered, Lucien summoned the projection of his demiplane before Danisos could perform the dragon-tongued spells and before Dracula could reach him through Night Travel, so that his cognitive world could affect the environment in reality.

The dark and boundless cosmos scattered the chaos of the Jungle of Demons. From the stars in different colors, an enormous fireball emitted intense light and heat. The dazzling light couldn't seem more real!

“No!”

Dracula screamed and avoided the enormous fireball subconsciously, with black smoke popping up from his body.

After he discovered the sun and the real cosmos, one of Lucien's Host Stars of Destiny was more and more like the real sun, and the sun was the bane of all vampires. Therefore, although it could not really hurt Dracula, it could weaken him and scare him off at the critical moment!

When Dracula was scared off, Lucien made an intricate, weird sound.

“Luxury Cracking!”

Crack, crack, crack, crack.

The defenses around Danisos were immediately broken. “Luxury Cracking” at the peak of legendary was truly intimidating!

However, Danisos wasn't panicking. His scales and his physical body alone were enough to block a top legend's attack. Therefore, he continued casting the dragon-tongued spell, hoping to trap Lucien and settle the labile factor as soon as possible.

Thanks to the acceleration of his spell-casting, his spells were completed quickly. At this time, he saw that Lucien, who was holding the silver pocket watch, was not solemn or vigilant at all. Instead, the guy put on a smile and looked at him in a rather pitiful way.

This is not right!

Hardly had the idea occurred to Danisos when a cold, hazy beam of moonlight found its way through the narrow windows, leaving a whole ground of dreamy silver on the floor.

Chapter 780: The Silver Moon's Announcement

The windows in Natravos' magic tower were in the classic style of the ancient Magic Empire. They were on the upper part of every level, narrow and unframed, as if they were directly embedded into the wall. The complicated panes formed all kinds of mysterious magic patterns.

Even during the day, the sun could barely reach into the magic tower because of the location and size of the windows and the blockage of the panes. As a result, the inside of the magic tower was always dim, dark, and horrifying, exactly like the impression of the ancient sorcerers in ordinary people's minds.

However, at this moment, the cold moonlight broke the everlasting dimness inside the magic tower, spraying pure and peaceful silver brightness on the fallen walls, the remains of the floor, and everyone's body.

The moonlight fell exactly on the place where Danisos was at. Having unfolded his body which was hundreds of meters long, he was flapping his enormous wings, spinning the rings of black scales, and opening his mouth to cast the unbelievably fast spells, when his back that was close to his head emitted a silver light under the moon.

Hooooooooo!

The primordial dragon of time's dragon-tongued magic was directly disrupted. His thick neck raised high, and he roared in extreme pain.

On his back, where the silver moonlight gathered, a beautiful "girl", whose blond long hair was tied on one side, appeared. Half squatting, she held a silver longsword and stabbed it into Danisos' back brutally, without the slightest emotion in her crimson eyes.

Where the silver longsword stabbed into, a cluster of transparent blood erupted, exactly like the famous spring in Rentato City Square.

When the blood dropped on the floor, it did not mix with the dust at all. Instead, it rolled on the ground like mercury, uncontaminated!

Hooooooooo!

Danisos' painful roar was his dying struggle. His body shook violently, and all his gray scales emanated ripples of light. The black circles that looked like rings expanded and stood up. Immediately, the space and time around him were slowed to the minimum. All the legends were slowed down as if they were performing a play. The mist and the bolts of lightning were frozen to a consistency like gel.

However, no matter how Danisos struggled and resisted, the light of the silver moon was still shining on his back, and the hazy, beautiful shadow was still squatting; her hands that were holding the silver longsword did not move at all. A black fire started to appear on the longsword, and unimaginably complicated symbols began to flow in it and inject into Danisos' body!

It was Alterna, the God of Silver Moon!

The Demogorgon of Darkness' eyes that were constantly changing colors were frozen. He was a top legend and the "master" of a demiplane, and he was far away from the battle. Therefore, he was not affected by Danisos' dying outbursts, but he could sense the condescending indifference directly. Even though Alterna did not look at him, a pair of crimson eyes popped up in his head coldly.

Goddamn Dracula, didn't you say that the Silver Moon was somewhere around the Boundless Ocean? Wasn't she conspiring with the Lord of Hell to deal with Pope Viken?

Also, why is the Silver Moon helping the Demogorgon of Eyes and the Six-Armed Inquisitor? I have three vampire princes on my side, who are her loyal supporters. Killing the enemy will not influence her at all! Even though she wants to save the werewolves, she doesn't have to be so intense, does she?

Judging from the timing of her attack, she seems to have been taking advantage of it all the time!

Gonheim had no doubt that the Silver Moon had arrived in person at this moment!

What should he do?

Ask Dracula to keep Lucien Evans occupied so that he could save Danisos and resist the Silver Moon together with him? As long as they could stop her for a couple of minutes, it would be enough for the “Mastermind” to arrive in the body of the Elder Mind and kill all the other legends.

However, Danisos had been directly hit by the Silver Moon’s Sword of Origin and Destiny. He would be disabled if not dead. How long could he stall the Silver Moon after he was saved? If Gonheim was mired here, he might be unable to escape!

So, should he give up the chance and run away immediately?

As the demon who was most similar to devils, Gonheim certainly had the nature of devils. He liked to consider the pros and cons. When there were greater dangers or temptations, he would abandon or betray his partners without any hesitation. As for contracts and oaths, he was certainly cunning enough to keep loopholes for himself. Besides, there were few witnesses who could guarantee such contracts. There might be no losses at all even if he betrayed him.

Thinking quickly, Gonheim weighed the risks and returns. Of course, he knew that it was an urgent matter and that he had to make up his mind quickly whether to run or to save his ally.

However, at this moment, below another narrow window, David, who had passed out because of the battle of legends, floated up. His hair became as silver as the moon, and he smiled at the Demogorgon of Darkness.

It was Rhine, the Observer!

Gonheim saw that David's face turned handsome and weird, with two enormous black bat wings unfolded on his back. He was exactly the Silver-Eyed Count!

"When did you replace him?" Gonheim asked solemnly.

David was an important part of his plan. So, he had corrupted the guy a long time ago. He stopped paying attention to him after Natravos was killed and asked him to deliver the message. Little did he anticipate that David would turn into Rhine at some point.

Rhine smiled but did not say anything. He raised his right hand, as if he were the conductor of a concert. Together with his movement, a tall and cold moon rose out of the narrow window behind him.

This time, instead of summoning the Silver Moon, he had created a moon of his own with his strength.

His strength had been greatly improved too... The Demogorgon of Darkness made a decision after seeing that. He had decided to surpass Rhine and escape back into the abyss.

Therefore, the darkness arrived. Weak, barely perceivable light raged inside, creating the frigidity that felt like the end of the universe. It was the lonely and lifeless darkness that did not have any temperature. It was the purest and most devastating darkness!

Rhine waved his right hand, and the symphony burst out. The moon collapsed from the sky into the darkness, releasing infinite brightness that filled up everybody's horizon.

When Gonheim fought Rhine, Lucien looked at Prince Dracula with a smile. "How could I have come if I had not smelled the Silver Moon?"

Dracula was both jealous and loath. Why did he not smell the air of the Primordial Ancestor when a human sorcerer could?

What have I done wrong?

In his fury, his body collapsed into countless bats that flew toward Lucien overwhelmingly.

Those bats were the size of the skull, with pointy, narrow, and bloody mouths. They looked hideous and terrifying.

Knowing that the bats that Dracula turned into could directly absorb energy, Lucien did not activate “Elemental Protection” but simply pressed the Moon Timer.

The Moon Timer was ticking when Lucien pressed it. Then, it immediately came to a stop after a crack. As a result, the colors around faded away, and everything was covered in lifeless grayness. Those bats became the bugs in ambers, frozen in midair.

Lucien did not perform “Luxury Cracking”, which was what he usually did, but he simply cast “Vengeful Gaze” that was attached with “Hand of Uncertainties”. His right eye became clear, reflecting the beauty of rubies before a ray of light shot out from it.

Lucien did so because Dracula was particularly good at “Night Travel” and resisting space-time consolidation. Even though he was not immune to “Advanced Time Stop”, the effect would be broken many seconds in advance.

Suddenly, the frozen bats were covered in shadows and collapsed where they were. In the lifeless grayness, the shadow of a sundial forged out of gold appeared. Every mark of time was a symbol made of different gems, and at the center was a narrow, long gold stick.

The shadow of the gold stick spun quickly on the surface of the sundial, and the frozen time and space were immediately back to normal. Dracula, in his black tailcoat and his red-and-black cape, appeared again. At this moment, “Vengeful Gaze” had already reached him.

Dracula’s face was livid, and his crimson eyes contained the deepest fury. He simply allowed the Vengeful Gaze to hit him.

However, the moment “Vengeful Gaze” touched his body, a lackluster fog rose. After a moment, the crimson rays vanished into thin air.

Was it the power of “Elimination”?

Lucien was rather shocked. Even though he knew that Prince Dracula was capable of depriving and robbing someone of one of their supernatural powers, he did not expect that he would steal “Elimination” too. The “sundial” with which he broke “Time Stop” just now was perhaps not an extraordinary item but a unique ability.

Although the stolen abilities would be one level lower than his actual level, it was not hard to imagine how terrifying Prince Dracula was when all of them were combined. No wonder he had always been among the top three on the Cleansing List.

However, Lucien was not scared at all. Faced with the enormous shadow that Prince Dracula turned into, he raised his hands with a smile.

“Eternal Blaze!”

Using Eternal Blaze in such an enclosed environment? Does he not worry that he might kill himself? Gonheim, who was attempting to flee, was greatly shocked.

He knew very clearly that Douglas’ “Eternal Blaze”, when performed with full strength, was as powerful as an attack of demigods. Since Lucien was not very far away from Douglas right now, and “Eternal Blaze” came from his legendary class and was deeply associated with his cognitive world, his “Eternal Blaze” would be no weaker than Douglas’. It was possible that it was as powerful as a real demigod attack!

The most dazzling light burst out like a small sun, but it was much less powerful than Gonheim imagined.

“No!”

Dracula screamed miserably under the pure and overwhelming sunlight. The shadow he turned into was gone, and terrible blisters appeared on his face!

After he reached the peak of legendary, Lucien’s control over “Eternal Blaze” had reached a very accurate level. He could control its power precisely. Just now, he only caused a minor “fusion” to make use of the high temperature, the rays of particles, and the damage of the sunlight. As long as the enemy was not at the center and not entirely defenseless, even a level-three legend could’ve resisted it. However, Dracula was different. As a primordial vampire, he hated “sunlight” more than anything else!

Hooooooooo!

Danisos roared in regrets. The black fire of void on the Sword of Origin and Destiny had already consumed him, drawing “symbols” one after another on his body.

Suddenly, Alterna drew the longsword out. Black fire spurted out of the fire as well as the void, igniting the magic tower, the chaotic jungle, and the whole demiplane!

The chaotic and corrupted air of the abyss was gone, and a bright moon showed up in the sky. Danisos, on the other hand, shrank his body and crouched next to Alterna’s feet.

Seizing the opportunity, the Demogorgon of Darkness took one of Rhine’s attacks the hard way and escaped back to the abyss.

Looking at the Demogorgon of Eyes, the Six-Armed Inquisitor, and the other legendary experts with her crimson eyes, Alterna announced solemnly, “I am your president.”

Huh?

All the legendary experts were stunned.

Chapter 781: Sending Away Politely

In the Jungle of Demons, the bright silver moon had driven the dark clouds in the sky away, but the moonlight had resumed to normal.

However, as the blond figure became clearer, the cold and lonely moonlight had cast over the entire magic tower and looked rather peaceful and quiet.

Beside Alterna's feet, Danisos had become as small as the size of Alferris, the Little Crystal, and there was a horrible lesion in his back. Chunks of flesh covered in black flames were falling to the ground, and thus the transparent and shapeless organs and the spine had been revealed. What was even worse was that half of his wings had been cut off and the bones were now visible.

If the unreal flame kept burning, Danisos, Dragon of Time and Luminosity, would for sure die soon, but the flame was now slowly dying. It would take him a long, long time to recover from such a horrible injury by Sword of Origin and Destiny.

At this time, he was lying beside Alterna's feet. Although well-known for his great life force, Danisos still had no idea how long it would take for him to recover.

Around him, drops of blood came together and formed a transparent lake in which his flesh and half wing were floating.

Watching the scene, hearing Alterna's serious announcement, none of them present, including Elder Mind and Dracula, could figure out what just happened.

Alterna had no intention to repeat, but her scarlet eyes stared at them who were all stupefied by the situation, as if she believed that they would understand somehow.

The air suddenly became somewhat weird.

At this time, Rhine had folded back his giant bat wings and smiled. "So what the Primordial Ancestor means is that our era is the most chaotic, dangerous, and lively one since the age of mythology. So here the Primordial Ancestor is, to lead us out of the thick fog...

“... All of you should have felt the imposing dangers surrounding us in this era. A legendary could fall at any time if he or she lowers her guard. No one could stay away from it even if you don’t want to be involved at all. Therefore, this is the worst era ever for you all...”

“... But the revolution of the world and power will also bring unprecedented opportunities. I believe that in the upcoming decades, we’ll have the most precious chance ever, which exceeds any opportunities in the past to further improve ourselves and to even transcend our own lives! But it all depends on if you can seize it...”

His silver eyes looked around at the extremely powerful legends and smiled. “... Therefore, this is also the best era ever for you all, and this completely depends on your choice. Facing the current situation, the disparate groups will for sure die, and the united groups will grow. We have to reform the Dark Congress just like what those sorcerers did to their own congress to secure our survival and more opportunities...”

He walked to the legends and asked in a cheerful tone, “Any ideas?”

Rhine’s lecture finally made them understand what Alterna’s announcement meant. Somehow, the “Silver Moon” had started wanting to reform and consolidate the Dark Congress and to be the president.

Therefore, taking advantage of the Danisos, Dracula, Demogorgon of Darkness, and Ogre’s plot, Alterna had defeated the primordial dragon and thus ruled out the legendary who was most likely to stand against her.

Dracula felt both disappointed and excited. What made him feel disappointed was that obviously, the Primordial Ancestor did not trust him enough; but what made him excited was that once the Primordial Ancestor became the president of the congress, he would be able to skip Rhine to summon her.

He touched the blisters on his face and took a deep breath. Then he lowered his head and said, “Your leading of the congress is our great honor.”

“We werewolves are always ready to serve you,” Dubenal said hurriedly before Sonite to show his loyalty.

Lucien was a bit amused. The werewolves were nothing more than big dogs.

The vampires and werewolves were the fastest to show their attitude. The rest of them needed a bit of time to think about it. The primordial dragons did agree on reforming the congress but on the premise that they should be the leader. And those Demogorgon of Eyes also had their own reasons to refuse.

They were weighing Rhine’s words. Indeed, this world was getting too dangerous. In the past, becoming a legendary basically meant endless life. However, the situation had totally changed now. Even if they just did nothing, they would still have to be careful not to be killed by someone else.

But this was just a beginning. When the powers were all ready after their plots worked out, to collect followers and resources, another War of Dawn might happen. At that time, anyone could fall!

Demogorgon of Eyes and the rest of the legends were never on full alert even after the death of the demon prince and what happened to the Master of the Boundless Ocean. They believed that in the Dark Mountain Range, they could always avoid any dangers in time. However, the siege that happened just now had finally warned them. Maybe coming together wasn’t something bad.

What was more important was that their president would be a demigod. They needed that strong power!

Rhine saw through the struggles in their mind, so he smiled and added, “What’s passed belongs to the past.”

Then they finally made up their mind, including Ogre and the six primordial dragons, because of the reasons above, and also because they did not dare to say no in front of the “Silver Moon”.

They could not take the risk no matter how many mysterious spells they knew.

They looked up at their president, trying to see the “Silver Moon” better and to show their loyalties.

At this time, Alterna turned to look at Lucien and pointed at the remains of the primordial time dragon, including some blood, flesh, and a wing.

“Your food,” Alterna said seriously.

Then she quickly turned around as if staring at the blood for too long would be too much of a temptation to her.

Somehow, the president doesn't appear to be very reliable, the legendaries thought to themselves. But soon, they realized that it was the president who defeated the primordial time dragon and did all the plotting, and those who believed that Alterna was unreliable perhaps had all been eaten by Alterna.

“We’re all very confident and much encouraged to have you, the ‘Silver Moon’, to be our president,” said one of the legendaries, and they saluted in great respect, with only Elder Mind hesitating a bit.

The pair of scarlet eyes stared at Elder Mind.

After a while, Elder Mind finally lowered his head and said, “Your wish is our will.”

If Danisos still got his back, Elder Mind would not have given in. However, there were now two top vampire legendaries, the congress had been united, and the “Silver Moon” had become the president.

Meanwhile, on the other side, the King of Nightmare had made up his mind heading for Allyn.

Lucien thought that the problem had been solved in a perfect way, but when he was collecting the time dragon flesh and about to leave, he realized that others did not think so at all.

“Mr. Evans, when are you leaving the Dark Mountain Range?” asked Cervantes seriously.

Lucien thought for a while and said, “I’ll pay a short visit to Mr. Rhine and then I’ll leave.”

Then Lucien heard many sighs of relief. Cervantes finally gave Lucien a sincere smile. “Then, take care.”

“I hope you don’t come here often,” said Ogre a bit resentfully.

Lucien did not think it was fear. They made the plot themselves, and it turned out that only Natravos was killed. He shouldn’t be the one taking all the blame and thus be called the “Embodiment of Misfortunes”!

...

In the Valley of Fiery Stone, Fitia, wearing the black magic robe of the ancient magic empire, saw Dracula coming back in a great rage.

“It failed?” Fitia asked, lifting an eyebrow.

Dracula told the whole story to Fitia and asked angrily, “You said the congress would be reorganized!”

Fitia grinned. “Am I wrong?”

“You!” Dracula’s dark red eyes were furious.

Fitia shrugged a bit and then squatted down to stroke the cat, Skoy.

Dracula stared at her for a while but finally managed to control himself. He complained in great frustration, “Why the Primordial Ancestor always, always trusts that b*stard more! Even a sorcerer is more trustworthy than me!”

The same cheerful smile remained on Fitia’s face. She had been used to this since a long time ago.

The black cat Skoy turned around proudly and swept Fitia's hand with its tail.

Chapter 782: The Age of Mythology

In Observer's Castle, Lucien stood in front of a row of bookshelves and was reading a book about the era ruled by dragons, in which different traditions and customs of the time were recorded.

The elegant study was well decorated, and the books on the shelves were well-organized. Except for the Age of Mythology, the books covered the rest of the past ages, even including the lost ones.

The study was not strange to Lucien, as this was the place where he took away Transformation Mask, but this time, the creepy garden and the magic plants could not intimidate him anymore.

Lucien read the book very fast because he had a spiritual library. Meanwhile, he was waiting for Rhine and the "Silver Moon" to come back. To reorganize and unite the congress, they would need to sign a formal agreement, and the witness would be their leader, the president.

Only the most innocent and inexperienced would expect that these top legendaries would bend their knees forever only because of the prestige and power of the "Silver Moon", as the power of the "Silver Moon" could not easily beat all the top legendaries if they should come all together. Therefore, a good way would be securing what they had for now and seek cooperation with those who were not resolute. Then they would eat away the opposite power bit by bit and gradually absorb their power, or the congress would still fall apart eventually.

The top legendaries were for sure still pissed, but they still chose to follow the "Silver Moon" because of their best interests. The fits of anger in their minds were not intense enough for them to risk all they had to fight against Alterna. Therefore, the reassembly of the Dark Congress had finally got a pretty good start.

After half an hour, Rhine, wearing a red vest and a black long coat, took his time and walked in the study.

"Where's the Hon. 'Silver Moon'?" asked Lucien, who was going to ask her about the Age of Mythology.

Rhine sighed. "She felt bored and then disappeared again. Maybe she needed to resist her gluttony. After all, there are quite some lovely 'desserts' in her eyes..."

Lucien did not know what to say. After all, a president who kept going missing wasn't a piece of good news to the Dark Congress...

Rhine smiled. "Don't worry. She'll be back when something big happens. You can count on her on that."

"Sir, can you please summon her? I've got some questions..." said Lucien.

Rhine walked to the desk and sat down. "We knew what you wanted to ask, so Alterna has told me all, and I'll be telling you."

"You knew?" Lucien was a bit surprised.

Rhine's silver eyes looked at Lucien, and there was a meaningful smile on his face. "The moment when you found the sun, Alterna knew you were coming. It's about the strange things in the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean, right?"

"Yeah... Normally speaking, the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean should be like the atmosphere in the way that it should never go around and around in the same place. Based on my model, it's almost impossible that this was naturally formed, so I guess that this has to do with the Age of Mythology. But I'm not sure..."

Rhine asked out of curiosity, "What model is it? How did you find it out? Viken even ignored it, as a demigod."

"... Sir, are you interested in Arcana?" Lucien said after a short pause.

Rhine made a fake cough and picked up the quill-pen on the desk. "Never mind..."

Rhine started looking serious as he said, "At the very beginning, Alterna's consciousness was only half-woken, so her sense of the world was rather blurry, like a dream. In Alterna's dream, the soul did not have to depend on a body but could be like some spirits, or like light walking over the surface of a dark lake. At that time, some magic creatures that owned some extraordinary powers started to grow stronger and stranger, but the initial intelligence did not yet take place."

Lucien listened very attentively. The progress of this world might not be identical to the evolving process of the earth, and this might be one of the most important clues for exploring the nature of this magic world. Lucien also believed that although the processes might be different, the rules hiding behind might still be the same. Perhaps the oddness of this world was caused by some other unexpected factors.

"When the Primordial Ancestor fully woke up and started walking on the land, many magic creatures emerged, and so did the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss. Out of their instinct, they launched bitter fights." Rhine did not directly explain the oddness of the Boundless Ocean but started from the general background of that era.

The ancestors of the magic creatures nowadays were born a long, long time ago, but at that time, they already had some extraordinary powers...

Lucien frowned slightly, but he then relaxed. Based on the studies conducted by the congress on the origin of the world, soil, and some fossils, it seemed that this kind of initial stage of power only had to do with soul power but not with the environment.

Lucien then noticed something strange. "At that time, there were only three demigods and there was no conflict in their interests. Except for the Will of Abyss, which would launch random attacks, it seems that the Lord of Hell and Her Hon. had no reason for fighting. And why were there only three demigods? How does this match the Age of Mythology?"

"When they were first born, the two demigods only had endless lives, but they had not mastered their own wills and powers, and they were greatly influenced by their instincts. The Primordial Ancestor once told me that there were many, many potential ones that could grow into demigods, but in the end, only three made it. The rest of them all failed, like the ancient elven tree, like Blue Gate. They were only half awake but never made it further.”

Rhine then added, “Then, when more intelligent creatures were born, some powerful ones started collecting their followers and became fake gods like what you saw in the dimension.

“... So in the entire Age of Mythology, the Will of Abyss kept killing and slaughtering, the Lord of Hell kept seeking for ways to grow more power, while the half-awake ‘wills’ were joining the Primordial Ancestor to fight against them. The fake gods were all trying to grow stronger and stronger by eating each other, and they thus were lured by the Lord of Hell and became its experiment subjects. The Lord of Hell could figure out why there were fake gods and what their powers were. In fact, the Lord of Hell gave it the name—the power of faith...”

Lucien rubbed his chin. “The Lord of Hell named it?”

“Yes, but in the end, the Lord of Hell got nothing, until the genius, Thanos, figured out a way to produce demigods by combining the ancient devil power and the power of faith and even the way of becoming a true god. I’ve been thinking that it was the Lord of Hell who purposefully released the information to Thanos in the first place,” Rhine said with his fingers crossed.

“Then how were the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss trapped out of the main material world?” Lucien did not rush into asking the oddness about the Boundless Ocean, as he believed that it should be about the same thing.

Rhine grinned. “The climax of this whole thing was a big-scale fight among those gods. In the fight, almost all of them fell. The ancient elven trees lost their wills, completely, and became part of the world. The Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss were sent into exile, and the Primordial Ancestor could no more walk on the land at her wish anymore.”

Even if very few of them survived, they must have all been killed by the World of Souls.

“Like how?” Lucien did not understand how they were restricted.

Rhine pointed at the sky above the Dark Mountain Range and said, “In the Age of Mythology, the Dark Mountain Range didn’t look the same as what we could see today. There weren’t that many space gaps. Instead, there were many stable channels heading for the other dimensions, and there was a demigod-to-be sleeping there, as well as in the deepest part of the Boundless Ocean. However, at that time, the depths of the Boundless Ocean and the Moonlight Ocean were like the atmosphere. You could keep walking further and further, but you just couldn’t ‘see’ how you came all the way.”

“Does this oddness start from the very beginning?” asked Lucien thoughtfully.

Rhine looked a bit confused. “At least since the Primordial Ancestor woke up. But earlier in the Primordial Ancestor’s dream, that place was less odd compared to the time after. Land could be faintly seen through the atmosphere. However, it was just one of the Primordial Ancestor’s dreams, and many of them have been proved wrong or twisted. Don’t take it seriously.”

Lucien slightly nodded and waited for Rhine to continue.

“At the end of the war, those half-awake existences including Blue Gate sacrificed their wills and helped the Primordial Ancestor twist the time and space, and thus the direct connection between the main material world and the dimensions were cut off. Only those space nodes were left for traveling. And the Boundless Ocean and the Dark Mountain Range became what we see today.

“... Also, because of this disconnection, the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss were kept away from the main material world as there were no stable channels, and it was the same for the Primordial Ancestor. Therefore, the Primordial Ancestor created the vampires and werewolves in advance and left me with the power to summon her. This way she can land at some key moments by breaking the limit,” said Rhine, who felt it totally fine with being used as a tool.

Lucien asked, "Then why were time and space twisted into this model? How did Alterna do this? Was there something... like a hint?"

"At that time, they fought and cast out their instincts. So out of instinct, the Primordial Ancestor felt that worked the best..." Rhine was sure that the Silver Moon wouldn't have been a mathematician there to solve the problem.

Lucien smiled. One of the biggest problems in his mind had been solved, and that had ruled out a possible hidden danger.

Chapter 783: A Year Later

In the Year of 829, the Month of Fire, in an alchemy lab in Babel.

On the walls, ceilings, and floor, there were magic patterns in different colors, shining, and together they formed a complicated magic circle that covered the entire lab, thus preventing any noise from sneaking in and reducing the blazing light.

The Robe of Grand Arcanists that Lucien was wearing still looked like a long, black suit, instead of the style of the ancient magic empire. Right now, the suit was slightly bulging to prevent the last remaining amount of harmful substances away from Lucien. While in the space, Lucien's cognitive world was affecting reality and a starry sky where element spots were floating, eating, and blending in anything tangible or intangible around.

Although Lucien had always been cautious about his experiments, with this one, he was even more cautious. It was because of his failure to upgrade Moon Timer using the materials he got from Danisos. Moon Timer remained at the same level. Lucien was also badly injured. It took him half a year to fully recover.

At this time, Lucien was confident that neither he nor Moon Timer would get hurt or damaged, but he was not confident that he could improve Moon Timer to level four and make it his fourteenth top legendary item. What was more important was that since the materials he had were very limited, if he failed a second time, he had to go to another dimension to find another space-time legendary item.

There was another option that Lucien could persuade. The "silver moon" could raise the ancient time dragon in a pen and turned it into an endless source for providing legendary blood, flesh, and bones. But Lucien never considered it as it would take the dragon too long to recover from it.

According to what Lucien knew, so far, Danisos still had not recovered back to the top legendary level from the fight a year ago.

It might take Danisos a few more years to recover from the fight, and Danisos probably had to spend another two to three hundred years to fully recover.

Therefore, Lucien was being extremely cautious about this experiment to upgrade Moon Timer. He did not even allow Natasha to stay in, as her destructive power in this lab had been quite considerable.

On the alchemy operation desk, the drops of pure blood were drawing a strange magic circle driven by Lucien's spiritual power.

At first glance, it looked very complicated. Even looking at it would make a sorcerer below the legendary level feel extremely dizzy, and the sorcerer would lose his or her spiritual power fast. However, for a sorcerer who had enough spiritual power, with careful observation, the special but simple pattern within could be identified.

It was just like those complicated words. When one understood the roots, remembering the words was no more complicated.

Lucien had sweat beads on his forehead. But in this fancy lab, the beads of sweat immediately disappeared in the air.

After a long time, Lucien finally finished drawing the last line. Instantly, the magic circle trembled slightly, together with the entire lab, as if there was something disturbing the space and time.

After this calmed down, Lucien processed the remaining wings and flesh and then put them on the tips of the magic circle.

After that, Moon Timer flew out of Lucien's pocket and then fell in the middle of the magic circle, covered in water-like light.

Influenced by it, the lines of the magic circle started wriggling onto the timer as if they were alive. The lines then connected to the hands of the timer and the constellation symbols on it.

During the process, Lucien's eyes did not even blink. Using all his spiritual power, he was still doing some minor adjustment.

Lucien released a sigh of relief. The first two steps going well meant that he could be more confident about the result. The previous failure came from a minor mistake that Lucien ignored, but in the end, it was amplified into a horrible result.

Staying focused, Lucien turned on the alchemy desk again. Immediately, all the energy of the entire magic tower gushed into the magic circle in the middle and overwhelmed it with the silver light, from which some light “fog” rose up.

It was using so much energy that all the crystal lights had gone off and the defense of the tower had been switched off. Pinocchio, the tower guard, had to turn on the backup energy pool.

The backup energy pool only lasted less than a minute, and the timer still needed a bit more time. At this time, Lucien reached out his right hand and pressed it against the operation desk. Using his own body, he was pouring his own spiritual power in.

Suddenly, splendid light burst out and filled the entire lab.

Tick, tick...

All the clocks in the magic tower started running fast like they were in a race. In Atomic Universe, Natasha, who was practicing sword using the element planets, also felt the extremely rapid elapse of time as if time were rushing to its end.

It worked? Natasha looked up at Babel tower. Since she became a level two legendary knight, it was the first time she felt such great changes in the environment.

Then, with a gentle click, the passage of time went back to normal. It just felt that time had passed a long time in the lab.

Lucien stared at the timer on the operational desk and believed that it now looked a bit different. Its light had become more conservative, and a new button appeared beside the original one for Advanced Time Stop.

Worked? Lucien was not sure.

Picking up Moon Timer, Lucien felt it with his spiritual power. It still felt familiar to him.

After a while, Lucien put the timer back into his pocket and finally smiled. His own legendary item had finally become the fourteenth top legendary item, and a new function had been added—Faster Cast!

Like Danisos' talent, it could double his speed for casting legendary spells!

However, Danisos could use the power without limit, while Lucien could only use it three times a day. But Lucien's casting time had been cut half, which made it equivalent to casting a common legendary spell.

Advanced Time Stop and Gravity Collapse had reached the top legendary level. Although Lucien could only use them five times a day, he was still very satisfied with the result, as he knew that with smart strategies, the power would be the key for him to win a fight!

Natasha also grinned, and she shared the joy with Lucien through electromagnetism messaging. She then returned to her practice, although such practice might not be able to bring much difference to a level two legendary knight.

What was going on recently made her feel extremely alert, so she had to seize every second to improve herself.

In the past year, it seemed that the entire situation of the world remained relatively peaceful, but this opinion was only shared by the common folks. In the eyes of the top legendaries, they knew something big was coming underneath the calm ocean surface.

The Dark Congress, the South Church, and the North Church never initiated a war in the past months. Instead, they were all targeting the countries ruled by fake gods north to the Dark Mountain Range. They were slowly eating in those countries and made them shrink further and further. A legendary level fake god could fall at any time.

The Lord of Hell had also done some achievements in uniting the powers in the Boundless Ocean despite the interference from the Congress of Magic and Elven Court.

.....

The sky was blue when Lucien walked toward Atom Institution. Today, his students, Heidi, Chelly, Lowi, and Alfalia, would be reporting their progress in “artificial intelligence”.

In the past year, most sorcerers were still working on digesting quantum theory, while the arcanists in the institution had already started converting the knowledge into their own powers. Among them, Annick was the first one who managed to make the breakthrough in his cognitive world and thus became a senior-rank, while Sprint, Heidi, and Lazar were also almost there.

Even those apprentices, including Lowi, had reached the fourth or fifth circle.

Suddenly, Lucien felt that the floor was slightly trembling. He knew that it wasn't from an explosion, but the “joy” of City in the Sky.

Lucien blinked to the core part of the city and saw the big smile on Fernando's face.

“Haha, finally! The stable nuclear fission reactor!” said Fernando in triumph, whose gray hair looked a bit messy.

Chapter 784: Commencement of the Revolution of Energy and Information

The magic circle where silver and black brightness entangled raised electric light, enveloping the matter at the center that was in the middle of fission. The overwhelming energy generated was transformed by the magic circles nearby into the energy that the City in the Sky could make use of.

The fission reactor this time was no longer fierce and untameable like before. Although it still contained grave dangers, it was now steady and controllable.

“Master, congratulations to Granny Hathaway, Mr. Raventi, and President Morris,” Lucien said sincerely. He had barely made any contribution to the achievement except for proposing the fission reaction and helping with the analysis of the self-explosion. It was the product of the wisdom of the four legends.

Such a fission reactor was designed in different ways from that on Earth. Since it was a combination of reverse engineering and regular research, many unknown dangers might be lurking in the middle, and one might suffer explosions and curses after one moment of carelessness. Therefore, no personnel below legendary were involved in the project. Because of the shortage of hands, Fernando and Hathaway dragged Raventi and Morris, two legends in the school of elements, into the project.

Fernando was smiling, but he snorted and said, “It should’ve been completed a long time ago. I was too idiotic and made many unnecessary mistakes.”

He did not even let go of himself when it came to rigorously demanding and habitually despising products.

“In any case, with a stable, enormous fission reactor, the City in the Sky will have a regular source of energy. It’s safe to say that this is a major breakthrough in our research on the energy well. The energy problem that shackled us before will be solved effectively.”

Lucien was rather glad to see the product.

Combing his messy hair, Fernando stared at the fission reactor with his slightly cloudy eyes. "Next, we will focus on the minimization of fission reactors. By then, artificial planets, airships, cosmic observatories, and the steam trains that are in need of powerful defense and attack magic circles will be given a powerful 'heart'."

By then, artificial planets and airships would be able to conduct attacks that consumed a great amount of energy, like electromagnetic cannons or laser beams. In a war, blockade would not only include the ground, the sky, and the space around, but also the cosmos... Lucien subconsciously thought of the paradigm shift of war. It would not be a dream to launch "meteorites" on the enemy's head without resorting to any sort of magic.

Also, for a magic world, minimization was much simpler than stabilization!

"However, the energy of the fission reactor was still not good enough. If we can achieve the controllability, stabilization, and minimization of nuclear fusion, all of us will be the Sun King," Lucien said humorously. "Also, many particle experiments in the microscopic domain can be put on the agenda right now. The super large collider that I proposed in the meeting of the Highest Council can be included in the secret projects of the Magic Research Board too."

In many projects of the microscopic domain, fission reactors were indispensable. They could provide many particles that could be found under normal circumstances, and they could directly participate in the experiments. Therefore, the stable fission reactor was the achievement that many researchers were in dire need of.

Lucien proposed the super large collider because the regular cyclotrons and colliding magic circles could not meet the demand of the senior-rank sorcerers.

"That's right. When we studied the nature of neutrons, I already discovered the importance of a stable reactor." The moment arcane studies were mentioned, Fernando became solemn and grave. Then, he said self-mockingly, “I didn’t know that neutrons of different speeds could result in such great differences...”

As he spoke, he was deep in thought. “The experiments on neutrons and protons give me the feeling that they are not necessarily fundamental particles. For example, the super heavy particle that can participate in the nuclear force is rather weird to me.”

In the past year, thanks to the new particle—muon—that Heidi discovered, more and more arcanists had devoted themselves to the study of cosmic rays. There were too many applicants in either the Atom Institution or the Tower, and it was anything but unusual to wait in line for three months. Among them, Annick discovered muons with a positive charge and those without charge, and Annonis of the Tower discovered a particle that was heavier than neutrons and protons. The new particle could also participate in the strong interaction—or to wit, nuclear force—and it had been named as “hyperon”.

“I never said that neutrons and protons are necessarily fundamental particles. At the very least, no theory so far can naturally lead to the conclusion. I’ve always described them as the internal structure of the atomic nucleus.” Lucien understood that his teacher was merely reminding him based on his keen instincts, in case the founder and pioneer of the microscopic domain would lose his head when the more fundamental particles were discovered.

He had to admit that as time went by, the grand arcanists and the legendary sorcerers were no longer following him blindly in microscopic research but had their own expansion after the digestion.

Seeing that Lucien was open-minded, Fernando stopped saying anything else. There were no experiments or phenomena that could directly lead to the question after all. It was only his arcana institution.

“Alright. I have to seize the day to discuss minimization with Hathaway.” Now that everything was settled, Fernando left the core of the City in the Sky in a hurry, as impatient as before.

“Minimization... That’s beyond the Earth level...” Lucien shook his head with a smile. It was both a beautiful and dangerous path. For example, would the minimized fission devices be easily damaged, and would there be ways to deal with the possible nuclear leakage? In that aspect, fusion devices were much safer. The explosion could only cause damages within a certain range. There wouldn’t be any long-term problems. It was clean and safe.

.....

The moment he returned to the Atom Institution, Lucien saw Heidi’s complaining eyes.

“Master, you’re late...” Heidi had been preparing her presentation in uneasiness for a long time, but her teacher, who usually arrived early, was late.

Lucien said in a good mood, “I was delayed by something unexpected. Let’s begin.”

Heidi removed her pretended complaint and walked into her own laboratory with Chelly, Lowi, and Alfalia. Lazar, Annick, Sprint, and the other arcanists who were in the institution followed them. For them, the monthly presentations always gave them something new, particularly in the fields that they were not good at. Therefore, even though Lucien did not demand them to participate, they still volunteered to join every time.

This time, Heidi and Chelly’s “artificial intelligence” was half the size previously. Although it was still huge, it was more or less acceptable right now.

Heidi turned on the power. Vague sounds of electric currents echoed, and the red and green lights flashed.

“After the test run last time, we found many problems and made the following improvements...” Naturally, the presentation was conducted by Heidi who was best at public speaking. She controlled “artificial intelligence” while she introduced the theory, the specific design, the modularized applications, the storage of programs, etc.

Although there was still a long way from real arcana studies, all of the audience could tell the mathematical ideas behind it and the simulation of human thinking thanks to Lucien's "torture". Also, the system where 0 and 1 represented everything gave them the deepest astonishment. It seemed to be a representation of the simplistic beauty and the nature of the world.

After Heidi's introduction, she looked at Sprint "provocatively". "Didn't you say that your mind calculated faster than our 'artificial intelligence'?"

Sprint had always been strongly confident, if not arrogant. So, he snorted and said, "Fine, if you lose, you will work as my assistant for one month, and if I lose, I'll do the same for you. However, you cannot give the tests."

As he spoke, he looked at Lucien. "Please give us a test, Master."

Lucien nodded and picked a difficult question that required the calculation of massive data. Then, he announced the beginning of the test with a smile.

The red and green lights flashed nonstop, so fast that nobody could distinguish them. The whole laboratory was turned into a ball. After four seconds, Heidi declared delightedly, "Here's the result!"

She had inputted with her spiritual power, so the input did not take much time.

Sprint raised his head and looked at Heidi in disbelief. After ten seconds, he finally said in a low voice, "I've got the result too. It's correct... Let's try one more."

It was not because he was a sore loser, but more like he was testing the limits of artificial intelligence.

Annick and Katrina gave tests this time, but Sprint failed even though he used the ancillary computation circles.

"Haha. Our artificial intelligence this time equals the computational ability of the senior-rank sorcerers. Also, it is better at processing massive data and long-term calculations than the senior-rank sorcerers are. Annick, you can give it a shot.” Heidi laughed gloatingly.

Annick did not bet but still joined the competition in curiosity. With the help of ancillary computational circles, when given tests that did not require the calculation of massive data, he had some wins against the “artificial intelligence”, but when it came to the massive data that had to be processed after a long time, he had to admit that the “artificial intelligence” was stronger than him.

“Very good. Congratulations on making a solid first step. You may submit the paper now. This should help you win a prize,” Lucien said with a smile.

The discovery of the new particle did not bring any honor to Heidi. Although she proved that the particle was not involved in the strong interaction and was not the predicted meson but a new particle, she was not given the Holm Crown Prize because the standard for the prize was much higher.

Heidi and Chelly both put on a brilliant smile and soon looked forward to the future. “Hathaway, Hellen, and Oliver are introducing part of the knowledge in the quantum field into the studies of magic crystals. Hopefully, there will be a major breakthrough. By then, ‘artificial intelligence’ will no longer be heavy and clumsy.”

At this moment, Sprint was keen enough to notice a weird icon on the screen, so he activated it with his spiritual power curiously. As a result, the picture on the screen changed, and a simple process where squares fell on each other showed up.

“What’s this?” Lucien raised his eyes with a half-smile.

Heidi and Chelly blushed. In the end, it was Heidi who stammered, “Master, it’s a little game to test the modules. We... We didn’t...”

“Okay, that’s good,” Lucien said without waiting for her to finish. He did not sound angry at all.

Huh? Heidi was immediately stunned.

Chapter 785: Distant View

Seeing how stunned and confused Heidi was, Lucien said with a smile, “I like to listen to and write music when I am free, and Mr. Oliver likes to watch and create plays. That’s essentially the same as you playing games. It’s just a form of recreation. As long as you are not addicted to it and your arcana studies and magic abilities are not affected, there will be no problems at all.”

Whether a thing was good or bad highly depended on one’s attitude toward it.

Heidi and the students were not exactly scared of being criticized by their teacher. It was just that Lucien’s criticism often came with a lot of “homework”, such as the studies on the quantum field theory and the exercises about the new products in mathematics. It was a nightmare that they could not forget for the rest of their lives.

“Rest assured, Master. We have only devised the game to test certain modules. We won’t be addicted to it.” Heidi promised Lucien on behalf of her team.

Looking at the game on the screen, Lucien had a lot of mixed feelings. Although it was rather shabby, it already had the looks of the game that he was familiar with. “Let’s call it Ally Tetris. As a matter of fact, game design is a good thing.”

Huh? Even the shy, introvert guys like Annick were surprised.

“Sorcerers need relaxation and entertainment too. Do you not feel that the regular ways of entertainment, like opera, play, concert, ball, and Arcana Voice, are too few?” Lucien said half-jokingly. As for hunting and the other activities that nobles liked, they were not very popular among sorcerers. “Also, it will help build up the image of arcanists and sorcerers. Think about it. If there is a game that simulates adventures so that ordinary people can play as sorcerers and sense how marvelous magic is when it is used to deal with monsters and in daily applications, they will be more and more into magic.”

Heidi's eyes beamed with interest, but she immediately frowned and said, "Even though the ordinary people can afford such games right now, the 'artificial intelligence' at present cannot support such a complicated game at all. Also, we are too busy with all the research programs in hand to design any other games. We have to continue the studies on magic crystals, and we need to try to melt alchemical life and artificial intelligence..."

"I'm not asking you to design it in person. There must be a hundred arcanists who are studying 'artificial intelligence' with you, aren't there? You can let them play a part. Also, the design of a game can be separated from magic. It's like writing a 'play' in the language of 'artificial intelligence'. In such a way, the job can be outsourced to the ordinary people who do not have talents in magic. You'll be creating new jobs for the kingdom," Lucien suggested casually.

"Outsource?" It was the first time that Heidi heard the notion, but she understood her teacher's meaning well. After all, her teacher was most famous for the terms that he invented. "In such a case, the simple modules can be outsourced too, but we have to devise courses... However, the most important thing right now is to improve the performance of 'artificial intelligence'."

Speaking of games, she suddenly remembered something else and asked in confusion and curiosity, "Master, the massive live stream screen was ready to be manufactured half a year ago, but why hasn't 'Arcana Voice' been live-streamed yet?"

Thanks to their studies on "artificial intelligence", the screen that could display images was invented very soon. Although a lot of efforts were spent on lowering the cost, maintaining the color, and reducing the size, and there were no products available for even the nobles yet, the large live-stream screens could already be manufactured and deployed in the squares of important cities. Thankfully, there weren't many such squares, so the Congress of Magic could still afford it. Heidi had also obtained abundant revenue through the patent from it.

"'Arcana Voice' is a radio channel. All the programs have been designed for the sound-only feature. Now that the screen displays images, many programs are no longer appropriate. So, we have to devise new programs. The interviews, interpretations, and music shows can be live-streamed, but not the others. Otherwise, why would we bother to use images? To see what the storyteller looks like?" Lucien had been teaching the Sky Radio Station new concepts and recruiting new workers.

Some of the new recruits were even ordinary people without any magic talents, but they were smart and had the most creative ideas.

Heidi understood what her teacher meant and nodded with mixed feelings. "I wonder when we can see the first real live stream..."

"Perhaps, it will be sooner than you expected..." Lucien smiled subtly.

...

A few days later, at the beginning of the Month of Scorch (August), in the city square of Rentato...

A white pillar of water erupted to the sky from the pool made of stones and fell to all directions like a waterfall, raising spindrifts on the clear water. It was noisy and loud, but no one around was upset. They even approached it, trying to drive away the heat on them.

On the opposite side of the famous spring was a weird enormous screen. It was transparent and complicated, and unique parts could be vaguely seen inside.

"Why do you think there have been no live streams when the screen has been established for five months?" A citizen asked Longman, his child.

Longman was much taller than before. As a student of the fourth grade in the first generic school, he was already a knowledgeable scholar in the eyes of neighbors and friends. Although he lacked extraordinary talents in magic, he was praised by his teacher for distinguished mathematical aptitude. Longman's parents were very proud of him and subconsciously considered their kid as a scholar, asking him whenever they had a question.

“‘Live stream’ is not an activity, but more like a program like ‘Arcana Voice’...” Longman explained according to what he learned in school.

Right then, the enormous screen suddenly emanated gentle brightness.

“It’s glittering! It’s glittering!”

“There’s a live show?”

“Why didn’t ‘Arcana Voice’ announce it?”

In the square, everybody became noisy as the place was filled with confusion and excitement.

Longman and his parents ended the discussion and focused their eyes on the screen.

What would the live show be? They really looked forward to it!

After the enormous changes brought by the development of arcana and magic, the citizens of Rentato lived every day in shock and delight, so they all looked forward to the unexpected live show.

As the light stabilized, two figures appeared on the screen, one male and the other female.

The female had long hair and was wearing a long dress. The citizens who still remembered the last live stream well recognized that she was Ms. Nightingale. The male, on the other hand, was a typical Holmish man, with black hair, blue eyes, and a mustache that represented his manhood. He was wearing a neat tuxedo as if he were going for dinner.

“Hello, everyone, I am your old friend Nightingale. This is an experiment on live streaming, so it was not announced in advance in ‘Arcana Voice’. Now, you will witness the first live stream from the satellite television channel of Allyn.” Fearing that she was too nervous, Louise had cast a ‘Mechanized Mind’ on herself. She said with a sweet smile but was not really smiling, “The gentleman sitting next to me is also your old friend. He is Mr. Caron, who is the host of 'Man and Nature'."

"Man and Nature?" Longman and the other citizens watched the screen enthusiastically, wondering why Mr. Caron was asked to co-host with Ms. Nightingale.

Caron said with a smile, "I'm too nervous to say anything right now. So, let's start today's 'Man and Nature' immediately."

The moment his voice fell down, the transparent "glass" behind them released a gentle light that filled the screen.

As the light gradually faded, a green, refreshing meadow appeared before the eyes of the audience.

The meadow seemed boundless. Wherever their eyes could reach, everything was green, and a hideous monster with three horns was lurking in the grasses, having no idea that it was being observed by hundreds of thousands of humans.

"This is..." Longman looked at the screen, shocked at the unimaginable meadow. He had never seen such a broad meadow and such refreshing greenness.

The shock spread out in the hearts of everybody in the square. Jane, Ali, and Banus, wherever they were, were shocked from the bottom of their hearts after seeing the view of the meadow. It was more magnificent and beautiful than they could ever imagine.

"This is the prairie south to the desert in the Gusta Empire..." Caron interpreted it with his magnetic voice.

Was this a prairie?

Was it the south of the Gusta Empire?

For most people in the four kingdoms of the strait and the north coastline, the furthest places that they went to in their whole lifetimes were the cities next to them. The Gusta Empire was almost a different world for them. So, they never thought that they could witness a prairie in person.

So, that was what it looked like!

The three-horned monster lurked in the grasses carefully under public observation, before it lunged out and bit a lone goat in its neck!

“Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!” The clear image made everybody exclaim in shock!

Longman, on the other hand, had only one idea in his head. That was arcana... That was magic... They turned the impossible things possible and allowed ordinary people to see the faraway scenery without leaving their hometowns!

Chapter 786: Journey of Discovery

Chapter 786: Journey of Discovery

The prairie that looked entirely different from the four kingdoms of the strait and the north coastline and the creatures on the prairie with every detail manifested were demonstrated in the eyes of the audience, leading the audience to enjoy the exotic view and the unprecedented dinner for the eye.

For the people who probably had never left their own city or kingdom, such a view fascinated them, as if their souls were truly placed on the prairie. They were overwhelmed by the vast, refreshing view, shrieking and roaring at the predation on it.

In the Mills School of Nobles, the same screen stood at the central square. The noble students who had just finished their night classes were attracted to it. Then, their feet seemed to have been glued on the ground, making it impossible for them to move.

“Is this the prairie?” Jane, who had always been calm and quiet, looked at the greenness on the screen, which befitted all her romantic fantasies about the prairie in her reading. So, she mumbled uncontrollably. However, the experience this time was much lesser than that during her visit to space.

The noble friends next to her expressed their shock too. Even though their families had villas, manors, forests, and hunting grounds, there weren’t any such boundless prairies in Holm. That was the unique enticing view in the south of the Gusta Empire on the opposite side of the Storm Strait.

However, since they had enjoyed many beautiful views, their horizons were much broader than the common citizens. They were not entirely overwhelmed or lost, and they were still communicating with each other in a low voice.

“The live show this time is too surprising. Before, I only felt that ‘Man and Nature’ was fun. I never knew that it was so astounding until today.” The noble ladies were more or less romantics.

“This is not a live show. As Ms. Nightingale said before, it’s a satellite television.” Jane’s friend corrected her opinion and pressed her face, feeling that her cheeks were burningly hot. She said with a dreamy tone, “How I wish to go to the prairies, sit on the wild horses, and watch the setting sun dye the green grasses red. Jane, was the view in space even more splendid than this?”

Although they had repeated the topic many times, the boundless space was the forever romance.

“Yes. Stars were much more beautiful than on the ground. They were pure, clear, and some of them had beautiful halos...” Jane tirelessly described the scene again. What she saw and heard was deeply etched into her brain.

Without them knowing it, “Man and Nature” was over, and the picture was back to the studio. Nightingale smiled and said, “Starting from next Monday, ‘Man and Nature’ on ‘Arcana Voice’ will be stopped, and it will be aired in the Sky Channel of the Allyn Television Station. Correspondingly, we will have significant improvements and adjustments on other programs so that broadcast and satellite streams can carry out their own advantages. In the next show, you will see a brand new show that solely belongs to the Sky Channel and is different from any shows in the past. It will bring you a new and marvelous experience.

“My friends, are you ready?”

Ms. Nightingale’s sweet voice entered the ears of every member of the audience, waking them up from the shock brought by the world of grasses and animals. Even the most experienced adventurers had barely been to the Gusta Empire and the southern prairie. Naturally, they were fascinated too.

“What brand new show?”

“Can there be any show that is more exciting than the prairie?”

Nightingale’s words filled Longman, Jane, and Ali with curiosity and expectation.

Nightingale continued, “If you are ready, let’s begin a journey of exploration!”

The gentle light appeared and slowly disappeared. A blue ocean showed up on the ocean. The waves were surging, and the seabirds were flying up and down.

“Ocean!” It was still a major shock for the ordinary people who had never been to port cities, but having just appreciated a prairie, they were much less shocked than just now. It seemed no different from “Man and Nature” just now although the scene was different.

For the noble descendants like Jane, even if they had never traveled on a ship, they had visited the coastal cities like Padrey Port and enjoyed the freshness of the ocean. So, they were relatively calm. They talked to each other in confusion, “Is this really as good as Ms. Nightingale described?”

“No, I don’t think it’s a brand-new experience either.”

Looking at the screen, Jane was rather confident. For all these years, “Arcana Voice” never disappointed her. She trusted that “Sky Satellite TV Station” wouldn’t either!

At this moment, the camera drew close, revealing a steamship before everyone’s eyes. Eight magic cannons that were attached with the effect of Lucien’s Fireball pointed at all directions magnificently. Then, the camera drew even closer so that the audience could see the two males and two females on the deck.

“This is the ocean near the Sinel Island. We have accepted a contract with the islanders to investigate the floating dead fish that often occurred in the ocean recently...”

“In the Sinel Island, there’s a story that goes like this. Many, many years ago, this place used to be the territory of a sorcerer, but he never appeared again after a certain day. From that day on, the islanders have been hearing appalling cries and seeing green fire floating on the ocean all the time. Sometimes, they are lost for days when they go out fishing. It is said that when the fishermen are lost, they will see a ‘lighthouse’ that they have never seen before in the event of a storm...”

As the magnetic male voice continued, Longman, who was still a teenager, had goosebumps all over his body. Was it a horror show?

“This ‘Journey of Discovery’ will be conducted by two middle-rank sorcerers and two grand knights. They will unravel the possible cause of the mysterious incident and look for the treasures behind it...”

After the narrator was done, the tough-looking middle-aged man on the deck cleaned his classic magic robe and said, “I’m Grilles, and I’m good at illusion, necromancy, and elements. I am the captain of this Journey of Discovery. We are about to reach the Sinel Island.”

Investigate a mysterious incident, explore the magic tower that possibly lingered, and search for the possible treasures... Longman, Jane, Ali, and the other ordinary people who never had any adventure before felt that their hearts were bursting. Their eyes were focused and excited, and they were completely focused on the program. What could the cause have been? Could they find it out? Would they run into any danger?

As for the adventurers, the noble knights, and the sorcerers, although they had similar experiences before, they had never been through a journey from such a perspective. So, they were also enthralled.

As the steamship reached the Sinel Island, the sorcerers, knights, apprentices, and squires dispersed and asked the islanders for clues. Those scenes were displayed to the audience in an orderly fashion. They were more and more devoted and even began their own analysis in a low voice, proposing possible answers and pointing out the self-contradictions in the islanders’ testimony now and then.

In their investigation, Grilles and the other sorcerers used magic to help themselves, solving the problems that the audience thought tricky easily. They were so astounded that they couldn’t have admired magic more.

Half an hour into the program, and “three days” later in local time, the investigation reached a preliminary conclusion. All clues led to certain waters.

“Therefore, we need to explore the bottom of this part of the ocean...” While talking, Grilles cast ancillary spells such as “Underwater Breathing”, leading the other three middle-rank professionals into the ocean.

“They... They are really going into the water...”

“Are they really going to explore it?”

Exclamations of shock echoed now and then. None of the audience could believe that they would witness a real adventure.

The water around shook softly, and both common and bizarre fish swam by quickly, dazzling the audience. Occasionally, fierce sea monsters came at them, only to be finished by the knights and sorcerers easily.

Even a serene girl like Jane couldn't help but feel that she was palpitating. Although she lived a peaceful life and disliked changes, she more or less had adventure fantasies, and since such fantasies could be experienced without her taking any real action, she was naturally attracted by it. She was amazed by the splendid spells and scared by the sea monsters that popped up out of nowhere. Her feelings were fluctuating more intensely than ever.

It was exactly the feeling that more members of the audience shared. So, when the shabby, broken magic tower at the bottom of the ocean appeared, all the squares were filled with cheers after gasps.

The magic tower was opened, but the golems at the gate suddenly lunged at the strangers, raising rounds of exclamations...

Slow, Ice, Fireball, and the other spells were cast, leading to praises and compliments...

Ghosts, secret chambers, treasure boxes, and traps appeared one after another. The atmospheres on the squares were almost frozen. Everybody was looking forward to what would happen next.

After Grilles finished the last monster and destroyed the magic tower, a wind suddenly blew on the square, causing everybody to gasp at the same time. Their palms were sweating, and their expressions were twisted. Excited and scared, they learned what the “new and wonderful experience” was through the unprecedented journey and exploration.

“‘Arcana Voice’ is too boring compared to satellite TV...” Longman’s father said sincerely.

Longman agreed with him, but he was reluctant to admit it. “Some programs are more suitable as radios, like those which you have to listen to with full attention...”

“This is much more thrilling than plays, operas, and the bards’ stories!” The common audience in the city square and the noble students in the Mills school remarked in the same way in excitement. It was an authentic “adventure” without any disguise!

“Even Earth does not have such reality shows...” In the Atomic Universe, Lucien, who was watching the “TV show” with Natasha, Grand Duke of Orvarit, Joel, Alisa, and John, had a lot of mixed feelings. “Even though broadcast hasn’t been popularized here... Should I invent a ‘Wilderness Survival’ or ‘A Bite of Holm’?”

Chapter 787: Incessant

After the Journey of Discovery, the picture on the screen was not switched back to the studio like just now. Instead, a pure and blue sky appeared together with the melody that everybody was familiar with.

In the center of the sky, a shuttle-shaped metal object was floating. It was streamlined and bright-colored, giving a strong visual blast.

“What is this program?”

“Are they going to let us experience flying?”

Having just been through the “prairie” and the “ocean” just now, the audience talked to each other in confusion and speculated the possible outcomes excitedly.

“Creative appearance design, state-of-the-air energy transformation circles, unparalleled speed, and indestructible life defense...” A magnetic male voice introduced the aircraft with great passion, while the aircraft in the sky changed its posture nonstop according to his words, demonstrating its unique magic effects.

All the audience was stunned. The world of aircraft was too far away from them. Also, the gentleman described it so perfectly that even the small nobles did not seem able to afford it.

The aircraft in the sky descended and descended, until a city appeared down below. The view of the city was getting clearer and clearer, and the square that was jam-packed with people could be clearly seen.

The square was as full as if a black torrent were flooding in, whereas the sky where the aircraft was at was spacious and empty. It was a major contrast.

The aircraft stopped above the square and looked down upon the crowd that looked like ants, which made the viewers who were sharing the vision of the aircraft somehow feel that they were high and mighty. However, when they realized that they were actually the people who were being looked down upon in the square, they felt rather complicated.

Was it the perspective and perception of those grand nobles?

The picture was frozen there, and the magnetic male voice roared, “‘Reton’ Model III is the aircraft most worth buying in 829. Call XXX to place an order anytime...”

It was not until then that the audience, who had listened to “Arcana Voice” and other radio programs for years, finally realized that it was a commercial. Even commercials could be so entertaining!

When they recalled how it felt like to fly an aircraft, and when they realized its price, which must have been extremely high, many young people were both frustrated and ambitious. One day, I will be successful, and I will look down upon everybody on an aircraft at the peak of my life!

Clenching their fists, they somehow remembered the grand nobles who already had all kinds of aircraft and the privileges of nobles that had existed all the time. They suddenly had a lot of complicated feelings.

“Coming next is ‘Sports Time’. We are going to present to you a flight contest between Allyn Magic School and Paphos Owl Magic School. In the contest, flight skills, aircraft, magic brooms, magic pets, and other regular methods to assist flying are allowed. The judge designated by the Arcana Review Board will score the contestants according to their performances in their flight, which will have a lot of obstacles, as well as the time it takes for them to finish the trip...” This time, it was another host doing the interpretation.

Thanks to the popularization of newspapers and radio stations, none of the audience was a stranger to flight contests, which had been held in magic schools for a long time. However, all their understanding was based on words and voices. They never knew what such games really looked like. Therefore, they were greatly attracted by the program, even secretly blaming the sorcerers, whom they dare not slander on other occasions, for not being fair enough.

Time went by fast in the new and amazing programs. When “Nightingale” announced that the satellite stream this time was over, the crowd in the square was reluctant to leave for a long time. They stared at the screen greedily, hoping that the next release would be aired right now miraculously.

“Why is it only aired once a week...” Longman’s parents and all the other ordinary people around remarked. They were full of regrets and desires.

“Journey of Discovery” and “Chronicles” were Longman’s favorite programs. Mesmerized, he said pitifully, “Didn’t Ms. Nightingale say that the programs today are not enough for everyday streaming? When there are enough shows, we will be able to watch them every night...”

Today, “Chronicles” was a black-and-white documentary named “War between Wave and Particle”.

It faithfully recorded the “war” that lingered for hundreds of years. Starting from the question “are light and spiritual power waves and particles?”, the documentary introduced the beginning of the debate during the Magic Empire, the arcanists’ pursuit of truth, the classic and marvelous experiments, and the miserable arcanists who fell before the problem.

The big shots whose heads exploded and the pitiful experts who were never heard again after their cognitive worlds were broken and solidified highlighted the difficulties and devotion in the development of arcana.

This documentary made the general people realize the wonder of arcana itself after it was separated from magic. They couldn’t have admired the arcanists who explored the nature of the world more.

I wonder what happened after the first War between Wave and Particle, and how everything ended as it is today... Longman thought in a trance. It was much more magnificent than “A Brief History on Magic and Arcana” that he read at school. He looked forward to the following episodes of the documentary...

Longman’s father suddenly burst into laughter. “Harriton spent all his money on a magic radio so that he could listen to ‘Arcana Voice’ at home, only to miss ‘satellite streaming’ as a result.”

He laughed rather happily. Because of Longman’s mathematical talents, he had always tried to save money for Longman’s further education in the future. Even though his son had no extraordinary magic talents, there would still be improvements as long as he could distinguish himself in arcana. He did not hold the wish that Longman could become a senior-rank sorcerer and a real big shot, but he did hope that his son could become an official sorcerer.

So, after his neighbors and friends bought magic radios and stopped coming to the square, he always felt bad about himself.

“Really? I feel sorry for them. It’s such a marvelous program and such a new and wondrous entertainment...” The audience nearby repeated what Ms. Nightingale said. Then, they sighed. “This screen must be much more expensive than the magic radio. Only the real nobles can afford them. Perhaps we will have to be gathered in the square for a long time in the future...”

.....

“Even Mountain Paradise can’t be more incredible...”

“Can it be aired every day?”

It was what Joel, Alisa, and Grand Duke of Orvarit said before they left. They were deeply captivated when they watched the satellite TV. Joel even felt the urge to create songs after “Journey of Discovery”.

“Appreciating the social changes brought by arcana has become a hobby that’s as important as music for me...” Natasha was also quite interested in some of the programs on satellite TV. Then, she went to the room of seclusion to practice in quietness. It was a way of exercise that Lucien proposed. Since the three lonesome years at the bottom level of the abbey helped her really grasp the melted blood power, it meant that the way of training was as good as fighting. He suggested for her to seclude herself for three days every month.

Lucien walked into the library and picked up the journals on the desk, finishing the parts that he failed to earlier.

Then, Lucien took over “January Arcana Review”. Through the excerpt journal, he briefly learned the research progress in all the magic schools in the past month. It was because other than the mainstream journals such as Arcana, Magic, Nature, Elements, Astrology, etc., most of the journals contained papers that were of some value for other people but useless for Lucien. Reading them carefully would be a waste of his time. Therefore, he browsed through them through the excerpt, and if he found any paper he was interested in, he would find the original journal and read it more carefully.

“January Arcana Review” was in a unique force. On every page, the left side was the title, abstract, and keywords of the article, and the right side was the comment from the Arcana Review Board so that the readers would understand the basic content and value of the paper as soon as possible.

“Some Points on the Gauge Field?” Lucien suddenly found a title that he was interested in. He read the abstract and the comment, before he found out from the journal where it was published and read it more completely.

To put it unprofessionally, the gauge field was a theory that hoped that physical laws did not change because of the different measurement standards in every space-time point. Somebody had studied it in the classic electromagnetic stage. After Lucien, Fernando, and Brook established the quantum field theory, some arcanists naturally followed up.

Lucien appreciated the theory because of its future brilliance. The standard particle model was exactly founded on it, and the marvelous “God particle” was only meant to resolve the problem that certain particles in the model did not carry mass when they were still like photons.

After reading the paper and finding no groundbreaking achievements, Lucien continued reading January Arcana Review.

“On the Symmetry of Microscopic Particles and Its Confirmation?” Lucien found another paper he was interested in. It was the product of a middle-rank arcanist, who believed that microscopic particles and their “mirror” particles corresponded with each other according to symmetry except that their spins were opposite. He proposed detailed mathematical and arcana standards, which he had named “conservation of parity”. He also proved that such symmetry did exist through a series of experiments.

The comments of the two members of the Arcana Review Board were basically the same. “Symmetry is a representation of the beauty of arcana and the fundamental law of the universe. This paper has little practical value, but his experiments and new concepts can help us learn more. So, he will be rewarded with four arcana credits and thirty arcana points.”

The author of the paper seemed satisfied with the comment. He also divided the paper into two parts in order to claim more rewards from the journal.

“Conservation of parity...” Lucien suddenly felt that he was in the wrong time and space. He tapped the journal softly.

At this moment, Pinocchio announced that Douglas had come to visit him.

“Mr. President, what brings you here at such a late hour?” Lucien greeted him in confusion.

Smiling, Douglas said, “I’m ready for the advancement right now.”

Chapter 788: Entrusting and Scheming

“Advancement into the demigod stage?” Lucien was truly surprised this time. It had been only slightly more than a year, and the president was all set?

Douglas said with a smile, “When you discovered the sun, my preparation was almost done. I spent most of the last year confirming the existence of the sun and melting the feedback of the truth of the world with my own research products to deploy ancillary magic circles. Opening the gate of demigods actually does not need any special legendary materials. It’s the accumulations in the past that matter, like the solidification of the cognitive world, the real connection with the Host Star of Destiny, etc.

“Therefore, as long as the nature and the key of the ancillary magic circle are found, the deployment will be relatively simple. I estimated that it would take three to four years, but it’s much shorter than that.”

It was similar to the magic circle with which Thanos and Viken became demigods. No special legendary materials were required. As long as they completed the status transformation and accumulated enough power of feelings and faith, the preparations could be accomplished rather easily. The long time to gather the power of faith and the feelings could be saved.

As he spoke, Douglas smiled peacefully and gently, not having the excitement and anxiety of someone who was about to try to break into the demigod level. He was not even as thrilled as he had been when he learned of Lucien’s discovery of the sun a year ago.

“But wouldn’t it be too hasty?” Although Lucien was proud of his rationality and decisiveness at the critical moments, he couldn’t help but hesitate at such a moment.

Douglas shook his head with a smile. “All the preparations that should be done have been done. Making the attempt right now and doing so ten years later will be no different. You should remember that it's been almost three hundred years since I reached the peak of legendary. I've come to you because I am not entirely reassured. Brook is smart, cautious, and open-minded, but he prefers to be devoted to his own studies. He is not very suitable to lead the Congress. Fernando and Hathaway, on the other hand, have major deficiencies in their personalities and are even less suitable. So, if the attempt fails and I don't survive, I hope that you can lead the Congress, Lucien."

He roughly analyzed the other three top legends and looked at Lucien earnestly.

"Mr. President... You'll certainly be fine," Lucien said subconsciously. Then, he said solemnly and sincerely, "The Congress will never die as long as I am alive."

Douglas smiled in satisfaction and patted Lucien's shoulder. "Then, I'll have to ask all of you to protect me during my attempt."

"Protect you? That's not a problem. Mr. President, are you going to make the attempt in an alternate dimension?" Although there were no records about the unusual phenomena when somebody broke into the demigod level, Lucien had no doubt that it would be quite noisy, considering how the advancements of the previous major levels behaved. Also, he had concluded that Thanos must have accomplished the advancement in an alternate dimension or his own demiplane.

That was why the legends of the Magic Empire did not sense anything. Behind every door of the Realm of Gates was an independent alternate dimension. Viken could have fooled Maskelyne and the rest of them.

However, Douglas' advancement was different from them. He needed the cognitive world and the demiplane, the real environment that corresponded with his cognitive world. It was obvious that he could not complete it in his demiplane. So, he could only go to alternate dimensions or places like the World of Souls. Also, if it was too eye-catching and took too long, Pope Viken, Maltimus, and the pontiff would certainly come to hinder him.

Douglas said rather helplessly, “My advancement is based on my cognitive world and my own demiplane, and I have to grasp the Host Star of Destiny in order to melt its projection in the soul completely with the soul, the cognitive world, and the demiplane. This process will be much more difficult in alternate dimensions and the World of Souls. So, I can only choose the main material world and count on the defense of Allyn.”

“How long will it take? If it’s short, there will be no time for Viken to come, and we only need to take care of the Lord of Hell. Three top legends should be able to stop him with the defense in Allyn.” Lucien became rather solemn. Faced with demigods, the Congress of Magic had no problem in defending itself, but it was unable to put up any counterattack.

Douglas sighed and said in a self-mocking smile, “As the legend who tries this path for the first time, I can only roughly estimate that it will take ten to forty minutes. It’s hard for me to predict what will be caused in which phase.”

The Congress of Magic didn’t have any systematic research on the unusual phenomena yet.

“We can only assume that it will take forty minutes... I believe that the Silver Moon will be happy to have one more reliable ally. After all, Viken has the platinum staff and the key to master the power of ‘Mountain Paradise’. I’ll pay another visit to the Dark Mountain Range,” Lucien analyzed the situation. “However, we need to be prepared that somebody would release the Will of Abyss during the mess...”

Alternia would stop Pope Viken, and the three top legends would stop the Lord of Hell. It should be enough provided that there were no other emergencies.

Douglas became rather solemn. “I’ll go to the Dark Mountain Range with you and talk to the Silver Moon face to face.”

Having carried the Congress of Magic to move forward for hundreds of years, he was not a person who considered his pride to be above everything, and he knew that he had to show his own sincerity if he wanted to ask for somebody else's help.

"Alright." Lucien nodded his head but hesitated for a moment. "Although it's been only five years since Viken turned into 'Benedict III', and he hasn't entirely recovered, we know that the real reason that he hardly uses 'God's Arrival' is the irrecoverable physical exhaustion and the fear for Monster Viken. When the critical moment comes, he certainly will not hesitate to use anything. So, we should be braced for 'God's Arrival'."

"Do we have to find a way to distract Viken so that he cannot arrive in time to stop us?" With Douglas' wisdom, he naturally had plenty of plans, such as attacking the alternate dimensions that were under the control of the Church, acting as if they could save Monster Viken.

Thinking for a moment, Lucien hesitated and said, "Perhaps there's a better way..."

...

In the praying room of the Saint Geno Church...

"Saint" Clement was repenting before the cross quietly. Last time, he went to the Chaotic Cosmos to take the Time Plate under the instruction of Mecantron, only to run into Lucien and almost get consumed by the high-energy storm created by the Positron Cannon. Thankfully, the Lord of Hell, who had been conspiring with him, saved him from the disaster. He was terrified for a long time after he learned from the Lord of Hell that even Mecantron was almost killed.

Unlike Mecantron, who was a container that The Angel King prepared for himself and who would be reborn in the light of the Lord as long as Mountain Paradise existed, he would've been completely killed if he had been touched by Lucien's terrifying legendary spell!

He learned the truth of Mecantron's resurrection from the Lord of Hell.

“I have gathered almost enough ‘Power of Virtues’, but I still need a ‘container’...” The Book of Virtues, which Clement acquired from the Angel King, replaced the power of negative feelings with positive symbols such as honesty, so there were not as many problems. He did not need to capture another legend as his container and could use the utensils made of special materials.

Those were the two branches that Thanos and Viken created while they perfected the path to the demigod level. The difference was because Thanos started from scratch and was, therefore, not restrained by negative feelings and primeval devils.

“But the materials I need are difficult to collect.” Clement thought rather regretfully and said, “I could’ve used Geno’s body as the ‘container’ if he hadn’t died a long time ago and only left his power and godhood behind... Why have I inherited the power of Geno, instead of that of Saint Ivan or Saint Felix?”

When he was sorry about himself, the suburb of San Ivansburg was enshrouded in darkness.

San Ivansburg in the late autumn was already as cold as the winter in Allyn. It was particularly freezing at night.

On a wide but not steep hill, a wagon was riding toward the manor at the foot of the hill.

The slim coachman had a red nose and wore a coat that wasn’t very thick. He spurred the horse and poured hard liquor into his mouth, as if it was the only thing that could prevent him from the coldness.

Suddenly, the coachman shivered. Even the hard liquor seemed not enough to stop the coldness from rising in his heart.

He looked at the sky. Seeing that the silver moon had been blocked by the clouds and everything was dark, he subconsciously felt deserted and creepy. So, he waved his whip and accelerated the wagon.

The horse ran quickly for a while, but it slipped during a turn, and the wagon flew out, falling off the slope that was not too high.

“Damn it. How should I tell my lord...” The coachman was not heavily hurt. He stood up, upset, blaming himself for not reining the horse well.

He was about to check the wounds of the horse when he suddenly saw a cave, which was at a corner of the slope that could never be found under normal circumstances. There was a glittering coin at the entrance of the cave.

“A coin...” The coachman’s eyes became passionate. He observed the surroundings carefully and walked to the cave, speculating in excitement whether or not there were treasures inside.

He was too drunk to consider whether or not there were dangers in the cave. He simply walked over and picked up the coin, not realizing that he passed through a transparent shield of light that was about to disappear.

He was about to examine the coin, but his pupils suddenly widened, because the cave was full of weird symbols that denoted pain, desperation, and hate.

The coachman went stiff and stood where he was while watching the symbols decompose and disappear in a couple of minutes together with the light shield that he did not notice.

Then, he shook his head and burped. “Did... Did I fall asleep just now?”

When the coachman walked into the cave, Clement, who was still in the Saint Geno Church, suddenly sensed something. He disrupted his “repentance” and really closed his eyes. Then, he saw a pair of mocking red eyes in the darkness.

“Somebody transformed into the status of primeval devils in San Ivansburg through the power of negative feelings. I sensed the strong pain, desperation, and hate...” Maltimus said affirmatively. “Find out who he is as soon as possible.”

Clement squinted. Did anyone else in San Ivansburg know the status transformation?

Chapter 789: Discovery

Chapter 789: Discovery

Clement floated in the darkness outside of the cave and observed the situation inside emotionlessly. Both the strange patterns and the intense hate and desperation were gone. Had it not been for the supernatural vibe that was still lingering in the place, nobody could have guessed that a minor magic ritual had been held in this place. Even so, nobody could speculate the specific content of the ritual and whether or not it was part of another greater ritual.

After an hour, after the supernatural air was dissolved in nature, everything that happened would be completely buried in the river of history.

Clement performed prophecy with divine powers, hoping to be inspired by the god. However, he did not learn anything that he had not already known.

“The guy is no weaker than me, and he was well-prepared in advance. Therefore, it’s impossible for me to predict the real situation. Even the Lord of Hell cannot do that...” Clement frowned. If the Lord of Hell had been in this place when it happened, he must have been able to tell the truth. However, he was in the distant Boundless Ocean and the ninth level of hell that was even more distant. When he sensed the abnormal power of feelings, the opportunity was already gone.

Clement disrupted his divine powers and analyzed the possible suspects on his own. “He’s no weaker than me... There are only a few people in San Ivensburg who meet that requirement, unless they come from outside. However, in that case, they couldn’t have made such full preparations in San Ivensburg that’s strictly under our watch... Right, the power of negative feelings needs a ‘container’ that is only one rank lower at most. I have to check who has gone missing...”

Now that the suspect had finished the status transformation,

Clement was not in too much a hurry to determine the life and death of the saint cardinals and divine knights in the major churches. Instead, he waited patiently until the morning and visited the Grand Cardinals one by one.

“Your opinions are very important. I’ll certainly take them into account...” Outside of the Saint Felix Church, Clement bid farewell to another saint who had inherited his power. He was full of confusion.

None of the seven saints including himself had gone missing. They were either in the main churches in Saint Ivan Church or in the critical areas that they were defending. After he reached out to them, he also confirmed it with divine powers. It was also the case for the other saint cardinals, divine knights, and legendary knights of the empire too. Only a few of them who were out on secret missions were out of touch, but there was no sign that they had perished.

In such a case, there would be no “containers” available. Had the suspect who completed the status transformation captured a legend of other forces or one who lived in isolation? Before he realized it, he found himself stopping before the Saint Ivan Church.

The pontiff has not been occupied as a container, hasn’t he? Such an idea suddenly popped up in Clement’s head. No normal people could have been so bold, but what if it were a lunatic who did the job?

With that in mind, Clement walked into the Saint Ivan Church and asked to meet Pontiff Belkovsky.

Several minutes later, he met Belkovsky who was as brawny as a bear in the library. His voice was still loud, his eyes were yellow, and his nose was high.

“Clement, do you have any thoughts?” Belkovsky hinted that he already knew that Clement had visited a lot of Grand Cardinals and legendary knights of the empire today.

Clement was rather shocked. He had been too anxious and should've finished it in a few days. Had it not been for the Lord of Hell's perception of the primeval devils and the power of feelings, he wouldn't have known what happened at all, and his frequent visits might have betrayed him.

Therefore, he said in a panic, "The monsters in the Dark Congress swallowed the few countries on the north side of the Dark Mountain Range and threatened the Mother God of the Earth. I fear that the Mother God of the Earth will join them and have been trying to stop it in secret. So, I talked with the Grand Cardinals and the legendary knights, hoping to propose a suggestion after we reach a consensus."

"You should talk to me first if you have any questions." Belkovsky did not say anything else, because they were the North Church, unlike the South Church where the pope had absolute authority, and such massive, private communication would've been regarded as disrespect for the spokesperson of the Lord on the ground.

In the North Church, the power belonged to all the Grand Cardinals, and the pontiff only had the power to convene meetings. His voice was only louder than others' because he was stronger.

Of course, no saints would challenge the authority of the pontiff under normal circumstances either.

Relieved, Clement said respectfully, "I'm here to ask for your advice."

After they discussed the current situation, Clement returned to the Saint Geno Church and looked for where he had neglected. However, he couldn't figure out what the mysterious status transform used as "container" at all. After all, there was only a fixed number of legends!

He then thought to himself, I'm still in need of several special materials to build my container. Should I borrow some from the Lord of Hell... No, he doesn't know that I am not using the power of negative feelings but relying on the Book of Virtues... If only Saint Geno's body can be used. A divine body and the power accumulated for hundreds of years will be enough for me to reach the peak of legendary and make a breakthrough. Body! The saints' bodies!

Clement suddenly thought of a possibility. His facial muscles were somewhat twisted under the shock. Was it really one of them?

He knelt on the ground and drew the horizontal cross on his chest. Closing his eyes, the brilliance of godhood appeared on his body, gathering into a cluster of light and turning into a light angel with a gold eye. Then, the silent, freezing, and monotonous black, white, and gray filled the area.

In the Temple of Spirits inside the World of Souls...

Five black iron coffins were placed with a cluster of erratic, intangible balls of godhood before or above them. Suddenly, something seemed to have flown into one of the balls, making it grow longer and bigger into an angel of light with six wings on the back.

Clement's consciousness was attached to the radiance of godhood, and he observed the Room of the Holy Spirit, which was as quiet as a grave, sensing the passage of time in it.

"Who could it have been?" Looking at the other four coffins, Clement hesitated. If he opened the wrong one, the corresponding saint would definitely sense it, and it would be hard for him to explain why he did that. Although he wouldn't be executed, he would certainly be regarded as an ambitious schemer by his fellows and ostracized.

He performed divine powers, hoping to give himself some hints, but the results of his prophecies varied and included every coffin.

Shaking his head, Clement remembered that the Lord of Hell was behind him and therefore made up his mind, ready to check the target that he was most suspicious about!

He walked to the front and stopped before the coffin of Saint Ivan, which was standing vertically. With the angelic wings flapping, he extended his right hand and moved away from the cover of the coffin.

Creak.

The coarse, heavy friction interrupted the dead silence in the Room of the Holy Spirit. The coffin behind the cover was empty, showing nothing but the cold reflection from the iron.

Clement's gold eye was immediately frozen. It was indeed empty!

Saint Ivan, who betrayed the Holy City and established the North Church, was gone! His divine body and his generations of power were all gone!

"It's indeed Belkovsky. He has completed the status transformation!" Clement could barely hold back his fury. He was angry at Belkovsky's betrayal of their ideal.

It was not until this moment that he finally realized why Pope Viken never considered the saints in the North Church when he secretly released the ways to become a demigod, because he must've known that, with the divine bodies of the few saints and the power that they accumulated, all they needed for status transformation was to collect the power of feelings, which was relatively easy. Together with the power of faith that the North Church stole, the preparations to become a demigod were already done. The resources were enough to support a demigod.

If this path did not involve the understanding of divinity and faith, and the odds of failure were not as high, Belkovsky might have already tried to make the advancement... Clement thought angrily and enviously. He hadn't even completed status transformation yet. However, he did not know that Belkovsky was unaware of the secret to combine them to break into the demigod level.

Suddenly, he frowned. "Belkovsky couldn't have fooled everyone when he collected the power of feelings in San Ivensburg. It's normal that I didn't know it, but it's rather strange that none of the saints sensed anything. Does he have any special ways?"

Thinking about that, he suddenly came to a horrible conclusion, which forced him to turn around and open another coffin without any concerns.

In squeaks, the cover of the coffin was opened, revealing the empty hollow. Felix's divine body was also gone!

The coffins were opened one after another. The divine bodies of Uriel and Aleksey had disappeared too!

Belkovsky was not the only one who had completed the status transformation!

"So, I was the only one who did not know it..." Clement laughed in his utmost fury. As it turned out, he had been exiled from the central circle since a long time ago.

After cleaning up the Room of the Holy Spirit, his consciousness returned to the Saint Geno Church, and he reached out to Maltimus.

"Belkovsky and the other three saints have all completed the status transformation with the divine bodies as 'containers'... Where did they learn the mysteries of negative feelings and primeval devils? Viken couldn't have leaked it to them. The other legends who learned it certainly wouldn't want to disseminate it either..." Maltimus considered.

He once had a plan to reveal the secret to Belkovsky at a critical moment to disrupt the situation, but he dropped the plan after he successfully arrived.

Before Clement proposed any speculation, Maltimus suddenly laughed mockingly. "I'm afraid that it was done by the guys from the Congress of Magic. They only have the secrets about negative feelings and primeval devils, and they need the way to steal and utilize the power of faith that you know. You guys are perfect partners. Hehe. To think that Douglas and Lucien Evans still insist that they will walk on the path of arcana..."

"What do we do now?" Clement asked thoughtfully.

Maltimus chuckled. "Release the message. Make sure that Viken learns it."

.....

A few days later, in the Holy City...

Benedict III looked unusually awful as he read the intelligence before him. He gnashed his teeth as he hissed, “Lucien Evans...”

Chapter 790: Snooping

If it were anybody else, they probably could've only vaguely guessed the range of suspects, but Benedict III clearly knew that Lucien only grasped the secrets about negative feelings and primeval devils but was unaware of the ways to steal and utilize the power of faith, and that Lucien was developing the Church of Steam in secret, intending to intercept the power of faith for Heit, the God of Craftsmen. Therefore, it was very likely that Lucien Evans and the North Church exchanged their bits of knowledge to make up for what they were short of.

Of course, with his smartness, Pope Viken knew better than to jump to any conclusion. The possibility could not be ruled out that somebody was doing it on purpose to mess up the situation.

"If it's really you, your acting skill will be better than all the professional actors..." The anger on Benedict III's face was gone, but he was still gnashing his teeth.

When he tempted Lucien before, he was solemnly refused. The guy declared that it was only an experiment and that he was seeking the mysteries of nature in it but not really interested in the path. Because of his despise on the way to become a demigod created by Thanos and himself, and his firm arcana attitude in the past decade, Viken was actually convinced by him...

"First of all, I have to find out whether or not Belkovsky and his people have the part of the secret that can combine the power of feelings and the power of faith... If they do, I will have to speed up. I have to take action before they break into the demigod level..." All of Benedict III's negative feelings were gone and thrown to Monster Viken through the uncanny connection. He was no longer upset by Lucien's possible "deception" but began to consider what he should be doing at present.

Although the way to become a demigod that was created by Thanos and himself helped them turn into demigods, there were a lot of coincidences and changes that he could not understand at all during the process. Therefore, the odds of success were actually much lower than it seemed. Despite the godhood and the power of faith that had been accumulated for multiple generations, it was still barely possible for Belkovsky and his people to become demigods, and if they failed, they would either be too heavily wounded to have another try in the next hundred years, or be directly killed.

But no matter how low the odds were, it could still happen. So, he had to confirm their knowledge and modify his plan accordingly.

Benedict III touched the platinum staff next to him and looked out of the window thoughtfully. "... On the other hand, I have to get a list of all the materials that Lucien Evans asked for in the past two years. Maybe I'll be able to find something... 'Bird of Death', it's time for you to play your role. This is not a threat or a command, which is in violation of the terms of our cooperation, but a matter that concerns your own future too. You should know what's best for you..."

.....

A week later, the list of all the materials that Lucien Evans exchanged for during the past three years was put on Benedict III's desk.

Every sorcerer had to conduct incessant experiments and build appropriate items and devices. Therefore, the list had hundreds of pages. One would feel that his head was dizzy when he read it and could not find anything of value at all.

"If it were anybody else, they couldn't have discovered your real purpose..." Benedict III's face was as gloomy as a swamp as he turned the pages and marked certain materials on them.

He was checking Lucien's list and marking the materials that his way to becoming a demigod needed. If there were only a few matches, it meant that they were just coincidences, but if the list contained most of the materials, the answer would be obvious. As a legendary sorcerer, Lucien undoubtedly had his own treasury and source of materials, and he did not have to exchange for everything from the Congress of Magic.

Black circles were drawn on the paper one after another, and Benedict III's face was more and more sullen. After the hundreds of pages were all checked, he finally stared at the blankness in the end solemnly. "Eighty-seven materials that the way to become a demigod needs are included here. They take up 73% of all the materials needed..."

Suddenly, he raised his head slightly. "The eighty-seven materials also include the materials for the ritual to combine the power of feelings and the power of faith in order to break into the demigod level! Has Lucien Evans got the last step from the other legends? Or has he figured it out on his own?"

If it were any other legendary sorcerers, even including Douglas, Benedict III wouldn't have speculated as such, but Lucien had been studying the power of faith and the power of feelings for years. He had also opened the Chamber of Immortality, seen the mysteries of immortality, and proposed unimaginable, miraculous theories. So, it might've been possible for him to complete the way to become a demigod in his hands with the knowledge that he already grasped!

"... I cannot let him turn into a demigod in any case. Otherwise, he may be advanced into a real god before I have the confidence to do so..." Benedict III narrowed his eyes.

Thinking about that, he suddenly stood up. "Words came from the Dark Mountain Range earlier that Lucien Evans had completed the status transformation. Considering his preparation of materials, it's possible that he will try to make the advancement in one or two years..."

"... I have to ask the Bird of Death and the other legends who are willing to cooperate to pay attention to his whereabouts and his Church of Steam..."

.....

In the Month of Ice (December), when every drop of water outdoors would immediately be frozen into ice, Rentato was covered in white snow.

Augustus, leading Harold, Myrna, and the central priests of the Church of Steam, paid tributes to the silver nuclear bomb that they believed to be the embodiment of the power of the God of Steam, expressing their gratitude to their Almighty Lord and praying for His protection in the next year.

They covered their eyes with their right hands and knelt on the ground, praising and singing for the God of Steam in their hearts.

Right then, the silver “nuclear bomb” emanated gentle brilliance, and their bodies were covered in the hazy light.

Shivering, they sensed that a sacred, almighty power eased the anxiety deep inside their hearts. Immediately, they were more peaceful and tranquil. They prayed at the same time.

“You dominate everything. You master the boundary between life and death. You’re the king of the kings, the god above the gods.”

Silver rays shot out of the “nuclear bomb” and fell upon Archbishop Augustus’ head. Then, everything was back to normal.

Augustus slowly stood up. He said both solemnly and excitedly, “The Lord has just changed part of the prayer and decreed that we should hold a grand session at the last weekend in every month so that His glory would illuminate the dwarfs beside us, and they could be saved from the fake gods!”

“Your kingdom comes, your will be done, on earth as it is in heaven,” the other dwarfs echoed at the same time.

Having stayed in Rentato for a long time, they were inevitably influenced by the Saint Truth, whose prayer had been partly melted into their “Mechanical Apocalypse”.

After the liturgy was over, after Augustus led the central priests to preach for the other dwarfs, a cluster of blackness suddenly appeared on the top of the silver nuclear bomb, and a bird that carried the strong stink of death perched on it, examining the residues in the silver nuclear bomb carefully.

“A grand gathering every month, and a change of prayer. Hehe, you can't wait any longer, can you?" The bird made strange sounds.

After the weird sounds, the bird vanished quietly. At this moment, the most evil air somehow erupted out of nowhere and hovered inside the room.

.....

"Recent changes of the Church of Steam..." Quite a few pieces of intelligence about that had been gathered in Benedict III's hands.

Expressionlessly, he tapped the table and thought to himself, It seems that his progress is faster than I expected. He's already doing the final preparations. If it weren't for the mistake in the North Church, he might've really tricked me, and he would've already become a demigod by the time I discovered it.

Leaning back against the back of the chair, Benedict III asked himself, "Where are you going to hide for your advancement, Lucien?"

Thinking about that, he suddenly snorted. "Wherever you hide, I will find you. Other people might be unable to do so, but as long as you are walking on the path of the power of faith, you will never hide from me!"

He took out a delicate figurine from a drawer. It was a bald dwarf, with weird and creepy patterns all over his head.

Viken closed his eyes and touched the figurine of the bald dwarf with his right hand. Spots of godly brightness that were barely visible for other people appeared and surrounded it like little angels.

The erratic, intangible brightness of godhood surfaced on the figurine of the bald dwarf too. Countless illusionary lines extended over from the void.

"The power of faith is gathered in... in..." Viken suddenly opened his eyes and blurted out, "...in the projection of the Dark Mountain Range inside the World of Souls!"

Chapter 791: Saboteurs

Chapter 791: Saboteurs

The sky that was always pale and lifeless, the black, white, and gray environment that was dead and quiet, and the rotten undead creatures that wandered everywhere, were the greatest features of the World of Souls.

In this place, the Dark Mountain Range that stretched from the southwest to the northeast was somehow broken into three sections. Some mountains were on top of other mountains, overlapping each other as if they were doing acrobatics. The dark and gray trees also existed, but they were utterly lifeless and looked like coffins.

The famous space gaps of the Dark Mountain Range had also been reflected, but they were joined in the sky and stabbed into the ground, serving as the “end of the world” on the other side of the mountains. As Silver Moon Alterna twisted the space, the World of Souls was affected too.

At a certain corner of the chaotic reflection of the Dark Mountain Range, where enormous trees enshrouded everything, a complicated and strange magic circle had appeared at some point. The silver magic patterns that extended toward the underground world and the void were mixed with some symbols of divine powers. Together, they constituted the magic circle that was flowing nonstop like a ball.

Watching those magic patterns and divine symbols wander in the void in a strange but rhythmic way, Lucien felt that his head was as dizzy as when he read legendary classes on “Astrology and Elements”, except that he calmed himself down and stabilized his soul easily this time.

Fernando, whose red magic robe dangled on the ground, stared at the magic circle with lightning bouncing in his eyes. He said in a low voice, “Is it really fine?”

He did not specify what he was asking, but his focus and the current environment undoubtedly suggested that he was asking about the magic circle for demigod advancement.

“There shouldn’t be a problem.” Lucien did not give an affirmative reply, because nobody was 100% confident about such things. “If things do not go as we planned, we will immediately abort the operation and return to Allyn.”

Fernando lowered his eyes and covered the silver arcs of light in it. “We’ve spent a long time in the World of Souls preparing for the magic circle. Now that all the preparations are done, let’s begin.”

“Alright.” Lucien nodded his head and cleaned his black bow-tie. He then took out the silver Moon Timer, which was full of mechanical beauty. After the cover of the watch was opened, the environment was immediately covered in the mysterious and unpredictable changes of time.

After checking the time, Lucien closed the Moon Timer, but this time, instead of putting the Moon Timer in the pocket of his waistcoat, he simply stuffed it into his black double-breasted suit with the silver chain.

Then, Lucien took off the black double-breasted suit that the Robe of Grand Arcanists turned into, the Congus Ring, the Holm Crown Ring, the Snow Medal, the monocle, and all the other magic items, before he slowly walked to the center of the magic circle “nakedly”.

After helping Lucien to gather those magic items, Fernando looked at him in a white shirt and a yellow waistcoat and said in a low voice, “Watch out.”

Lucien nodded. He took out many magic gems and filled them into the empty holes in the magic circle as the power source for the initialization. Then, he would make use of the power of the World of Souls, as well as the power generated by the power of faith and the power of feelings.

The brilliant or quiet magic gems were embedded into the holes of the magic circle, making the spherical circle that was mysterious and amazing in the first place even more colorful and dreamy.

Lucien extended his right hand and pressed the rising stone platform at the center. He then opened his mouth and let out the remote voices that carried the air of the passage of time.

Then, the stone platform burst out the brightest brilliant that flowed to every location in the magic circle along the lines. The magic gems were lit one after another, and all the mysterious symbols arose.

The whole magic circle was brighter and brighter. At this moment, from the magic patterns that stretched into the ground, illusionary and dark water slowly flowed out.

The hundreds of square kilometers around were immediately contaminated by the aura of arrogance, greed, hate, jealousy, pain, lust, and hypocrisy, exactly like the most desperate and negative feelings in everybody's heart. Even though their bodies were still alive, their souls had already sunk into hell!

Right when the negative feelings that represented the primeval devils emerged, sacred and hollow songs and hymns echoed in midair, and the pure light that looked like little angels poured along the symbols of divine power that extended into the void. They were so solemn and lofty that the sky within hundreds of kilometers was like paradise on earth!

If one were to listen more carefully, they would hear that what was being praised was the great God of Steam, the dominator who mastered the boundaries of life and death and Atlantis on earth.

Those spots of light gradually turned into an image in midair. It was a bald dwarf; a bald dwarf with admirable air and creepy patterns on his head.

Bolts of lightning were launched from the head of this "Yuri" like mental waves and crawled into the void.

In Dumute, Heit, the God of Craftsmen, suddenly froze into a statue. He was covered in the brightness of godhood that other people could not see, and the statue of a bald Yuri surfaced inside his body!

He had thought that he could steal the power of faith from Lucien, the “God of Steam”, after learning the secrets of Yuri’s statue, but at the critical moment, he became an energy source and provided the power of faith of a whole country of dwarfs!

Inside the World of Souls, the “paradise” in the sky and the “hell” on the ground surged toward each other the moment they appeared as if they were sworn enemies. As a result, half of the spherical magic circle was covered in holy and overwhelming white, and the other turned into the corrupt, devastating blackness.

Entangling each other, they rushed toward Lucien who was at the center!

Lucien was about to be penetrated by the power of faith and the power of feelings when a hollow and distant hymn suddenly came over from the sky. A sacred, magnificent pillar of light hit the center of the spherical magic circle where Lucien was at!

In the high sky, a seven-floored mountain of light almost appeared concretely, and the faces of the angels were clearly visible. Standing before the projection of Mountain Paradise was a gray-haired old man, who looked gentle and peaceful and was holding a platinum staff.

Pope Viken, the strongest demigod, had come in person to stop Lucien from breaking into the demigod level!

Also, he launched “Light of Judgment” neither sooner nor later, but exactly at the moment when the magic circle was activated but had not taken effect. It was to stop Lucien and let him suffer the recoil of the magic circle as well as the powers of faith and feelings. He wouldn’t be able to become a demigod in such a way in the next decade!

Other people may be unable to find you, but having become a demigod with the power of faith, I can naturally capture the flow and gathering of the power of faith. I’ve been waiting for days exactly for this moment!

Fernando sensed something and looked at the sky the moment the hymn echoed. He chanted the sophisticated spell, “Abrupt Magic Reverse!”

A mirror full of patterns appeared on the top of the spherical magic circle. Inside the mirror, it seemed to be a channel leading to another world.

Pa!

The Light of Judgment hit the mirror of Abrupt Magic Reverse and shattered it into pieces!

The best spell for individual defense could only resist one of the demigods’ attacks!

Viken raised his platinum staff, and all the angels in Mountain Paradise flapped their wings and let out spots of light, condensing another “Light of Judgment” almost without any delay. It was his unique ability. He could launch another round of attack directly with the power of faith without exhausting himself or taking any rest.

Fernando had no time to perform any magic. His left eye suddenly turned black, with silver flashes of lightning striking inside. It seemed to be a world of storms.

It was “Eye of Storm”, his unique legendary item.

It was a shame that Fernando used the legendary item too slowly. Hardly had the Storm Barrier was set up when it was pierced through by the Light of Judgment directly.

The light that was judging everything in the world penetrated the Storm Barrier one layer after another and hit the spherical magic circle.

The spherical magic circle immediately shook violently. If the Light of Judgment hadn’t been mostly consumed and that it boasted certain defense abilities after utilizing the power of the World of Souls, it would’ve been broken!

However, Viken pointed his platinum staff at Lucien again!

Suddenly, a bright moon rose in the pale and dim sky, driving away the monotonous black, white, and gray as well as the lifelessness in the Dark Mountain Range.

The silver moon fell abruptly toward Viken.

Emitting cold and dreamy brilliance, and leaving a long tail of light, it seemed to be burning intensely due to the intense friction with the air, but if one were to identify more carefully, it was not a silver moon at all, but a young girl whose blond hair was tied on one side holding a longsword that was covered in black fire and slashing it toward Viken!

She stared at Viken with her crimson eyes attentively and carefully, as if he were the most delicious food on earth.

Faced with the full-strength attack from the Silver Moon, Viken had to change his direction and did not further attack Fernando who could barely put up any more resistance.

However, the fire that spread out the intense stench of sulfur was ignited on the ground. The bottomless canyon, the smelly swamp, the frosty plain, the bronze castle, and the other views of hell appeared all of a sudden.

An enormous volcano rose, and a magnificent shadow jumped out of the crater that was spewing out flames and smoke. There was vague mockery in his red eyes.

It was Maltimus, the Lord of Hell!

Viken smiled at the Silver Moon. I already foresaw that Lucien Evans would ask for your help! This is against his conduct and the ideology of the Congress of Magic after all, and he certainly dare not do it in Allyn or ask for any other legendary sorcerers' help except for his teacher Fernando. Naturally, Rhine and you are the only people he can turn to. So, do you think I haven't been prepared for that?

Although Maltimus was your ally before, he certainly does not wish to see Lucien Evans turning into a demigod. Therefore, he's my ally on this matter!

There are no eternal foes but only the eternal pursuit of interests. That's the motto of devils!

.....

On the top floor of the Allyn magic tower, Douglas checked his pocket watch and the weather outside of the window. Then, he stood up slowly and said with a firm voice. "Let's begin. Activate the defense of Allyn."

Next to him stood Brook and Hathaway.

Chapter 792: Nightfall

At the beginning of the new year, the weather in Holm was still gloomy and cold. It seemed to have been a long time since anyone saw the sun. In Allyn, on the other hand, vague mist spread out into a blurry world around it. In the darkness caused by the mist, stars rose in sophisticated trajectories, constructing dense and thick magic circles.

All the steam magic trains bound for Allyn were instructed to stand by, and all the sorcerers who returned from the outside world and who were about to leave the City in the Sky, after witnessing the mist, realized that the defense of Allyn had been activated and knew better to barge into it based on their common sense.

Some of the sorcerers who happened to be trapped in the mist found themselves teleported to the streets of Allyn after a while of dizziness.

“Why has the defense of Allyn been activated?”

Both the members of the Highest Council, such as Atlant and Erica, and the grand arcanists, such as Oliver and Vicente, were rather surprised and confused after they perceived the changes of the City in the Sky.

However, they had received a message that was sent out by Hathaway, who was watching over the City in the Sky, as well as Douglas and Brook. It stated that for a certain important and urgent reason, the defense of Allyn would be temporarily activated for forty minutes at most. Then, everything would be back to normal, and they would report the reason and receive the investigation of the Highest Council.

The members of the Highest Council were not infuriated by that, because according to the regulations of the Congress of Magic, in case of emergencies that could not be reported to the other experts in time, the grand arcanist who was watching over the City in the Sky could take expedencies after being approved by the president or the vice president. It was obvious that neither Douglas nor Brook objected to it.

What they were confused about was actually the urgency of the matter, which did not even give Hathaway enough time to inform them. Such a thing never happened before. After all, the legendary sorcerers all had their own demiplanes that were connected to the Allyn magic tower. It was very convenient to reach out to them.

Concerns and speculations brewed in their heart. Suddenly, they saw a run rising in the mist and illuminating everything around!

Under the sun, continuous and highly-rising mountains, exuberant forests, clear lakes that were as peaceful as mirrors, and meadows that looked like carpets appeared inside the mist in turns, as if the whole City in the Sky had been teleported into a different world.

“Linsorde?”

“The Land of Truth?”

“The World in Mirror?”

The different references that flashed in the mind of the experts had the same meaning. It was the demiplane of Douglas, the Emperor of Arcana and the president of the Congress of Magic!

Had it been manifested in the main material world?

It was not entirely unachievable. With the assistance of magic circles, Oliver and the other grand arcanists were all capable of that. However, it was pointless. Same as the alternate dimensions, demiplanes were rejected by the main material world. Even though it was manifested in this place, it would be no different from arriving through projection or borrowing the power of the demiplane. It was a complete waste of time and materials.

Before they figured out what was going on, astonishing changes happened in the Land of Truth again!

The blue sky where the sun was shining suddenly turned dark, and the sun became smaller and smaller, until it was only slightly brighter than common stars.

A boundless cosmos arrived. Stars, planets, asteroids, comets, and everything else functioned according to the motion law of celestial bodies connected into systems and nebulae. Some of the places did not have the slightest light, as if even the rays had been entirely absorbed.

“The celestial bodies motion system... Is this part of Mr. President’s cognitive world?”

Because of the blockage of the defense of Allyn, Oliver could only see the appearance. He made a conclusion based on that.

“The demiplane and the cognitive world are combining in such a way. Maybe...” Vicente considered possibilities without any cases that he could refer to. He had a vague guess.

After the unexpected incident, the few legendary sorcerers who were not far away from each other had already talked through their demiplanes and exchanged their opinions.

Such an unusual phenomenon had never happened before, and so, it was particularly thrilling. Considering that Lucien Evans discovered the sun a few months ago, how could those legendary not have any speculation?

At this moment, the real sky suddenly turned dark. The citizens of Rentato immediately had the feeling that the noon sky had turned into the late-night sky.

“The sky in my place has turned dark, too...” In the capital of the Duchy of Calais, Erica stared at the sky that was as dark as ink and spoke with a shivering voice of disbelief.

“What? The sky in Cocus is darkened too?” Oliver repeated, finding it hard to believe.

They had personally experienced and witnessed many unusual phenomena caused by the half-solidification and solidification of cognitive worlds. It was not unusual that the advancement into the peak of legendary could affect a country, but such a massive darkening was too unbelievable.

Very soon, they received feedback from the local branches of the Congress of Magic.

The sky in Brianne was darkened!

The sky in the Solar Islands, the Pearl Islands, and the ocean around was darkened!

The sky in the north coastline and the neighboring area was also darkened!

In the meantime, in the Holy Heilz Empire, the Schachran Empire, the Duchy of Orvarit, the Dark Mountain Range, the Boundless Ocean, and every other place, regardless of whether it was day or night, the sky had been reduced into pitch darkness, as if the sunlight had been blocked and absorbed by something!

In the Holy City, Melmax was obviously stunned for a moment. At first, he thought that a certain saint reached the peak of legendary, but he denied the idea very soon. With his capabilities at the peak of legendary and his control over the defense of the Holy City, it was impossible for him to have neglected the godly power that was supposed to arrive overwhelmingly. On the contrary, he sensed no anomalies at all in the range under his watch!

“What happened?” Melmax looked at the sky, hoping to find some clues. In the meantime, he activated the divine power circle of the Holy City in case of unexpected attacks. Whether or not Benedict III gave any order, he had to do that. It was the responsibility of the captain of Temple Knights who was stationed in Lance.

In the dark and sunless sky, stars that felt both real and illusionary shined brilliantly, with indescribable mysteriousness.

They were moving in the sky slowly, as they had always been and would always be.

“This... This is the starry sky of destiny!” Although Melmax was a knight, he had fought sorcerers for many years and had a deep understanding of them. So, he realized what the starry sky was without any trouble.

Suddenly, his pupils constricted violently, and one of the illusionary stars in the sky glowed, eclipsing all the other stars of destiny. Then, the star launched down a brilliant but flashing light, which landed on the ground somewhere far away like a laser.

Melmax turned around abruptly and appeared out of Benedict III's residence in a blink. He had a terrible feeling!

"What? His Holiness is praying and not to be disturbed?" Faced with the red robes that guarded Benedict III's residence, even Melmax, an expert who had the manners of a knight, could barely control himself.

Did the pope not notice the astonishing phenomenon outside?

The red robes shook their heads. "His Holiness did not give any instruction on that."

"Then, go in and report it immediately. I believe you've seen the changes in the sky," Melmax urged while he searched for the source of the anomaly with divine power items.

"The City in the Sky? Douglas is trying to break into the demigod level?" Melmax clutched his longsword tightly.

At this moment, the trajectory of destiny that had been covered by Douglas and Brook was already clear. After all, everybody had seen the unusual phenomenon!

"Lord Melmax, I have used the way of contact for emergencies, but His Holiness did not give any reply..." The red robe looked rather scared.

Melmax calmed down. "I'll go to Allyn now. Perhaps His Holiness has gone there to stop them when the sky was darkened without having the time to inform us."

He could only comfort himself in such a way. How could the pope be out of reach at such a critical moment? He couldn't have been in an alternate dimension, could he?

Inside the Dark Mountain Range...

“What? The Primordial Ancestor cannot be found?” Dracula glared at Danisos with his crimson eyes. They were shocked by the unusual phenomenon even though they were in the Dark Mountain Range.

The wounds on Danisos’ back hadn’t even recovered yet. He replied, not in a good mood, “We can’t find her or reach out to her. The Observer is gone too.”

The legendary experts like the Demogorgon of Eyes and the Elder Mind all felt a headache coming on. They knew that their president wasn’t too reliable, and they had been prepared that all of them had to search for her through hard work, but they did not know that it would happen so quickly...

The Elder Mind thought for a moment and said, “Perhaps, she’s already gone to Allyn. The president is close to the Congress of Magic. Douglas must’ve asked for her protection before he made the attempt.”

“That should be the case... We ought to take a look at it too. Perhaps we can learn a thing or two from the process.” Ogre, the Umbral King, was both frustrated and delighted.

Similar things were happening in the depths of the Boundless Ocean and the ninth level of hell. As for the abyss, the Demogorgon of Darkness could not allow the Will of Abyss to arrive at the main material world without preparations.

...

One of the stars of destiny left a narrow, long, and brilliant path behind, which fell at the center of the cognitive world and the Land of Truth precisely.

“Mr. President is trying to break into the demigod level...”

Oliver and the other legendary sorcerers realized what was going on. They looked at the process in both shock and wariness.

...

Inside the World of Souls, in the projection of the Dark Mountain Range...

After the Lord of Hell leaped out of the crater, the burning fire of hell on the ground surged toward the spherical magic circle. From the projection of hell, huge devils arrived in legions that looked like tides.

Caught unprepared, Fernando only had the time to stop Maltimus with the Storm Barrier, but he was unable to block the other devils and the fire of hell.

At this moment, a cold wind that felt like it came from the darkest and filthiest place blew out of the power of the World of Souls that was absorbed by the spherical magic circle. Immediately, the fire of hell died out, and the devils attacked their companions or brutalized themselves crazily...

The strong sense of familiarity stunned Viken who was fighting the Silver Moon in the sky. Had he come, too?

It was exactly Monster Viken, his other self!

Although he still couldn't leave the Realm of Gates, he could briefly spread out his power in the World of Souls through special arrangements!

Chapter 793: Rise and Decline

In the dirty and cold wind, the shape of a human was soon outlined. He had exactly the same look as Benedict III and was wearing a similar robe, except that the color of his clothes was pure black, and the crown above his head did not carry any sacredness but looked more like the extreme of corruption and pain.

He was holding a black staff in his hands that was mixed with the air of the God of Truth, and the reversed projection of the seven-floored Mountain Paradise floated behind his back. It looked like a pyramid with the tip pointed downward.

In the strange projection of Mountain Paradise, the creatures and the angels were not playing music, praising the god, or sharing joy. Instead, every floor displayed a different view.

On the topmost and the most spacious floor, holy spirits and angels were smiling at each other, but they were intentionally stretching out their arms and legs, blocking each other and even ambushing their companions from the back.

On the next floor, the angels and holy spirits seemed to be full of desires. With intense lust on their delicate faces, they were having sex everywhere.

On every floor, jealousy, arrogance, hate, and other different negative feelings corrupted the angels and holy spirits. Even the floor at the bottom was no exception. The infinite light looked like endless pain and desperation!

Monster Viken intentionally revealed his appearance, attire, and power in the exact opposite way that Pope Viken was showing, so that those who were smart enough could figure out a way to deal with Pope Viken!

Maltimus' real body seemed to be always enshrouded in the invisible mist. Only the two sharp devilish horns and the crimson eyes could be clearly seen.

In the meantime, his eyes which carried vague mockery did not change at all, as if he had foreseen the arrival of Monster Viken. Also, he intentionally slowed down the destruction of the spherical magic circle and surrounded Monster Viken with the projection of hell. The smoking volcano and the soul-freezing plain were more and more real.

As long as they were not in the Realm of Gates, Maltimus wouldn't be scared of "Monster Viken" at all. His features of primeval devils could not affect the Lord of Devils!

For Maltimus, it was a rarely-seen opportunity to fight with "Monster Viken", which could help him find Pope Viken's weakness or learn lessons to deal with him. So, it wouldn't matter even if he was more or less slow. As far as he knew, the last step for Viken and Thanos to become a demigod took more than ten minutes. There wouldn't be a problem as long as he disrupted the process before Lucien Evans' complete success.

Hehe. Viken, who was fighting the Silver Moon in the sky, sensed Maltimus' "sluggishness". He did not have any good feelings about the big devil who was cunning and treacherous.

The black fire on the sword of the Silver Moon seemed to be burning everything. Every time it hit the Blessed Realm, the fire would be stuck to it and melt a few cracks on it, resulting in the collapse of the Blessed Realm.

"Light of Paradise!" Viken raised his platinum staff.

Wu! Wu! Wu!

In the projection of Mountain Paradise behind Viken's back, a seraph blew the horn in the paradise.

Wu! Wu! Wu!

The solemn and distant horn echoed in the sky, and the project of Mountain Paradise emitted a clear and brilliant light. Angels flew out of their illusionary incarnations and congregated into an overwhelming, sacred tide of holy light, which ran toward all directions and turned the whole sky into an ivory ocean.

In the ocean of holy light, the bright moon floated, and the brilliant light cut the waves.

Taking advantage of the brief window, Viken's body suddenly became illusionary, as if it were about to spread out. Influenced by that, the body that Monster Viken turned into had the same dispersion.

Then, the projection of Mountain Paradise in the sky and the corrupt Mountain Paradise on the ground became magnets that attracted and approached each other. However, the spherical magic circle with which Lucien was trying to break into the demigod level was in between!

Squeak, squeak.

Due to the attraction of the two demigods that were of the same origin but opposite to each other, the spherical magic circle operated in much greater difficulties. The reaction that could've taken one minute would take two minutes now!

Pope Viken looked down at Monster Viken indifferently and coldly. I am the actual Viken, and you are just a "vine" that is attached to me. Do you think I cannot suppress you even though I cannot get rid of you?

After confirming that Lucien would hide in the World of Souls to complete the ritual, I already foresaw that you wouldn't let go of the opportunity!

Now, it would take Lucien at least half an hour to complete the ritual. How long can your power that's leaking from the Realm of Gates last?

As long as Monster Viken's power was suppressed, the ground would be more and more like hell, and the extraction of the power of the World of Souls would be weaker and weaker. In no more than half an hour, the spherical magic circle would collapse on its own due to the lack of energy!

Maltimus intentionally held the generation of hell and continued attacking Monster Viken.

Monster Viken had to spare half of his attention to resist the influence of Pope Viken. Had it not been for the help of Fernando, it would've been barely possible for him to persist. Pope Viken in the sky, on the other hand, had plenty of uncanny divine powers and spells. While suppressing Monster Viken through their weird connection, he was not entirely on the losing side against the Silver Moon. He truly deserved to be the strongest demigod. Besides, he hadn't performed God's Arrival yet!

After he became a demigod through the power of faith, Viken no longer had a cognitive world, but he could indirectly cast spells through the power of his demiplane. After all, the magic models engraved in his soul were never gone.

After more than ten minutes, even though the Lord of Hell was not trying his best, Monster Viken was on the verge of collapse because he had to overcome the boundary of the Realm of Gates.

Suddenly, his gloomy and skinny face put on a mocking smile. "You were too careless. I've stalled you for such a long time!"

The voice echoed, breaking the solidification of the black, white, and gray.

Right when Maltimus had a bad feeling, Monster Viken suddenly crumbled into the air that was as dark as ink and descended. In the meantime, the Lord of Storm threw out a strange alchemical item that melted with the black air into a chaotic, upside-down gate.

On the gate, red and bloodthirsty eyes were popping out crazily, before the gate was opened after a boom. A monster that was randomly jumbled by countless pieces of meat, limbs, and eyes flew out.

It was the Will of Abyss!

Since it was the World of Souls, it was not as difficult for the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss to arrive. So, with part of his power as the sacrificial offering and the preparations that the Congress of Magic made in advance, Monster Viken summoned the Will of Abyss!

Since the Will of Abyss was an uncontrollable factor, they should be the one directing his arrival!

Monster Viken was merely a distraction and a trap to tempt Maltimus!

The mocking smile on the corners of Maltimus' lips was frozen. Although the lunatic hadn't fully recovered from his wounds, he was too insane to care about his own life. It was barely possible to beat him back in ten minutes!

Was he going to watch Lucien Evans reach the demigod level without being able to do anything?

Hardly had the Will of Abyss arrived when he smelled the most disgusting and annoying air of devils, so he simply shot out the disruptive rays toward Maltimus.

In the sky, Viken was angry. If Maltimus hadn't been too selfish, Monster Viken would've been finished more than ten minutes ago. Even though he summoned the Will of Abyss, the additional time should've been enough to crush the subsequent attacks.

Instead of considering the things on the Lord of Hell's side, he focused his attention on dealing with the Silver Moon and launching "divine punishments" on the spherical magic circle down below. It was a pity that Maltimus was stalled by the Will of Abyss and Fernando was spared. They resolved his attacks again and again.

On the other hand, since Monster Viken returned to the Realm of Gates, the pope did not need to devote part of his attention to affect him. So, he gradually suppressed the Silver Moon, but it was impossible for him to beat Alterna back any time soon.

Time went by. Seeing that the spherical magic circle down below was more and more condensed, as if a terrifying blast was being prepared inside, Pope Viken narrowed his eyes.

Then, he raised his platinum staff, and he seemed to be in a different world. Holy, superior, overwhelming, and hollow air spread out.

“You are one, and everyone.”

“You are the moment, and forever.”

“You are the creator, and master.”

The pious prayers and praises echoed from the mouths of the holy spirits and the angels. In the projection of Mountain Paradise behind Pope Viken’s back, layers of holy light were gathered into the infinite light on the seventh floor.

It was God’s Arrival!

Pope Viken had directly used God’s Arrival!

Viken put on a gentle and kind smile again. It’s both your wisdom and your weakness in letting the monster summon the Will of Abyss with part of his power. Now that his essence and power declined, it means that I am capable of performing “God’s Arrival” again, as long as my physical body pays a minor price!

His hair became white, and he waved his hands, bursting out all of the brilliance.

Chapter 794: Proud

Chapter 794: Proud

The overwhelming, superior light on the seventh floor of Mountain Paradise broke out, and the purest and most flawless light swept out, transforming the sky into a glowing ocean and removing all sounds, colors, and feelings.

The extraordinarily bright moon surged toward the spherical magic circle down below overwhelmingly. At this moment, space and time did not seem to exist anymore, and the light of God's Arrival was simply flowing unstoppably. The spherical circle and Lucien in it seemed to have been frozen in the decayed page of a history book.

Even Fernando, who was outside of the range of God's Arrival, could only sense the things within one meter from him. Beyond it, there was nothing but the magnificent and divine brilliance in his eyes and the field of his spiritual power.

Right then, a silver moon rose in the vast holy light that purged everything in the world, dreamy and freezing.

After the silver moon appeared, God's Arrival seemed to have been delayed briefly, and the spherical magic circle, as well as Lucien inside, were enlivened.

Pope Viken was not surprised at Alterna's blockage. She was not the target of this "God's Arrival", which had been focused on the spherical magic circle, and she was only slightly affected. So, it was only reasonable that she helped to delay it briefly so that Lucien Evans would have an opportunity to escape.

It was a pity that she was a little bit late. Lucien Evans had reached the most critical moment to break into the demigod level, and he was inseparable from the spherical magic circle. He was destined to be killed by God's Arrival.

Pope Viken was quite sorry about that too. He had never intended to kill Lucien Evans so easily. The road ahead was too perilous, and such an excellent explorer was inestimably valuable. If only the guy had been not so ambitious and adept at planning that he had to kill him.

The silver moon quickly dimmed, and even though the light of God's Arrival was slightly delayed, it was about to reach above the spherical magic circle.

Suddenly, Lucien, who had been refreshed inside the spherical magic circle, raised his head and looked at the holy light thoughtfully.

Then, his lips curled into a gentle smile.

This is... Pope Viken could perceive what was inside the spherical magic circle through God's Arrival. He was rather stunned that Lucien was neither frustrated nor desperate but was smiling at him as if he was bidding farewell. He suddenly had an ominous feeling.

Boom!

Lucien's body that was in the white shirt and yellow waistcoat exploded entirely, like a watermelon that was thrown to the ground from ten thousand meters high!

Flesh and blood splashed out, and the light of God's Arrival completely drowned the place!

Inside a secret chamber in Babel in the Atomic Universe...

A weirdly-shaped silver amulet, which looked like part of twisted intestines, released bright but not dazzling light in a long box that was fully embedded with gems. The feeling of exuberance and vitality immediately filled the room.

Natasha, who was guarding the place with her longsword in her hands, became solemn after seeing that. She grasped the Sword of Truth tightly, ready to chop any attack that followed!

The energy of the magic gems flowed into the silver amulet, and the other materials in the long box were dismembered and melted. The silver amulet lost its beautiful appearance and was reduced to a messy, bloody cluster that dissected and grew.

The internal organs grew out, the bones grew out, the muscles grew out, and so did the skin and the hair.

Natasha's solemnness was gone. She looked at the scene with a smile, not disgusted at all but scratching her chin with great interest. "So, the body that hasn't taken shape is so hideous..."

Lucien's naked body was finally full. His skin was clean, his muscles were tough and smooth, and he looked like a statue.

Then, he slowly opened his eyes. The glittering holy light seemed to be still lingering in his deep and dark eyes.

"God's Arrival?" Natasha observed him up and down like a naughty boy and asked curiously.

The residues in Lucien's eyes were gone, and he nodded softly. "Thankfully, my appendix was waiting for me at home. Otherwise, I couldn't have avoided God's Arrival even though the Silver Moon delayed it."

Since the very beginning, Lucien had planned to dodge Pope Viken's critical strike with self-explosion!

He was proud that he had an appendix!

"What does it feel to confront 'God's Arrival'? How terrible was it?" Natasha asked quickly. She was always interested and curious about battles.

Lucien's lips twitched. "Do you want me to talk to you naked?"

"It's not like you've never talked to me naked," Natasha said, not fearing that her eyes would be blinded by the nudity at all. Of course, she also tossed the clothes that she prepared in advance to Lucien.

Then, she asked intentionally, "Where are your gears? They were not destroyed in the self-explosion or God's Arrival, were they?"

She made fun of him because she knew very well that her husband was a miser in nature, and that his heart would've been broken if the few legendary items were lost.

Lucien put on his clothes and chuckled. "They're kept by my teacher, of course!"

.....

In the ocean of holy light, the spherical magic circle disassembled and melted quickly.

Fernando, who had been intentionally keeping away from God's Arrival, simply cast a spell and opened a space-time gate, jumping toward his demiplane. The Will of Abyss, who was right next to the spherical magic circle, had no time to dodge it. Due to the influence of God's Arrival, his eyes were broken and his arms were falling. Black and chaotic water was springing from the ground under his cries.

"He was not melted with the demigod circle?" Pope Viken was not surprised that Lucien blew himself up at all. As a legendary sorcerer in the past, he knew very well about the escape and resurrection methods of sorcerers. What was beyond his expectation was that Lucien Evans could've detonated himself so easily at the last moment without being affected by the spherical magic circle at all.

Had he avoided the blast and replaced his body with an alchemical item before that?

That would have suggested that he was not trying to break into the demigod level at all. Then, why was he doing all this?

Thinking about that, Pope Viken squinted. Not bothering the Will of Abyss and the Lord of Hell down below, he simply tore apart the space and returned to the corresponding location in the main material world.

The Lord of Hell realized the anomaly too. He burst out all his strength and drove the Will of Abyss, who hadn't recovered from his wounds and was hit by God's Arrival again, back into the abyss.

Then, he also tore apart the space and returned.

The dim silver moon was long gone, and the sky of the World of Souls was gray again. However, a silver-haired man in a red shirt and a black coat slowly paced out of the woods and chuckled. "I didn't even have a chance to make an entrance. How sad."

.....

Outside of Allyn, the white mist grew dense, covering the "natural views" that were no different from the real landscape as well as the cognitive world that looked like a vast cosmos. The only thing that could be clearly seen was the brilliant starlight from the sky.

It took Melmax twenty minutes to reach Allyn before he saw the thickening mist. Taking a deep breath, he raised his longsword and charged toward the City in the Sky. Douglas had to be stopped from reaching the demigod level!

Although he knew very well that it was barely possible for him to break the defense of Allyn without the help of a demigod, he had no choice except to charge at such a moment as a knight!

The longsword of the Holy Avenger passed the sky and hit the ivory mist. On the other side, Belkovsky, the brawny pontiff of the North Church, had flown over too. He was surrounded by holy light, with a pair of glorious wings that were purely made of godhood on his back. It was obvious that he had performed "God's Grace".

However, the moment he showed up, a green arrow that carried the air of the natural cycle traveled through space and reached before him, forcing him to drop the plan of attacking Allyn and focus his attention on dealing with this "Nature's Punishment".

In the high sky, the elven queen, who was wearing a refreshing, green dress, had decided to help her ally.

Dracula, the Night Dominator, and Danisos, the Dragon of Time and Luminosity, were both hiding in the dark without taking any action because they were in a dilemma. On one hand, they were happy to see Douglas' advancement, but on the other hand, they were fearful about the future. Also, since the few legends of the Congress of Magic hadn't taken action, they had to consider carefully whether or not they had advantages.

At this moment, the "starry sky" suddenly constricted toward Allyn, and all the stars fell like rain, presenting a brilliant and dreamy view.

Then, the dark night fell again. Not the slightest light could be perceived. Even the senses of top legends could only cover a dozen square kilometers around them.

In the pitch darkness, Melmax suddenly had a terrible feeling and retreated toward the Holy City without thinking. Belkovsky did the same.

In the meantime, Viken, who was still in the depths of the Dark Mountain Range with his pope robe and his holy crown, was staring at the inky sky gloomily.

At such a moment, how could he not realize what had happened?

Right when he was about to raise the platinum staff, on the horizon of the dark sky, a scorching sun suddenly leaped out, dyeing half of the sky vermillion!

.....

"You stalled them for twenty minutes and wasted a 'God's Arrival'?" Natasha became rather confident after hearing Lucien's unhurried introduction. "It seems that Viken and the Lord of Hell will miss the end of the show."

Lucien chuckled. "The corresponding location after they leave the World of Souls is the Dark Mountain Range. It will take a lot of time for them to reach Allyn from there, unless they have deployed teleportation circles in advance. Otherwise, even a demigod will have to spend at least twenty minutes on the way. Also, Allyn is not as easy to locate as the artificial planets in the high sky. It will be barely possible for Viken to lock onto the City in the Sky from somewhere far away."

“Hehe. Are you not scared that Viken and the Lord of Hell did set up teleportation circles in advance?” Natasha intentionally argued with him.

Lucien put on his waistcoat and smiled. “Why do you think Mr. Rhine never showed up?”

“Well...” Natasha thought of something else and suddenly asked, “If the Congress were faced with such a situation, what would you do?”

“Orbit strikes from the artificial planets, of course.” Lucien warmed his body. “However, the current orbit attacks cannot break through the defense of Allyn.”

Chapter 795: Outburst

On the top floor of the Allyn magic tower, the spot where Douglas was standing had turned into a swirl that was spinning and absorbing everything around. This was because even though the rays had been absorbed by it, it was deep and dark with the world-destroying horror.

Brook and Hathaway controlled the defense of Allyn, ready to resist the attacks of demigods, while they observed the changes carefully and gathered experience for themselves, hoping to figure out the mechanism of the process.

They saw that the materials in the magic circle that were prepared in advance floated crazily and got absorbed by the swirl almost at the same time. They saw that the Land of Truth, which had been manifested in the main material world, and Douglas' cognitive world were broken under the enormous attraction force and pulled into the vortex overwhelmingly. They saw that the lines and patterns of the magic circle were removed from the ground and gathered into a ball, melting into the darkness...

The unimaginable changes made Brook rather anxious, particularly when Allyn, Hathaway, and himself seemed about to be absorbed when the attraction force came to the strongest point. He almost performed a legendary magic spell to resist it.

At this moment, Hathaway stopped before him and shook her head slightly, hinting him to wait longer.

The starry sky of destiny collapsed, and stars fell like a heavy rain into the dangerous and dark swirl.

The swirl came to an abrupt halt and stopped moving. Even the time and space around seemed frozen.

Brook and Hathaway both sensed the overwhelming energy inside the swirl and the strange feeling that was still developing. However, everything was blocked within the swirl, and they wondered if it could break out.

The atmosphere was more and more depressing, and all the clocks in Allyn were ticking more slowly. Having noticed the anomaly, Heidi and the other arcanists looked at the dark sky where there was absolutely no light both anxiously and hopefully, hoping that dawn would soon arrive.

Right at this moment, the center of the swirl began to fluctuate more and more intensely. Then, it began to spin again, in exactly the opposite way like just now!

From the center of the swirl, scorching glows were spewed out fiercely. In the end, a “sun” that was as red as fire burst out and rose to the sky!

The brilliance of the sun sprayed out and drove the deep darkness away, proclaiming the return of light.

Stars burst out from the swirl and flew toward the sky, occupying their own location and not eclipsed by the sun at all. The starry sky of destiny was established again!

Melmax tore apart the air and flew back toward the Holy City, not bothering Allyn on his back at all.

Suddenly, the darkness before his eyes was illuminated, and the clouds around turned gold. He also felt that terrifying heat that seemed to be melting his armor and his body from his back.

Not good! Melmax secretly exclaimed and tried his best to accelerate and get out of the range of the influence. At this moment, the illusion of the all-melting heat was suddenly gone, and his back was cool again.

However, Melmax did not feel lucky at all, because he had a much stronger sense of danger than a moment ago!

Without any hesitation, he used the power of the Holy Avenger and burned his blood power, even though he might be joining the arms of the Lord a hundred years earlier than he should have as a consequence.

Melmax was consumed by sunlight, as if he were the incarnation of the Sun God. The light escaped quickly.

At this moment, Brook and Hathaway saw the darkness that also gave the feeling of absorbing everything jumping out of the swirl. It did not affect the environment but ascended into the sky directly.

A reflection of the black hole? Both of them understood something.

Hardly had Melmax ignited his blood power when he sensed an unprecedented enormous attraction force from his back. A gigantic hand seemed to have grabbed his waistband and was dragging him back brutally.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

His armor was broken into countless tiny pieces and thrown backward in a metal storm.

Thanks to her decision just now, he finally got rid of the most dangerous attraction force.

It was not until this moment that Melmax realized he was only one meter away from the place where he attacked Allyn a moment ago. The people who were observing in secret seemed astounded by his humiliation.

Having no time to observe it more carefully, Melmax turned into a beam of sunlight that shot toward the Holy City.

...

Deep inside the Dark Mountain Range...

Pope Viken saw the rising sun and the stars jumping into the sky. He quietly put down the platinum staff that he just raised. It was too late...

His face was gloomy, but he did not burst into a fury. Instead, he calmed down and observed the whole process.

After the stars, the dark swirl flew into the sky, the brilliant constellations in different images flew into the sky, the nebulae that looked like a series of glorious gems flew into the sky, and so did the galaxies that looked like glittering long rivers...

“This is a simulation of the real cosmos...” Viken realized something.

...

The elven queen, Dracula, Danisos, and the other experts, as well as the ordinary people in Rentato, Cocus, Antiffler, and other places, all stared at the real cosmos that had arrived on earth, feeling that everything was a magnificent and astoundingly beautiful dream.

Suddenly, the spreading cosmos collapsed toward the top floor in the Allyn magic tower.

Brook and Hathaway watched the starry sky gather at the center of the magic circle that had disappeared into Douglas, except that he had an additional casualness and everlasting transcendence compared to the “Emperor of Arcana” before. He seemed to be the high and mighty cosmos that surrounded the planet now.

He had turned into a demigod!

“Congratulations, Mr. President.” Hathaway, who hardly ever smiled, beamed with joy.

In complicated feelings, Brook said, his eyes slightly wet, “Congratulations on becoming a demigod, Master.”

Although he had always been an old-school gentleman, he couldn’t hold back his real feelings.

Douglas meant to say something, but he only shook his head with a smile in the end. He patted Brook’s shoulder and said to them, “One day, you will explore this level on your way, because this is a path of demigods for all sorcerers.”

“Master, what spiritual and physical changes do you experience after turning into a demigod?” Brook meant to offer more congratulations, but it still eventually became an arcana question. That was what he was used to.

Pondering for a moment, Douglas said, “My body is melted into my soul, and my soul has been transformed into a different state, like the unification of the duality of particles and waves. However, if I want to appear in reality, I have to collapse in one of the directions. That is to say, you are not seeing the complete me right now, but only one of my possibilities. If I want to carry out all my strength as a demigod, I will not be able to sustain for long. Otherwise, I will either be unable to influence the world or be forced by the world to collapse...

“That’s perhaps the real reason why the natural-born demigods like the Silver Moon are restrained and why their performances are only steady in their own alternate dimensions or through other ways... Viken’s way to become a demigod is based on the power of faith, so the flaw is avoided. However, it’s another proof that their demigod states have a lot of insidious problems and does not have the properties of real demigods.”

Considering Douglas’ description, Hathaway pursued further, “Then, what’s the real state of demigods?”

“It’s a state that cannot be seen, heard, smelled, or touched. In such a state, you cannot sense anything even if I am standing right before me. You can even pass me, and the magic you perform will not affect me. It’s like we’re in two overlapping but independent worlds. That’s probably the reason why the Silver Moon is never discovered.” Douglas was happy to share his findings. “Therefore, such a status is flawed and incomplete. Once we figure out those problems, we should be able to touch the secrets of real gods.”

Then, he paused and smiled. “Let’s hold that thought and cancel the blockage of Allyn first. I need to thank Lucien for his help, without which I couldn’t have succeeded. As for the friends who are watching the show, you’ll invite them to visit and see if they have the courage to come.”

...

In and out of Allyn, when they saw that the cosmos collapsed and the air of transcendence spread out, all the extraordinary people with remarkable visions understood that Douglas had successfully reached the demigod level. He had become the third demigod after Thanos and Viken in the Magic Empire who made the advancement step by step on their own!

The three of them had one thing in common, which was that they were all sorcerers!

However, Douglas was the only one who used a standard approach that did not require the dissemination of faith and could be repeated by any sorcerer after studies!

“A demigod... The Congress of Magic has a demigod now. Yet another unknown field of arcana has been conquered.” In ecstasy, Oliver was ready to go to the Allyn magic tower. He was in such a high mood that he almost couldn’t wait to write a long poem.

Atlant and the other sorcerers stared at Allyn in a daze, unable to say anything for a long time.

The elven queen, Dracula, Danisos, and the other legends also looked at the City in the Sky with complicated feelings.

In the Dark Mountain Range, Pope Viken suddenly said in a self-mocking smile, “The path of sorcerers...”

“Are you going to ask the Bird of Death to provide the approach?” The Lord of Hell’s laughter came from the other side.

Viken did not reply, because both he and Maltimus were clear that “Bird of Death” died the moment Douglas successfully became a demigod. He would never show up again. Even if Viken revealed to the Congress of Magic who he was, it would only be considered slander.

Now that Douglas had succeeded, which ambitious legendary sorcerer would choose the path that relied on primeval devils and faith?

“For the past ten years, Lucien Evans has overshadowed Douglas and made us neglect him. All our attention was fixed on Lucien Evans at the critical moment,” Viken said with a coarse voice. It was the sequela caused by God’s Arrival.

He had been completely tricked by Lucien this time!

Suddenly, he remembered a detail. “Lucien Evans began the preparation of materials three years ago. He exchanged knowledge with the North Church a long time ago too. He couldn’t have started to plan for this at that time, because even the sun hadn’t been discovered yet back then. Who could tell when Douglas could break into the demigod level?

“... So, he was probably preparing the materials for real. He helped Douglas to distract our attention partly to deceive us too. He’s misleading us into thinking that this is a trap and he will not walk on this path...” Viken slightly raised his head and stared at the everlasting black fog above the Dark Mountain Range. “Is he really so confident about the observer effect?”

Chapter 796: Congratulation and Proposal

Chapter 796: Congratulation and Proposal

Around the City in the Sky, the bright sun dyed the white clouds gold. The pitch darkness a moment ago was gone. It seemed that the world had turned from an abyss back into a normal one.

Deep in the clouds, the magnificent-looking Rudolf II stared at Allyn in silence for a long time, before he heaved a sigh and disappeared from the sky.

Although he had regained the strength of the peak of legendary, he would need more accumulation and great opportunities in order to become a demigod. It wouldn't be easy and natural at all. Also, the way to become a demigod that he modified was one based on faith after all. Even though he had recovered the memories of Thanos during his first advancement, the odds of success were still not high, and he could die in the process with one moment of carelessness.

Therefore, after witnessing Douglas successfully become a demigod based on the sorcerers' traditional "cognitive world", the Sun King, who used to be the brilliant consul of the Magic Empire, felt that he couldn't keep up with the wheel of history any longer and that he had been drowned in the river of time, obsolete and outdated. Faced with the new "sun" in the new era, he found it so dazzling that he only wanted to run away.

But eventually, the proud and confident side in his heart still won him over again.

"We're invited to visit?" Ogre, the Umbral King, saw that the defense of Allyn was canceled, and the loud and magnificent voice of the alchemical life echoed in the high sky.

Dracula floated in the sky and looked down at the clean, modern Allyn, before he snorted, "Do you want to go?"

"Hehe." Ogre chuckled in embarrassment and simply opened the gate to his own demiplane. Douglas had become a demigod, and he was also an authentic sorcerer. How could Ogre have the courage to visit his place? If anything happened, he wouldn't be able to escape at all!

After Ogre left, Dracula, Danisos, Belkovsky, and the other experts all returned. Although the City in the Sky was like a vulnerable and alluring lamb that had been skinned now that the defense had been canceled, it was a place no less dangerous than the Holy City in their eyes.

The elven queen thought for a moment and lowered the altitude, landing on the Allyn magic tower.

.....

The moment the defense of the City in the Sky was canceled, space-time waves spread out from the 33rd and the 34th floors of the Allyn magic tower. All the members of the Highest Council who were in the main material world and who were not mired in relics had come in a hurry, partly to send their congratulations and partly to learn the mysteries of the demigod level as soon as possible.

By the time Lucien and Natasha, who were also curious about the demigod state, arrived, more than half of the Highest Council had been gathered in the conference room.

Douglas, who was receiving congratulations from Oliver, Hellen, and Vicente, stood up immediately after Lucien walked in and greeted him with a smile.

"Arcana Above..." Before Lucien offered his congratulations, Douglas had approached him and given him a warm gentleman hug.

"Without your help, it couldn't have been as easy for me to reach the demigod level, if I could even find the path to the demigod level at all." Douglas patted Lucien's shoulder and loosened his arms, expressing his gratitude sincerely.

Lucien smiled rather shyly. "I only offered the dessert; what filled the belly was the main course before it."

“Huh?” Douglas knew well what Lucien was trying to say, but Hathaway was rather confused about the metaphor. She had never been good at literature.

Lucien explained with a smile, “Mr. President’s studies on the celestial bodies’ motion system and gravity are like the main course, and my discovery of the sun is like the dessert. You cannot neglect the main course just because you feel full after eating the dessert in dinner. As a matter of fact, the main course is the most important reason to stop your hunger.”

Hathaway frowned indifferently, as if she were confused why it was expressed so subtly when it could’ve been expressed straightforwardly.

“Lucien, it’s not good to be too modest. Your arcana studies in the past decade are the most brilliant and important part of the history of magic.” Douglas was in a lot of mixed feelings.

“My modesty is not the issue at hand right now. I think the most important thing right now is to satisfy our curiosity. I believe that everybody cannot wait to hear the mysteries of demigods from you now, Mr. President.” Lucien directed the topic back to track.

Fernando, who had arrived as quickly as possible, returned Lucien’s equipment to him and said loudly, “You can express your gratitude in private. All I am interested in is the specialness of the demigod state, the things that we need to pay attention to during the advancement, and the corresponding arcana mechanisms.”

Douglas clapped his hands with a smile. “Before I answer your questions, I have to ask one thing. Where are our guests?”

“None except Aglaea dares to visit Allyn,” Hathaway replied coldly.

“Then, let Aglaea attend our meeting in case she chooses a wrong path in the future.” As he spoke, Douglas became solemn and said to the members of the Highest Council who were present, “I hope that you won’t choose the wrong path either.

“In the past, the road ahead of us is covered in a mist, and it’s understandable that we made mistakes during our exploration. However, the mist is now cleared, and a straight path is lying right before us. There's no reason to walk in any other direction. The Congress of Magic will not tolerate such deviated sorcerers."

The atmosphere was slightly frozen, but none of the Highest Council showed any emotional change.

"After watching you successfully become a demigod through the cognitive world and the demiplane, I don't think any sorcerer will make an irrational choice," Oliver replied with a smile. Vicente, Hellen, Atlant, and the other legendary sorcerers expressed their attitude too.

After Aglaea came in, Douglas began to answer everybody's questions about demigod. It was basically the same as what he described to Brook and Hellen.

"... Up until so far, demigod does not have a corresponding arcana mechanism, and there is no place for demigod in the arcana system either. That's something we need to work on in the future, like how we studied the nature of magic," Douglas concluded in the end.

Lucien listened attentively. When Douglas mentioned that he had to "collapse" in order to appear in the main material world, he scratched his chin, deep in thought.

"Do legendary knights have to go through such status transformation too?" Natasha asked. She had been particularly persistent and passionate about that.

Douglas nodded his head. "All the demigods should be in a similar state. So, changing with the aim toward such a state should be the main theme for every growing legendary knight. I think you should associate it with training and fighting."

The first legendary knight was born under the "direction" and "experiment" of sorcerers. So, Douglas, who was from the Magic Empire, had a lot of understanding of the subject.

Including the elven queen, all the experts present had asked the things they wanted to know. They were still digesting the new knowledge, and nobody asked any more questions.

Seeing that, Douglas stood up and said, "Is this all? Then, I'll have to explore myself now."

Chewing on Douglas' descriptions just now, Aglaea suddenly realized with mixed feelings that the Congress of Magic was the most powerful force on par with the South Church right now. With one demigod and four top legends, it was even stronger than the South Church to some extent!

Of course, considering that it was easy for Viken to carry out his full strength in the main material world, and Viken could perform "God's Arrival" with "Mountain Paradise", the two forces were still equal.

Right when Douglas was about to "run", Fernando suddenly opened his mouth. "I remember that you devised the delayed choice experiment and the quantum eraser experiment before, except that they could not be conducted due to the high requirements. What about now? Can you accomplish them?"

Most sorcerers looked at Fernando in shock. The two experiments were likely to shake the current arcana system. If the result turned out to be bad, everybody's worldview and outlook would be completely subverted, and they had to seriously consider Lucien's observer theory.

Do we have to be so fast? Give us more time to be mentally prepared!

Douglas' gentle smile was gone. He said in hesitation, "The requirements are indeed met now, but I can only know whether or not the experiments can be conducted after I confirm it. I'll tell you the result later."

Fernando said solemnly, "If an arcanist is too scared of a certain result to run an experiment, he doesn't deserve to be called an arcanist. Exploring the unknown and the truth is the fundamental reason why I chose the path of arcana. I will not betray that. So, I would like to know the results of the two experiments, and whether or not they reveal the truth of the world.”

“As a matter of fact, it is not a serious problem. The microscopic domain is a new field with many debatable issues. Nobody has constructed their cognitive world based on that. So, even if the two experiments disrupt our understanding, it will only shake our worldview and outlook but will not blow up our heads. Our cognitive world won’t be broken and solidified either.” Pondering for a moment, Oliver agreed with the proposal. His eyes behind his gold-edged glasses were full of the earnestness for exploration.

Hellen was not distracted at this moment. She said calmly, “The shake of understanding of the world will also cause the arcanists to feel frustrated. Their cognitive worlds won’t be steady, and their strength will stagnate as a result.”

She did not offer any example, but there were a handful of members of the Highest Council who could not advance into the legendary level because their worldviews had been disrupted by the achievements in the microworld.

“However, even if my strength might stagnate, I still would like to know what the result is,” Hellen added and looked at Douglas firmly.

For arcanists, the desire for knowledge and exploration was their specialty. If they knew that the answer was up ahead but could not reach for it, they would rather be killed. As for whether or not the answer was acceptable, it would be a different matter.

Douglas looked around and saw that everybody had similar countenances on their faces. So, he sighed half in relief and half in concern, “At the very least, I have to get the experiment devices prepared first.”

“In that case, let’s live stream the experiment,” Lucien suddenly interjected, making everybody look at him in shock.

Chapter 797: Audience

“Have you lost your mind?” Vicente, in a bag of bones, looked at Lucien in shock. His low voice was full of surprise, and a fire was jumping fiercely in his eye sockets.

Blood and brains would not be spilled this time, and no skulls would explode, but what benefits could there be if most arcanists stagnated because of their collapsed worldviews? Wasn't it too perverted?

Although the other members of the Highest Council did not say anything, their eyes and their faces suggested that they thought the same as the Lord of the Undead. It was too insane. Live streaming the experiments that even terrified them to all the arcanists? You are really the Fallen Morning Star, aren't you?

Maintaining a gentleman's smile, Lucien said, “A long stagnation does not mean no hope for advancement. As long as they view and explore the world based on experiments and mathematics, they will be able to reshape their worldviews and find their own paths sooner or later. There won't be too many insidious problems.

“If they do not have the courage to face such experiments that do not threaten their lives, how will they explore the fields where common sense makes no sense? If we do not educate them on the mysteries of the microscopic domain with experiments before the opinions about the microworld are built into the components of their cognitive worlds, are we going to offer them the results after they transform such opinions into parts of their cognitive worlds during their advancements subconsciously? By then, however subtle we are and however the experiment results agree with the common sense of most people, some people would have lost their heads, and their cognitive worlds might be broken and solidified.”

Douglas rather agreed with Lucien's words, but he was still not concerned. “Isn't a live stream too hasty? We should confirm the experiences first before we consider in what way we should inform the other arcanists.”

“This is another lesson for them. In the past, they were almost protected by us, and they do not understand the ‘cruelty’ of arcana studies. Since there is no life-threatening danger this time, just let them face the blast. With such an experience, when they are faced with other revolutionary theories in the future, they will be able to treat such theories more objectively, and the danger of brain explosion will be minimized.” Lucien retained his gentle smile, but Natasha and the other people who were familiar with him somehow sensed his bad humor in it.

“It sounds reasonable...” Hathaway and Hellen nodded and agreed with Lucien, but they somehow felt that something was not right.

Lucien went on. “On the other hand, I believe other forces will be tempted to watch the live stream too. The experiments this time are simple, clear, and consist of the truth of the world. It will be a major shock for them too. So, let them feel the torrent of arcana again.”

“If Viken perishes after seeing the experiment result, the two experiments you devised will be the most classic experiments in history.” Oliver had a very creative mind as a playwright. He was full of passion for creation when he pictured the scene that he described.

Up until so far, the most well-accepted classic arcana and magic experiment was the double-slit experiment with electrons that Lucien conducted. Its design was simple and clear, and although it was difficult to create the experiment device, it was not too complicated. However, the result of the experiment was utterly unbelievable.

Douglas couldn’t help but put on a smile too. “Most arcanists have grown under the strikes of your repetitive disruptive theories. They’ll be far more resistant to the two experiments than those who watch them for the first time. Perhaps somebody will be really overwhelmed and start to question their lives and themselves, unable to make any further advancement in the future.”

By you, he was not just referring to Lucien but all the grand arcanists and part of the legendary sorcerers present.

In his usual meanness, Fernando said, “That’s because the arcanists who cannot stand the strikes would have either been killed or eliminated.”

Douglas’ smile was gone. He said very solemnly, “I’m very curious about the two experiments myself. My very first thought after I became a demigod was that I could find out their results, which must contain the fundamental secrets of our world. I don’t know if you felt it just now, but the demigod state I described matches the duality of waves and particles very well. Particles and waves are unified on a higher level, but only one side of them can be observed by us. Therefore, to explore the mysteries of quanta is to explore the mysteries of demigod.”

“Then, let’s live stream it.” Brook leaned against the back of his chair and closed his eyes. He seemed to be looking forward to the results of the two experiments too.

After the quantum field theory that described the electromagnetic force was established, his broken and solidified cognitive world had already started to revive. As long as the problem of infinity was resolved, he would be fully recovered, and he would be able to find his own path to the demigod level.

“Then, let’s live stream it.” Douglas nodded his head.

.....

Half a month later, the students of the third generic school, who had just returned from the new year holiday of 830, were suddenly notified that the morning classes were canceled. They were asked to gather in the square where a stream screen had been established to watch an experiment live stream.

“An experiment live stream? What experiment?” After living together for more than two years, Ali had grown familiar with his classmates.

Charlot, the class monitor that he asked, shrugged, implying that he did not know either. “Perhaps, the satellite TV channel invited a certain senior-rank arcanist to perform live experiments, and the school is organizing us to watch it so that we can learn the standard experiment procedures and understand the significance of arcana experiments...”

Talking so much so eloquently even though he does not know anything... He truly deserves to be our monitor. Ali was secretly impressed. He was both curious and confused about the live stream. For an ordinary person who hadn't even become a magic apprentice yet, he did not think that he would have a second chance to watch the experiment of a senior-rank arcanist again in his life.

Thanks to the development of arcana, thanks to the arcana planets that Mr. President and Mr. Evans invented, thanks to the rapid development of electromagnetism messaging, and thanks to Ms. Heidi for her unforgettable contributions to the creation of stream screens... Otherwise, he wouldn't even have one chance to watch it, much less “again”.

Arcana Above, that's the charm of arcana and magic, and these are the changes that they have brought. Ali drew a cross out of habit and expressed his gratitude.

In Allyn, Rentato, Cocus, and every city that had a branch of the Congress of Magic, the sorcerers who had spare time all watched the stream screens in confusion, wondering what arcana experiment it could be.

Inside the Atom Institution, the smaller-sized stream screen that Heidi made in person was rippling and waiting for the signal.

“What experiment can it be?” Annick had always been interested in arcana.

Heidi sniffed. “I have a bad feeling. If we see our teacher in the live stream later, we should blow up the screen as soon as possible, or else it will be our heads that would be blown up.”

Everybody burst into laughter, knowing that Heidi was merely expressing her speculation and uneasiness in an exaggerated way.

At this moment, the noises of electric currents echoed, and the screen became clear. A room full of experiment devices, as well as a kind old man in a tailcoat and a handsome and gentle young man, was displayed.

“It’s really our teacher!” Heidi clenched her fists, but she did not blow up the stream screen as she said before. Instead, she focused her attention on the picture, waiting for the experiment to begin.

The experiment must be very important, or their teacher wouldn’t have chosen to stream it at all.

The instinct of the arcanists’ exploration of the world made her overcome her fear and look forward to the experiment. Around her, Annick, Sprint, Katrina, and her other friends were the same.

“Mr. President?”

“Mr. Evans?”

Exclamations burst out in the Allyn magic tower, in the Tower, in the headquarters of the Will of Elements, and in every place that could watch the live stream. It was a live stream of Mr. President and Mr. Evans’ experiment?

Their hearts were immediately palpitating in curiosity and expectation as well as fear and panic. Mr. President was alright, but Mr. Evans’ “remarkable” accomplishments chilled and horrified them to the bones. For example, one of the most famous lines in a play that described arcanists was exactly “Is my head still intact?”.

It was needless to mention his nicknames such as “Headcrusher” and “Brain Eater”.

“Mr... Mr. President...”

“Mr. Atom Controller...”

“The Fallen Morning Star...”

In the squares and schools, the ordinary people saw Douglas and Lucien, who intentionally refrained their vibes, and these ordinary people only recognized their identities through the subtitle.

“An experiment conducted by grand arcanists in person?” Ali’s eyes were almost popping out. It was already beyond his wildest imagination. Not just in the Magic Empire, but even in the Congress of Magic where the hierarchy was not too rigorous, the senior-rank sorcerers barely had a chance to watch the experiments of the Excellencies if they were not the students of the grand arcanists.

In places like Holm, “grand arcanist” was almost a synonym to “god”.

COMMENT

What were the experiments that the two grand arcanists were about to stream?

.....

“What? Douglas and Lucien Evans are about to stream arcana experiments?” In the Holy City, Pope Viken, who had just finished the daily treatment for Melmax, received the report from a red robe.

The red robe said in a panic, “Yes, but I don’t know what the experiments are. I was worried that I would be swallowed by the holy light, so...”

“As long as you are pious and determined, you won’t be swallowed by the holy light whatever you are faced with,” Viken said solemnly. Then, he performed divine power and received the signal.

In Antiffler, Rudolf II began to watch the show too.

Chapter 798: The Quantum Eraser Experiment

Chapter 798: The Quantum Eraser Experiment

On the top floor of the Allyn magic tower, in the studio that had temporarily been arranged into a laboratory, other than Douglas and Lucien, who was working as his assistant this time, all the members of the Highest Council who could come were gathered. Samantha, Louise, and the other personnel of the Sky Television Channel were also waiting attentively and uneasily.

Although they were not clear about the experiment that was to be publicly streamed, they had guessed a thing or two seeing that the big shots of the Highest Council were both wary and tempted, and that “Brain Eater” Lucien Evans was personally involved in the experiment. Was it a decisive and disruptive experiment in the microscopic domain? Was it one of the thought experiments that the Excellencies proposed earlier?

Faced with the camera, Douglas tried to make himself look less grave. He said kindly and peacefully, “Everyone, I believe that you’ve already known that I became a demigod.”

In the generic schools and the noble school, Ali, Longman, Jane, and all the other students nodded in excitement, as if they were communicating with the Emperor of Arcana face to face. The unusual phenomenon that day was too eye-catching and glorious. Nobody could’ve missed it!

In the Holy City, Viken thought to himself, Is he using the experiment as an excuse to officially announce his advancement into the demigod level, in order to increase the morale and confidence of the supporters of the Congress of Magic?

He did not think that any experiment was a threat to himself. After all, he did not have a cognitive world anymore, and the heart of faith was completely under his control and would not be shaken. Therefore, he received the signals without worries and drew a wall in his library to display the image.

After learning the way to steal the power of faith and gather godhood from Viken, the Grand Cardinals had a deeper understanding of the “God of Truth” too. They believed that nothing could shake their heart of faith easily. Therefore, they were also watching the stream in various ways, hoping to figure out the Congress of Magic’s purpose as soon as possible so that they could take countermeasures.

The red robes, on the other hand, were mostly in a dilemma. They were curious about what the experiment was and why it was streamed, but they were too scared to watch it directly. They could still see their partners who were swallowed by the holy light and turned into torches or fireworks!

“The celestial bodies’ motion system... Advancing because of the sun... Perhaps you are the real ‘Sun King’...” After hearing Douglas’ announcement, Rudolf II looked at the screen in self-mockery. “I should focus on the path of the ‘God of Truth’.”

His talk to himself seemed to be a full stop for his identity as a sorcerer in the past.

On the stream screen, Douglas said with a smile, “It’s indeed important to have become a demigod, but for me, the most delightful thing is that I am now able to explore the realms that I couldn’t with the capabilities of a demigod. For example, I would like to know if there’s another planet that has intelligent lives in this boundless universe. Another example, the two thought experiments that Evans, I, and other arcanists devised can be accomplished now.”

Ali was so captivated that he really felt the heart of exploration that was full of passion about the unknown and the faith in arcana that did not change because of one’s strength.

Now that a demigod talked so calmly and casually, he had an even deeper understanding of the charm and the vision of grand arcanists!

As for the other arcanists, knights, and ordinary people who admired the demigod, they also somehow felt that the universe was too vast for any demigod under Douglas' casual narration.

"Two thought experiments?" Viken knocked on the table, speculating which two thought experiments they might have been. It was not because he was not smart and keen enough, but because the grand arcanists like Lucien had proposed far too many thought experiments.

Douglas pointed at Lucien who was next to him. "The stream experiment this time will be completed by Evans and me together so that you will truly see the wonder of the microscopic domain. Honestly speaking, I do not know what the results will be like either. We will face any possible situation together with all of you."

"The microscopic domain?"

"The microscopic domain!"

The demigods like Viken, Rudolf II, and the Lord of Hell all became solemn. After Lucien proposed the quantum superposition state and the notions like dispersion and collapse, they realized that it had a lot of similarities to their own existence and dedicated all their attention to the microscopic domain. It was also the reason why they neglected Douglas previously.

They looked at the screen carefully and confirmed whether or not the experiments were affected by other factors through various methods. They vaguely guessed what the thought experiments would be.

"Firstly, Evans will demonstrate the double-slit experiment with electrons." Douglas slightly backed off and gave the stage to Lucien.

Lucien took off his top hat and put it on the shelf, as casual as if he were at home. Such an attitude gradually calmed the scared and anxious arcanists.

Then, Lucien began to repeat the double-slit experiment with electrons that he did a few years ago.

When the electrons passed through the two slits and formed the classic interferometric fringes on the screen behind, both the ordinary people like Ali, Longman, and Jane, as well as the arcanists like Heidi and Annick, exclaimed in amazement. Although they had known the result through personal experiments or newspapers, they were still shocked that the electron, which had a mass, momentum, and trajectory, could behave as pure waves.

After Lucien installed an alarm next to the slits, confirming exactly which slit the electrons passed through, the interferometric fringes on the screen were gone, and the electrons behaved as pure particles.

“Well...” Even though they had read the record about the double-slit experiment from Arcana Voice and newspapers, ordinary people like Ali, Longman, and Jane never had the opportunity to witness the experiment in person. The experiment was so simple and easy to understand, but the result was too unbelievable. So, they all shook their heads in confusion and disbelief, unconvinced that the interferometric fringes were gone just because they observed which slit the electrons passed through!

Was the electron more marvelous than magic?

Inside the Atom Institution, Heidi, Katrina and the other arcanists watched their teacher conduct the experiment solemnly. What was most scary about the experiment was not the phenomenon but how to explain it!

Annick grabbed a cup nervously, trying to calm him down by drinking water. Sprint, on the other hand, held his hands tightly and stuck them to the experiment table before him, not revealing his feelings. They had both guessed which two thought experiments would be done next!

What would the result be like?

After interpreting and demonstrating the double-slit experiment, Lucien said with a smile, “Next, we are going to transform the experiment to minimize the interferences while keeping the mechanism the same.”

Then, Lucien deployed a new experiment. Through a demonstration, he proved that it was equal to the double-slit experiment just now.

“They’re indeed equal. There’s no problem at all...” Fernando nodded.

The demigods like Viken and Rudolf II did not have a profound understanding of arcana, but as demigods, it was fairly easy for them to decide whether or not the two experiments were equal.

“Next, we will conduct the quantum eraser experiment, which is a variant of the experiment just now. Just now, you must’ve seen that when the two ‘alarms’ next to the slits recorded the electrons as they passed through the slits and sent out alarms, the interferometric fringes were gone, and the particle properties were manifested.

“Now, we will only make the alarms record but not let them send out any alarms, and they will erase the records immediately after they record the information. What will we see then? Will the interferometric fringes be gone?”

Lucien lucidly explained the mechanism of the experiment instead of the real experiment process.

“Of course, the interferometric fringes will be gone, and the particle properties will be revealed. It’s essentially the same as the previous experiment. The only difference is that we cannot know which slit the electrons used to pass through the alarms now, but can our knowledge affect the experiment result at all?” Having studied the basics of arcana for years, Longman had a few guesses about the experiment, which seemed rather “simple”.

The ordinary students like Ali and Jane and most magic apprentices and arcanists thought the same. The only difference between this experiment and the previous one was whether or not the “experimenter” knew the trajectory of the electrons. However, whether or not the experimenter knew it shouldn’t affect the objectivity of an actual experiment.

Annick did not put down his cup because he had been completely devoted to the experiment. Sprint, Heidi, and the others also held their breath and waited for the result, which would either suggest that the world was normal or prove that the world was so unbelievable and illusionary. Which would it be?

Would it be normal or abnormal?

Viken, Maltimus, and the other demigods were even more solemn because it also concerned their understanding of the world. Did Douglas and Lucien really not know the result?

Douglas walked to the experiment table. He demonstrated the “erosion” effect with the newly-added experiment devices. After everybody saw it clearly, he chuckled. “I’m rather curious about the result myself. Let’s begin now.”

All the people who watched the live stream held their breath and focused their eyes on the screen, waiting for the result of the experiment.

Douglas activated the experiment. At first, it was the regular procedure, and the interferometric fringes appeared. Then, the quantum eraser experiment was begun.

Would the interferometric fringes disappear, and would the particle features be displayed this time?

COMMENT

The alarms had caused such a result previously!

Time went by one second after another, but the interferometric fringes on the screen were still so clear, so beautiful, and so classic!

The ordinary people like Ali and Longman and most of the magic apprentices and arcanists could barely close their mouths, and they couldn’t have looked more hilarious. The only difference between the current experiment and the previous one was whether or not they knew the trajectory of the electrons, but how could their knowledge affect the result of the experiment?

This was too illogical!

There was nothing but quietness in the studio, except for the heavy and hasty breath.

Crack!

The cup in Annick's hands fell on the ground and broke into pieces, and water splashed everywhere. He kept murmuring to himself, "The observer effect..."

Boom!

Before he knew it, Sprint pushed down the experiment table before him.

Pope Viken seemed to be both delighted and surprised by the result. He said to himself in a low voice, "The observer effect!"

Chapter 799: The Worldview Destroyer

“The observer effect!” At the same time, in the Maple Palace in Antiffler, the previous Sun King, as well as the current Rudolf II of the empire, stood upon his throne and blinked to before the screen. His eyes were deep and solemn but also filled with delight.

At this moment, he seemed to have grasped the key to return to the demigod level!

Although the current experiment did not have double slits and the beeping alarms and that it adopted a brand-new design, through which the purpose of recording and erasing was cleverly achieved, Douglas and Lucien had demonstrated the equivalence of the two experiments a moment ago. According to Lucien, the current experiment had ruled out many unnecessary “interferences” so that the subtle “effect” would not be sabotaged. That was the reason why the experiment could only be conducted after Douglas became a demigod.

Therefore, all the intelligent lives with the slightest knowledge felt that their whole bodies were shaking. Was their observation the key to the disappearance of wave features and the appearance of particle properties?

Then, was the world still objective and actual?

Was it the observer effect that Lucien Evans proposed?

Before the experiment table, Douglas’ raised hands were obviously shaking. It was obvious that he found the result unacceptable. However, everything had been designed and conducted by him in person, without any negligence or other influences. The result was real and trustworthy.

Lucien proposed the thought experiment at the beginning exactly to prove the observer effect!

Although the reasons other than the observer effect could not be excluded just yet, all the arcanists were forced to consider the possibility that the observer effect did exist. At the very least, until they found another theoretical explanation, they could not neglect the observer effect anymore!

Douglas stabilized his hands that seemed to be dispersing and repeated the experiment, but the transformed interferometric fringes were as clear as before.

Once, twice, thrice... After five times, Douglas raised his head and said solemnly in a low voice, "The duplicability suggests that the result of the experiment is legitimate. After today, all the arcanists can apply to repeat the experiment with those devices."

The studio was in dead silence. Samantha, Louise, and some members of the Highest Council were still in confusion, disbelief, and resistance. Brook, Fernando, Hathaway, Hellen, Oliver, Vicente, and the other legendary sorcerers were deep in thought. After the great shock, they began to consider alternative explanations other than the observer effect.

Inside the Atom Institution, Annick shook his head and paced back and forth, not bothering that he was walking on pieces of glass. His mouth opened and closed, as if he wanted to propose another reason. Sprint, on the other hand, was stunned. There was no telling what he was thinking.

"The observer effect... Is there really an observer effect?" Heidi murmured.

The experiment was designed to confirm the observer effect, and the result undoubtedly showed that it was working.

Inside the generic school, Ali looked at his classmates and asked both them and himself, "It's impossible. If our senses are the reason for everything, will our world still be objective and actual? This does not agree with arcana at all..."

The comparison of the two experiments had manifested a horrifying conclusion.

"At the very least, it's our own observation, not gods, that caused it.

Our fate is still in our hands,” Charlot, the monitor, replied subconsciously.

“Well... Well...” The students next to them were so overwhelmed that they felt the arcana they learned had been entirely overturned. What was right?

On the stream screen, Douglas no longer looked as grave as before. Gently and solemnly, he said, “This is the end of the quantum eraser experiment. In the next, we will run the second and the last experiment, which is Lucien’s experiment of deferred choice. We are going to transform the classic double-slit experiment again to better highlight the result.”

He replaced the double-slit experiment with another experiment and demonstrated the equivalence.

“The previous double-slit experiment let us know that, if we choose the wave features and design an experiment accordingly, we will eventually see the diffraction patterns, but if we want to see the particle properties and add alarms, it will be the pure overlapping spots of light on the screen.

“In such cases, our choice and the corresponding arrangement lead to different results.”

Douglas was cautious enough to not speak of the observer effect but said “choices” and “corresponding arrangement”.

The arcanists who watched the live stream nodded. Whatever the theoretical explanation was, Mr. President had just described the objective facts of the experiment. There couldn’t be anything wrong about that.

Douglas went on. “What if we delay the choice? In the previous experiments, the electrons had obviously passed two slits and two routes, thereby engaged in self-entanglement, when they behaved as waves; and when they behaved as particles, they must’ve passed only one of the slits. Then, what will happen if we make a choice after the electrons choose a route but haven’t reached the screen? Will we see the electrons coming from two routes or from one?”

Since the double-slit experiment had been transformed, Douglas used routes instead of slits to refer to the process in between.

“Whatever the choice is, the route of the electrons has been fixed before the choice, and it cannot change...” The ordinary people like Ali had recovered from the shock of the quantum eraser experiment just now. They began to speculate what might happen with their shallow knowledge of arcana.

Annick shook his head to keep himself away from other explanations of the quantum eraser experiment and focus his attention on this experiment.

The new experiment that his teacher proposed was also related to the observer effect, but Annick did not think that the result would be in favor of the observer hypothesis. After all, whether the electrons walked on two routes or on one had been fixed before the choice was made. “Observation” couldn’t change what had already happened, could it?

Pope Viken in the Holy City held back his delight and watched Douglas prepare the experiment expressionlessly.

What was the experiment trying to prove?

He did not think anything unexpected would happen after the major shock just now. The new experiment was more likely meant to prove a certain bold hypothesis wrong.

Rudolf II sat on the throne in the Maple Palace and watched the experiment in silence. He somehow had a bad feeling.

The members of the Highest Council in the studio and Samantha, Louise, and the other staff were also slightly confused. Was Lucien Evans trying to prove that the current observation could change the past? It was a thought that was even more unbelievable than reversing the time!

The past had been fixed. How could it be changed?

Douglas activated the experiment. The detector sent out a signal, suggesting that the electrons came on one route.

The experiment was repeated and repeated, proving again and again that the electrons were only coming on one route after the preliminary procedures.

Suddenly, when the electrons finished the preliminary procedures and hadn't reached the detector, Douglas quickly added a new experimental device that showed that he chose the wave properties.

At this time, the detector in the other direction and the current detector beeped at the same time nonstop.

Douglas' face was pale because he knew exactly what it meant!

It meant that, after he made a choice, the electrons, which had undoubtedly been traveling on one route, came from two directions. The past had been changed!

Their "observation" had changed the past of the electrons!

Thud, thud, thud.

Samantha stepped backward until she hit the wall. Her face was gloomy, and her eyes were widened and filled with tears. Did it mean that the strict law of causality did not work in the timeline? A cause could happen after the consequence? The present could change the past?

Crack, crack, crack.

The notebooks and quills in the hands of most members of the Highest Council fell to the ground. The coldness and shiver from the depths of their soul made them unable to say anything. It was even more unbelievable and incredible than any magic!

Even the grand arcanists like Brook and Fernando were slightly confused at this moment. How was it possible? The choices at present decided what happened in the past?

The noises of items being broken echoed in the entire Allyn nonstop, but nobody said anything. It was like a city of silence.

No arcanists wouldn't be overwhelmed by such an experiment.

They felt that the world was collapsing and everything was an illusion!

Many of them rubbed their heads so hard that they almost wanted to crumble it so that they wouldn't be as painful and desperate. Had it not been for the fact that it did not concern the components of their cognitive world, corpses, blood, and brains would've been all over the ground everywhere. Few arcanists above the middle rank could've survived it.

Even so, they had sensed the collapse of beliefs. They felt that they did not recognize this world anymore. There was nothing but grayness in their eyes.

The students who were watching the stream like Ali and Longman found it even more unacceptable. They swallowed hard, finding it hard to believe that the consequence actually decided the process. It was the opposite of their common sense and natural instincts!

Nobody could say anything as they watched Douglas repeat the experiment.

Boom!

The Maple Palace in Antiffler had such an intense explosion that the most splendid and magnificent palace was reduced into ruins. Covered in wounds, Rudolf II murmured to himself as if he had gone mad, "Determinism, law of causality... Determinism, law of causality..."

He did not calm down again until a long time later, but he knew very well that he could only count on a miracle, or "Mountain Paradise" that was under the control of Viken, in order to return to the demigod level, because his worldview had been completely destroyed.

Thanos, the most distinguished genius in the Magic Empire and the first expert in history who found the path to the demigod level, truly understood what "Worldview Destroyer" meant!

In the Holy City, Viken was equally lost and overwhelmed at first, but then, he burst into crazy laughter. “The observer, the law of causality on the reversed timeline, and the present changing the past. I got it now! I got it now!”

Chapter 800: Notoriety

Chapter 800: Notoriety

Viken's laughter was undisguised. The two red robes that stayed out of the library looked at each other in bewilderment, wondering why His Holiness was laughing so crazily when the Congress of Magic was streaming. Had Douglas' head been broken after he became a demigod, and he publicly announced that he would surrender to the Church in the stream?

Other than that, they really could not think of a second reason why the Congress of Magic's stream made His Holiness delighted instead of angry.

Of course, they knew very well that it would never happen.

After a good laugh, Viken resumed calmness and held back his feelings. It was Douglas' experiment after all and could not be entirely trusted. What if the guy was intentionally deceiving him? He had to repeat the experiment a few times himself to confirm the result before he made any further plans.

The experiment this time was not too complicated, and the difficult parts were the delicate control and craft of devices. For Pope Viken who had profound alchemical knowledge and who had been focusing on and studying arcana, it wasn't too intricate. The greatest difference between him and the grand arcanists was not the practical abilities but the way of thinking under the arcana system. Therefore, it was impossible for him to design such an experiment, and he could only follow the research progress of Douglas and Lucien.

...

In the square, as Douglas repeated the experiment, "This is impossible!" burst out nonstop. The ordinary people who had been listening and watching the Congress' programs were more or less taught with common sense and logic. How could they not be appalled by the fact that the result decided the process? Also, it was completely in violation of their daily experience and their natural instincts as intelligent creatures!

However, as the result of the experiment was confirmed again and again, their fear was gradually diminished. After all, magic was itself something beyond their imagination. The reason why the fallout of the law of causality did not disrupt their minds was that it had already been destroyed by magic a long time ago.

“Magic is so marvelous!” A senior gentleman announced excitedly, “It can extend your life and change the past!”

A sorcerer, who had happened to pass by and therefore watched the stream in the square by the way, looked at him “poignantly”. Could the two things even be compared?

This sorcerer’s head and eyes were swollen with blood. He felt that his understanding of the world and his life had been turned upside down. Everything had turned illusionary and did not mean anything anymore. After all, the decisions at present would change the past!

Before, all the sorcerers believed that the past was as unchangeable as the future was unpredictable. However, the past turned out to be changeable right now?

His ears were humming as if there were a rumble of thunder. He turned his head at a loss, wondering if he were in a dream.

Another old man who was wearing a soft hat also exclaimed in excitement, “Yes. Magic is so marvelous. I’m told that the senior-rank sorcerers could extend their lives by hundreds of years and remain as vigorous as when they were young!”

They focused more attention on that than they did on the dreamy experiment result where the present changed the past.

Many bards and playwrights around, after recovering from the shock, were thrilled. Such a fantastic experiment had inspired them. They couldn’t wait to create spectacular and astounding stories. For example, when a “strong observer” killed someone, all his traces in the past would be erased and replaced by other people and things.

Therefore, nobody would remember him anymore, and nobody would even know that such a person once lived in this world...

The more they thought, the more excited they became. Some of them even squatted and recorded their inspirations with their pens and paper.

It was foreseeable that the mysteriousness of the microscopic domain would feed a bunch of playwrights and bards.

Not as simple and happy as them, the students in the generic schools and the noble schools were in excruciating pain. The experiments that Mr. President and Mr. Evans conducted in person overthrew their most basic common sense and violated the most fundamental logic. They held their heads that were almost splitting apart. On one side, it was a regular world with regular knowledge, and on the other side, it was the unbelievable world revealed by the experiments just now. They fought intensely inside their brains like angels and devils.

At this moment, they experienced what pain and disruption were. For the first time in their lives, they regretted picking up so much arcana knowledge!

Why... Why did I come to watch an experiment where Mr. Evans was involved?

Why did I want to kill myself?

Ali thought in a daze. Am I real right now? Is my every thought right now changing my previous self?

“No, no, there has to be another explanation. No mathematics can describe this...” Longman tried to calm himself down, but he could not stop himself from murmuring.

While they were in pain and feeling lost, the magic apprentices and the arcanists were dead silent, as if they were not even breathing. The other people couldn't help but worry that their heads would explode at the same time.

In the studio, Douglas repeated the experiment and got the same result, but he did not stop and simply continued mechanically without any expression on his face.

It was not until Lucien coughed that he heaved a long sigh and stopped the experiment. He spoke to all the audience solemnly, “I believe that the most fundamental stance for the arcanists is to respect experiments, phenomena, and mathematics.”

His words sounded like an announcement. Samantha, Louise, and the other arcanists who were involved in the stream could barely keep standing on their feet. They collapsed on the floor, just like how their previous knowledge, common sense, and natural instincts could no longer support their worldviews.

In Allyn, Rentato, and every place that the stream was available, the arcanists had similar reactions. The sorcerers who were good at astrology, in particular, were sobbing silently, as if they were mourning for the dying determinism and the law of causality that might have been sabotaged.

Over the past few years, determinism had reached the verge of destruction, but they were always reluctant to admit it and did not face the reality until they suffered such a powerful and disruptive blast. They were more vulnerable than ever.

Indescribable sorrow, loss, confusion, and desperation enshrouded the City in the Sky and the major branches of the Congress of Magic.

Douglas looked around at the studio. He saw that except for Brook, Fernando, and the other few legendary sorcerers who were considering questions solemnly, the other arcanists all seemed weak and overwhelmed. Thinking for a moment, he said, “The most important thing for us right now is to figure out why such a result appears. It must be noted that microscopic particles are a matter that can disperse everywhere. Maybe we can find an explanation in other ways, instead of forcing us to believe that the present can change the past.”

His words rejuvenated the shocked arcanists and gradually recovered them.

After the stream was over, Douglas sighed softly as he watched Samantha and the other arcanists leaving in sadness. “In any case, it’s high time that they pay enough attention to the problems of determinism. In the age of the grand development of arcana, there are as much glory, splendor, delight, excitement, and ecstasy, and there are sorrow, pain, and desperation. This is an epoch of smiles and tears.”

“But after today, without theoretical breakthroughs, most arcanists in the Congress will stagnate for ten years because of the instability of their cognitive world caused by the disruption of their fundamental principles.” Brook, who had the experience of being broken and solidified, walked over with mixed feelings.

Fernando stared at the experimental device but was as mean as before. “It’s better to stagnate right now than to stagnate in the future, at which time their lives would stagnate for good. Right now, we have one demigod and four top legends. It’s enough to protect them while they reshape their worldviews.”

Footsteps echoed outside. Annick, Sprint, Heidi, and Lucien’s other students reached the studio. After they watched the experiment, they could not control themselves anymore and wanted to ask their teacher as soon as possible.

Looking at that, Douglas smiled bitterly. “It was you who proposed both of the two thought experiments, Evans. So, I believe that most arcanists, magic apprentices, and ordinary people with basic arcana common sense will be terrified the moment your name is mentioned after this stream.”

“How notorious I am...” Lucien scratched his chin and smiled helplessly.

“Master, is this really contradictory to the law of causality? I don’t really think so...” Though introvert and shy, Annick had been unusually persistent about arcana questions. So, after greeting the Excellencies, he asked his teacher without any delay and expressed his opinion.

Hearing his question, Douglas, Hathaway, Oliver, and other people moved their eyes on Lucien's face too. They were also interested in Lucien's opinion on the experiment.

Lucien seemed to have foreseen Annick's question. Without thinking, he answered, "It's possible that Mr. President's opinion is true. The electrons disperse in space and come from all routes, and only after we choose a result we want to see will they collapse on one or two routes. It's not because the present changes the past, but because the electrons haven't collapsed before the choice is made, and the routes were never decided until then."

Before the choice is made... Annick's eyes widened. "The observer effect?"

Such an explanation resolved the contradictions about the law of causality, but it also highlighted the observer effect!

Lucien's lips pursed. He smiled at Annick but did not say anything else.

Fernando and the rest of them shook their heads, still reluctant to accept the observer effect. Therefore, they all left and returned to their own homes, contemplating and trying to figure out an explanation that neither stressed the observer effect nor violated the law of causality.

Chapter 801: New Messenger

Chapter 801: New Messenger

In Babel inside the Atomic Universe...

By the time Lucien returned, Natasha was still in a daze before the minor screen. She looked ahead while turning the Sword of Truth in her hand.

“What’s up?” Lucien asked, finding it strange. Considering her arcana expertise, she shouldn’t have been shocked for such a long time, should she?

Hearing Lucien’s voice, Natasha seemed to be woken up from a dream. Her silver eyes glittering, she said, “Although the delayed choice experiment cannot conclusively prove that the law of causality can be destroyed, I am thinking whether or not the Sword of Truth is crafted based on such a mechanism. Are all the methods of resurrection nullified because the law of causality has been sabotaged?”

Lucien looked at her solemnly up and down. Despite her usual confidence and firmness, she was somewhat stunned. Could she be right?

The atmosphere was frozen for several minutes just like that. Right when Natasha couldn’t stand it any longer and was about to speak again, Lucien suddenly smiled in great delight. “You are thinking too much.”

“Really? I don’t do that very often,” Natasha said in a matter-of-fact, showing no frustration at all.

Lucien’s smile was gone. He nodded and said, “It’s a major progress to consider the arcana mechanism behind the blood power of the Sword of Truth. Only figuring out what it is exactly will you know how to walk on. Although I am still not certain, I have a vague speculation about your blood power. By the time I return from the primeval hell, perhaps I’ll be able to tell you what it is.”

“Really?” Natasha was both surprised and delighted at Lucien’s words. The knight path up ahead was an important focus of her life. The seclusion every month had made her realize that understanding her blood power was an indispensable prerequisite for her to find out her own path of a knight. Otherwise, she could only become a level-three legendary knight after several hundred years like “Heart of Time”, and she wouldn’t be able to make any further progression.

For a knight who was better at fighting and persistence, exploring and studying her blood power was not her advantage. Chances were that she would have to spend a fairly long time on that. Thankfully, she had a grand arcanist by her side, one who was famous for his studies!

After she blurted out, Natasha noticed another point. “You’re going to the primeval hell?”

She did not pursue the previous topic any further because she was certain that Lucien would not lie to her about such an important question. If he said that he had a theory, he definitely had a theory, and everything would be clear after he returned from the primeval hell.

“I have benefited a lot from the two experiments. After I construct another few spells, it will be time for you to pay a visit to the primeval hell to confirm one of my ideas. By then, everything will have an answer,” Lucien said ambiguously. “Although the Lord of Hell has steadily arrived at the main material world, his real body must still be in the depths of hell. So, I have to go alone this time. Also, the situation is rather dangerous today. It’s better to deal with the emergencies if you stay in Rentato.”

Biting her lips, Natasha nodded slowly. “Alright.”

She knew very well that, although she had the Shield of Truth and the Sword of Truth, which gave her an actual combat ability of level three of legendary, she would still be crushed when faced with a demigod. Also, she did not have as many peculiar life-saving spells as sorcerers did, and she would only be a liability if she were to follow Lucien to hell. As a top legend, he could fight or flee freely. There would be ways for him to escape even if he were faced with a demigod.

“I’m going to develop a new legendary spell which will help us communicate across dimensions. Should there be any emergency, we would be able to reach out to each other.” Lucien tried to be prepared, but he was not really too worried. With Mr. President in Allyn, unless Viken performed God’s Arrival without caring about his own life, or all the other demigods joined their hands, there wouldn’t be anything that was worth a cross-dimension call. As a matter of fact, he was probably the one who would encounter strange things after he went to the primeval hell.

“Communicate across dimensions?” Natasha repeated those words. She had never heard of any way to communicate across dimensions except through the Portal to Alternate Realms. So, she was rather confused and curious.

Lucien nodded and smiled. “This legendary method of communication indeed supports communication across different alternate dimensions. However, it can only be used once and deliver limited information. Also, the code of the communication has to be settled in advance. Basically, when you settle a state on your side, a corresponding state will collapse on my side. Information can be delivered by combining such states, like the binary system.”

“It feels like another application of the weird features of microscopic particles...” Having been taught for a long time, Natasha made the conclusion very confidently. Then, she adjusted her mood and chuckled. “You said that you benefited a lot from the two experiments today. What have you earned exactly? The confirmation of the observer effect, or the disruption of the law of causality?”

Lucien could sense her curiosity that she had been hiding. He replied with a smile, “For me, the most important lesson is that electrons can be used to complete the two experiments under such designs and circumstances. Mr. President and I planned to use photons.”

“Is there any difference?” Natasha was confused. She understood the experiment perfectly, but the sophisticated questions where theories were involved were too much for amateurs like her to comprehend.

“You want to know the difference? It involves quantum field theory, wave mechanics, the matrix mechanics...” Lucien intentionally proposed a bunch of theories.

“Stop, stop, stop.” Her head swelling, Natasha hurried to stop him and change the topic. “In the first experiment, the trajectory mark of electrons was erased by the design, thereby preventing the experimenter from obtaining the information. Therefore, the interferometric fringes still existed, and the observer effect was still sensible. However, it cannot prove the conclusion perfectly. If the trajectory mark is not erased, but the experimenter’s eyes, ears, and all other senses are all blocked, will the interferometric fringes still exist? Will there be any ‘observer’ under such circumstances?”

Lucien looked at Natasha in surprise. Perhaps it was exactly because she did not know very much that she could ask such creative questions.

Thinking for a moment, he chuckled in a low voice. “Who knows? Nobody can know the result, because when anybody observes it, there will be an ‘observer’, but if nobody observes it, does the result really matter? It cannot be confirmed anyway.”

“Then, let’s assume that a mysterious existence that doesn’t cause the observer effect is watching it...” Natasha made use of her imagination. “Why don’t you take a guess from the theoretical point of view?”

“My guess?” Lucien smiled and said, “My guess is that there may be interferometric fringes, and there may be not. Hahahaha.”

Natasha raised her head and looked at the ceiling, making up her mind never to discuss arcana questions with him again.

...

In June of 830, everything was being burned by the fiery weather.

In the Salvation Cathedral of Anhadur, a famous city in the Syracuse Kingdom...

An archbishop was pacing back and forth outside the praying room, waiting for the red robes.

“Why is the praying still not finished? Another cult has been discovered in a manor nearby...” The archbishop paced and sighed while scratching his head. In the past few years, cults had been emerging incessantly. After one was destroyed, another would pop up immediately. Although he was in his prime years, his hair had all turned white as he dealt with them. “Also, the cult this time seems able to summon senior-rank evil creatures. I don’t think the people in the inquisition can take care of it.”

Thinking about the ongoing battle over there, the archbishop grew more and more anxious. He decided to summon his courage and knock on the door.

Dum, dum, dum.

The archbishop knocked on the door, but the moment he exerted his strength, the door squeaked and backed off, leaving a gap.

“It’s not closed?” The archbishop had a bad feeling. He hurried to open the door and looked in.

Then, his eyes were frozen.

Before the cross in the praying room, a broken red robe lay on the ground with strange burn marks on his body.

“Has... Has he been swallowed by the holy light?” the archbishop said at a loss.

It was not because he was particularly keen. It was because ever since Evans’ two thought experiments were spread out, dozens of red robes had been swallowed by the holy light while they were praying. As a result, everybody was terrified whenever Lucien Evans was mentioned.

...

The sky was dim and gray, and nothing could be heard at all. The World of Souls was as monotonous as ever.

His hands in the pockets of his black double-breasted suit, Lucien wandered among the undead creatures. There were raging ghouls, slow and hideous zombies, floating ghosts, mummies that were covered in bandages, but none of them detected him, because he seemed to have dispersed in space.

Just like that, Lucien passed through the plain of death quietly and reached the Temple of Spirits. The legendary specters who guarded the place failed to detect him too, and they simply allowed him to visit and press further like a tourist.

On his way, Lucien did not meet any intelligent specter. It seemed that they had smelled danger and were too scared to approach.

Lucien observed the new changes in the Temple of Spirits as he walked, only to discover nothing. It was not until he reached the Furnace of Souls and was about to enter the Realm of Gates that he sensed the legendary specters like the Lich King. However, they did not feel the necessity to attack. After all, Lucien had come twice. There wouldn't be any losses if he came a few more times. Did they really need to fight at the risk of their lives?

They had been too heavily beaten up!

Lucien came to this place for the second time when he contacted Monster Viken for cooperation.

Looking up at the Furnace of Souls and watching Lucien and Xiaofeng's overlapping faces, Lucien chuckled and walked to the entrance of the Realm of Gates.

"Why are you here again?" Monster Viken's coarse voice echoed. What he did last time made his situation much worse.

Lucien chuckled. "I'm here to tell you that I am going to pay a visit to the primeval hell."

"You've come for nothing better than that?" Monster Viken raised his voice, feeling that Lucien was the crazy one here.

Lucien took out his Moon Timer and opened the cover to check the time. “Can’t I? Well, now that you’ve known it, I’d better be on my way.”

Monster Viken was already rendered speechless.

Lucien turned around and left. He thought to himself that no changes happened after all.

After he was far away from the Temple of Spirits, from the garden near the entrance, an old man slowly walked out. Wearing a sacred crown and holding a planetarium staff, he stared at the place where Lucien disappeared. It was Pope Viken

Chapter 802: The Afterworld

Chapter 802: The Afterworld

Navathe, the third floor of hell, was known by the sorcerers of the main material world as “Burning Metropolis”.

On this floor of hell that did not seem to have an edge, there were no plains, mountains, rivers, hill, or deserts, but only a magnificent city made of iron. However, since the underground fire was burning incessantly the whole time, even iron could be scorched. As a result, most of the iron buildings were in heated redness. Every pale ghost that approached was sizzling with black smoke, as if they would be vaporized into nothingness at any point.

The suffocating smoke enshrouded the sky, and all kinds of devils wandered in the iron city. They were quite in order themselves, but they treated every soul that entered the hell and the demons that had been captured cruelly.

It was said that at the bottom of the Burning Metropolis, in the middle of the infinite fire, there was an enormous prison where different intelligent creatures were caged. The most direct proof was that when somebody walked on the burning ground, they would often hear moans and cries that came from nowhere.

A squad of little devils escorted a group of fuzzy, pale souls toward the tower at the center of the Burning Metropolis. Now and then, they waved their special whips, making the souls that had entered the hell scream in pain. The more painful the captives were, the more excited the little devils were.

“No wonder so many posthumous customs are popular, and no wonder the Saint Truth was spread so fast...” In a huge business team, Lucien, who did not change his appearance and clothes, sighed in interest and pity. It was the first time that he had entered the hell.

According to the studies of the Congress of Magic in the past, after a human died, their soul would perish on the spot if they did not have special techniques, but in the river that flowed between the hell and the abyss, souls would pop up without their former memories and looks. It was impossible to tell their identities. Such souls would either degenerate into demons and devils in abyss and hell, or be crafted into “soul gems” that could cast special spells or abilities. Such gems were the hard currency in hell.

As for the nature of the soul and how it was generated, it was a conundrum in current arcana studies.

However, after the World of Souls was discovered, the arcanists had reasons to believe that one of the destinies of a soul was the World of Souls. If the posthumous customs could form corresponding spaces in the Realm of Gates, the souls who had strong willpower could certainly enter it too.

Perhaps because of his empathy, the idea occurred to Lucien that, after the Congress suppressed the Saint Truth in the main material world and while it explored the vast cosmos and other dimensions, it would also be necessary to get hell under control. Of course, considering the Congress’ capabilities right now and the enemies it was faced with, there would be a long time before the goal was fulfilled.

“Get the hell under the government of the Congress of Magic... That’s something that the Magic Empire dare not even think about.” Lucien floated on the street. All the stones on it were red. If one were to put an egg on the street, it would immediately be boiled. Other than devils who were born in fire, even knights could not stand such heat for a long time. That was why the souls and captives were in such pain.

The business team Lucien was with was an “Alternate Dimension Trade Group” that the Congress of Magic organized. It had come openly for business. After all, devils were not virtuous saints who did not need food, resources, and entertainment. They too needed the resources that the hell did not have to craft weapons and improve their strength, and their luxury lives had to be maintained. So, they would ask the devil followers to gather resources for them in the main material world and then exchange for such resources fairly.

Such trade certainly couldn't have been done without sorcerers who were good at collection and alchemy. On the other hand, the Congress of Magic needed the special materials of hell. Also, monopolizing such trade could help curb the devils, in case certain greedy people provided strategic resources for treasure, strength, and peace of their souls after their death.

Of course, it was also because of such trade that sorcerers were considered more evil in the past.

Two devils with dark red skins walked to them from another street. Kicking away the soul of a human, they said to the leaders of the "trade group" respectfully, "Esteemed sorcerers, the duke is waiting for your goods."

The devils dare not show any disrespect for the guests of the Iron Duke, or they were likely to become the items that the duke offered to the sorcerers as part of the trade. Every part of a devil was a material, and they could be used as servants. Under such a threat, they behaved differently when they were faced with general humans and when they faced with the trade group.

Seit, the leader of the trade group, nodded proudly and turned to look at Lucien. "Your Excellency, are you going to the Iron Tower?"

As a senior-rank sorcerer, how could he not know the famous grand arcanist Lucien "Atom Controller" Evans?

Raising his head and looking at the red tower at the center of the Burning Metropolis, Lucien smiled and said, "I'm not going. I don't think the Iron Duke wants to see me."

On the top floor of the Iron Tower, the Iron Duke, who was in utter black, looked down solemnly. A top legend who had caused the demise of many other legends was certainly not the best "guest", particularly so for himself who was only level-two legendary and who could only resist level-three legends with the Burning Metropolis.

"If you ever need us, you can contact Colin in 'Balance of Souls'." Seit did not pursue any further. It was not wise to ask about the plan of a grand arcanist recklessly.

The Balance of Souls was the “alchemical cabin” that the Congress of Magic established in the Burning Metropolis.

Lucien nodded and soon melted into the crowd of devils and few “merchants” in the iron city.

“The Lord of Hell must’ve known that I have come to hell. Will he stop me?” Lucien knew very well that the hell was to some extent an incarnation of the Lord of Hell. No matter how he snuck in hell hiding his traces, it would’ve been barely possible to deceive Maltimus. So, he might as well come openly. “Now, I’ll go to the Silent Hell on the eighth floor first and see if I can find the special Stellar Core. It will also be an indirect test of Maltimus’ attitude. Then, I’ll go to the primeval hell below the ninth floor.”

The moment he made his plan, Lucien suddenly sensed something and looked at the other side of the street, only to see a young man walking toward the edge of the Burning Metropolis with a bag of materials and a smile of satisfaction on his face.

The only living people here were the sorcerers and the few devil followers who came for the trade. So, the young man was undoubtedly a soul, as could be seen from his floating state and his transparent body.

However, the souls in hell were either ignorant and stupid or full of hate and regrets. None of them kept their sanity. The young man’s soul, however, was sunny and brilliant, giving Lucien a feeling that he was still alive.

“I also ‘smelled’ the air of the Silent Hell. Has he come from there to the Burning Metropolis for business?” Lucien speculated.

The Burning Metropolis was the center of trade in hell. On the other floors of hell, for various reasons, only secret deals were conducted.

Realizing that the weird young man’s soul came from the Silent Hell, Lucien, whose curiosity had been triggered, tailed him and tried to figure out where he was going.

“Grandpa, Grandpa, the ‘Stone of Poltergeists’, ‘Elven Leaves’, and ‘Steel of Burning Volcano’ that you asked for have been bought.” The young man reached a remote corner in the Burning Metropolis that was barely frequented by devils.

Outside of an iron building enshrouded in a fire, a haggard old man was standing there holding his stick. Before him were bottles of the “Fire Liquor” that devils liked most. He seemed to be the boss of a tavern who had come to the Burning Metropolis to shop for goods.

A human being? Lucien was slightly stunned. Was there any human being living in hell without being torn apart and eaten up by devils?

Right when Lucien was about to spread out his spiritual power and check if the old man had any magic cover, he suddenly raised his head. “Maman, why didn’t you say that you brought a guest here?”

The “young man” Maman turned back in shock and saw Lucien who did not hide his traces. “I... I don’t know him...”

“Forgive me. It’s just that I wanted to get to know your grandpa, so I followed you here,” Lucien said casually.

Maman scratched his head in confusion and shyness. “My grandpa is just an ordinary tavern tender. There’s nothing special about him. You might have mistaken him for someone else, my dear guest.”

“An ordinary tavern tender?” Lucien was amused. It would’ve been ordinary in the main material world, but this was hell.

The skinny old man stooped and sorted his liquors, before he looked at the “young man” with his cloudy eyes and said, “Maman, go buy another hundred bottles of ‘Water Soul Wine’ and deliver them to the old place.”

Maman nodded and ran off merrily.

“A very special soul...” Lucien said softly.

The old man’s eyes suddenly glittered. “What do you want?”

“Nothing. I’m just a bit curious.” Lucien smiled. “I don’t mean you any harm. If you’re from the Silent Hell, I would like to ask you about something.”

The old man eyed Lucien up and down. “Are you a sorcerer? Judging from your attire, you should be from the Congress of Magic. Has Douglas ever taught you not to enter the hell without a good reason?”

“Do you know Mr. President?” Lucien raised his eyebrows. Judging from his tone, he seemed unaware that Mr. President had advanced into the demigod level.

Chapter 803: The Town in Hell

The haggard old man sighed rather regretfully. “I know his teacher.”

“Mister, are you a legendary of the ancient Magic Empires?” Lucien was not too surprised. Even though the three ancient magic empires were destroyed, many legendary sorcerers survived. After all, they were experts who knew plenty of unusual spells. Some of them hid in the depths of the Dark Mountain Range, and some hid in alternate dimensions and other areas, like the Empress of Snow. So, it was not too strange that he ran into a legendary in hell.

Mr. President’s teacher perished in the Battle of Antiffler during the War of Dawn. Whoever knew him was obviously an expert in ancient times.

The old man was dry and skinny, like a mummy without bandages. He said with mixed feelings, “The ancient sorcerers like us cannot keep up with the age anymore. Look at Douglas. How long did it take for him to become a top legend and surpass me? What are you doing in hell?”

“I’m planning to explore the primeval relics deep in hell and search for the special Stellar Core that the former Ice Duke hid.” Lucien did not hide his attention. Now that the legendary sorcerer had been hiding in hell, it was possible that he knew a thing or two about the matter. “Right, mister. I don’t know how I should call you yet.”

Lucien remembered the records of ancient legendary sorcerers, hoping to confirm the old man’s identity.

“Hehe. I am just an old man who’s waiting to die in hell. Why do you want my name and title?” The old man touched his head, and a strand of white hair immediately fell. “The primeval relics in hell? The Stellar Core that the former Ice Duke hid? Young man, you must be a legendary sorcerer in the Congress of Magic who made the advancement recently, aren’t you? I suggest that you don’t be too adventurous.

“I’ve been to the primeval relics twice, and twice I was almost lost and turned into phantoms that forever wandered there. More than six legends of the empire were confirmed to be dead during the exploration of the place. Those who could enter and return safely were mostly only the top legends like Thanos and Douglas. That is, when the Lord of Hell did not attack him.

“As for the Stellar Core that the former Ice Duke hid, it was something from thousands of years ago. I suspect that somebody has already taken it away. Otherwise, the current Ice Duke wouldn’t be as clueless as he is right now.”

Lucien listened to the old man and checked what he heard with the files he acquired from the president and Mr. Rhine. He felt rather odd. Generally speaking, the ancient legendary sorcerers were more or less gloomy and mysterious due to their cruel experiments and weird spells. Few of them were as kind and talkative as the old man here.

“Do you think I’m a chatterbox?” The old man smiled. “If it were in the past, I wouldn’t have wasted my time talking to you at all. You are free to die if you want to. However, after spending thirty years with her in hell, I have become soft and sympathetic. Otherwise, special souls like Maman would’ve become my experiment subjects a long time ago.”

“Thirty years? Her?” Lucien did not give a reply but asked in great interest. It would be easier to obtain intelligence if they were closer.

The old man’s face that was full of wrinkles suddenly turned gentle. “Now that you’ve come to hell, why don’t you visit my tavern, the Paradise of Souls? It’s right in the Silent Hell.”

“Alright.” Lucien nodded with a smile. He had to go to the Silent Hell after all.

The old man stopped talking, and Lucien enjoyed the burning fire and the splendid iron building in it casually.

After a long wait, Maman ran back delightedly. “Grandpa, the Water Soul Wine has been delivered to the old place. They’ll ship it to the Paradise of Souls today.”

“Let’s go home.” The old man touched Maman’s head affectionately.

Lucien followed them through the river to pass through the first few levels of hell before reaching a snowy plain.

Freezing wind was blowing on the plain, so fiercely that souls could be directly torn apart. However, there was no sound at all. Also, the ice land was spacious and covered in snow. Other souls and devils could not be seen at all. So, one could not help but feel the everlasting quietness and tranquility.

Lucien did not need to look to know that souls had been frozen in the ice below the snow. Consolidated, senseless, and unconscious, they forever slept in coldness and darkness.

The wind of peace and death hovered around Lucien and the old man, only to be ejected by uncanny forces. Maman was not frozen by the wind either.

After a long time, a town appeared up ahead. At the periphery was a wall made of ice, and inside the wall were rows of houses made of “Blood Warming Stones”, which was a local specialty of the Silent Hell that could effectively resist the soul-freezing coldness.

In the main material world, due to the rarity, a Blood Warming Stone of mediocre quality was already worth fifty Thales, but it was used to build a town in this place.

The residents of the town were floating souls, whose genders and ages varied. Their bodies were transparent and similar to Maman, they had their regular wisdom, except that they did not have a sunny and warm feeling.

“Old man, you’re finally back. I was waiting for the Fire Liquor.” A brawny man who had a mustache floated over and stared at the storage bag in Maman and the old man’s hands thirstily.

In the Silent Hell, even souls could enjoy the Fire Liquor.

The old man chuckled. “You drunkard, I won’t take any responsibility if you are frozen again outside after you’re drunk.”

Lucien glimpsed at the old man, feeling it odd. The legendary sorcerer was not bothered at all to be called by the ordinary souls as an old man. It seemed that he did not stress the hierarchy of the ancient Magic Empire.

The old man talked to the souls and walked to the tavern at the center of the town with his storage bag. Maman followed him and asked Lucien curiously, “Mister, are you not a human? I’ve never seen a human like you before. You have a warm body and muscles, just like the devils.”

“Human? What do you think a human should look like?” Lucien asked in amusement.

Maman raised his chin and declared, like a proud kid, “Humans are people who look like me.”

“Who told you that?” Lucien had guessed the answer.

Maman bulged his eyes in confusion. “My grandpa, of course.”

He became frustrated when they talked about his grandpa. Finally finding someone he could talk to, he said, “But grandpa doesn’t allow me to practice with uncles. He only asks me to do useless meditation.”

“Your grandpa is an awesome man. There can be nothing wrong listening to him.” Lucien patted his head with a smile.

“How so? Uncles and aunts all say that grandpa is just a common old man and that he does not have any capabilities other than cooking food and making wine.” Maman disagreed with Lucien.

Well, a special soul who has a legendary sorcerer grandpa with a concealed identity. It’s like a tale of the bards. Lucien thought in amusement but was too lazy to explain to Maman. He followed the old man and entered the tavern.

The arrangement of the tavern was more or less the same as those in the main material world. However, behind the bar counter was a female soul who was fuzzy and slow.

“I’m back. I’ve bought a hundred bottles of Water Soul Wine this time...” The old man walked behind the bar counter and reported it to the female soul. Although it was just daily talk, he seemed gentle and satisfied.

However, the female soul remained stunned as she washed the cups mechanically.

The old man spoke for a long time before he finally turned around and looked at Lucien who had been seated before the bar. He introduced, “This is my wife. Do you want a bottle of Fire Liquor?”

Lucien shook his head and asked curiously, “How did you find her?”

Generally speaking, the souls who entered the hell would be beyond recognition.

“She died because of a certain mistake of mine. So, I was able to make preparations in advance and mark the soul in special ways.” The old man opened a bottle of Fire Liquor and had a mouthful of it. “However, despite my profound understanding of the soul, I cannot find out its true nature and its transformation. So, by the time I found her, she was only slightly better than common souls. Perhaps she will completely disperse in another hundred years.”

Lucien nodded his head. From the description, he had basically guessed which legendary sorcerer the old man was. After all, few of them who were adept at soul studies had survived.

The old man went on. “After I found her, I accompanied her and watched her quietly to make up for what I did. Hehe. How time flies. It’s been thirty years in the blink of an eye.”

“The souls outside are the products of your experiments?” Lucien did not believe that a legendary sorcerer would give up so easily.

“Yes.” The old man nodded and had another mouthful of wine. “I tried to awaken their memories, but in the end, I only recovered their abilities to think. They are totally different persons from the past. Also, as time goes by, they will also completely disperse or be frozen in the ice, caught in the everlasting quietness.”

“What a shame.” After a brief silence, Lucien said, “It’s too bad that there’s still a gap for the Congress to make groundbreaking progress on the study of the soul.”

Lucien was actually not referring to the Congress of Magic but himself.

The old man looked at Lucien’s face. “The soul is the most intangible domain. It is in fundamental contradiction with arcana, which highlights proof and mathematics. Even Vicente, a one-in-a-thousand-years genius in necromancy, only made a minor breakthrough. Although I haven’t been out of hell for thirty years, and I don’t know the updates of the outside world, thirty years is still a very short time for magic studies. I remember that I spent a hundred and twenty-seven years near the Styx to study a certain feature of the soul.”

Before Lucien said anything, a gentle, refreshing male voice suddenly echoed at the door, “Hehe. Although it’s hard to believe, I can say confidently that the development of arcana and magic in the past thirty years is greater than thirty thousand years in the Magic Empire.”

Without turning around, Lucien already sensed a person with his spiritual power. The stranger was wearing a white tight suit, and he had pale and sickly skin. His eyes were red, and he had a pair of delicate silver horns that were full of dense patterns on his forehead.

Based on his undisguised air, Lucien could conclude very easily that he was exactly Memphiste, the incumbent Ice Duke and the Lord of Mysteries!

Chapter 804: Let's Take What We Need

Chapter 804: Let's Take What We Need

As Memphiste, the Ice Duke, strode into the tavern, the place immediately became lifelessly quiet, like the frozen plain covered by the blizzard; cold, silent, and never to change.

“Thirty years is better than thirty thousand years?” The old man, who was likely to be a legendary sorcerer in the field of souls, chuckled. It was obvious that he thought the Lord of Mysteries was carrying out his specialties as a devil and bluffing other people with the exaggerated truth that was not to be believed. “In the past ten years, you barely walked out of the Silent Glacier. I almost suspected that you had quietly arrived at the main material world. To what do I owe your visit to my little tavern today?”

He was reminding Lucien that the Lord of Mysteries might be concocting a great scheme that involved the main material world during the past ten years so that Lucien wouldn't be tricked.

Memphiste laughed aloud and sat next to Lucien. He took a bottle of “Fire Liquor” and a bottle of “Water Soul Wine”, blending them into his favorite mix. “You can ask Evans whether or not it was an overstatement. In fact, he is the best evidence himself.”

He acted as if he were Lucien's best friend.

Of the three legends, one was mixing the wine behind the bar counter, and two were sitting on the high chairs before the bar. On the bar counter were delicious wine, cups, and dim candles, exactly like any other tavern looked like. Who could've thought that they were three legends?

“Huh?” The old man paid attention to his statement after hearing Memphiste's repetition. “In the first thirty thousand years of the Magic Empire, many legendary spells were invented, different schools were classified, a preliminary magic system was established, the fundamental knowledge of mathematics and astrology was concluded, the attempts of alchemical items were made, and blood power was synthesized. Could they have been done in thirty years?”

Having been born in the last glorious phase of the Magic Empire, he was like an old noble who clung to the former glories. Therefore, although he paid attention to the Congress of Magic and the development of arcana, he did not really join it. Also, he could not accept that “arcana” could accomplish what the Magic Empire achieved in thirty thousand years with only thirty years.

The Ice Duke looked at Lucien, who had been listening quietly as if it were none of his business, and chuckled. “During the thirty years, the major achievements include the discovery of the mysteries of gravity and the localization of the sun...”

He was not an arcanist, and naturally, his words were not too accurate. If it were Lucien, he would’ve only said that there were preliminary achievements on the nature of gravity.

“What? The sun has been found?” The old man dropped the cloth with which he was wiping the cup. He interrupted Memphiste and looked at him and Lucien in shock.

The location and the very existence of the sun had been a conundrum that bothered the Magic Empire for tens of thousands of years. There were no sorcerers who did not want to unravel the secret. He was not an exception either. However, even the brilliant geniuses like the Sun King, the prophets like Mr. Maskelyne, and the experts who were as strong as demigods like the Stellar Mentor—he was the first top legend of the Magic Empire—had to lower their proud heads before the problem and admit that there was still a long way to go for them to reach the truth of the world.

Now, the sun had been discovered?

The Ice Duke did not mention why he came at all, as if he was here specifically to enjoy the old man’s shock. He pointed at Lucien with a smile and said, “Naturally, you are looking at the discoverer of the sun and the founder of the relativistic system.”

“You discovered the sun? The relativistic system?” the old man asked in a hurry. What is the relativistic system?

When he left the main material world, there hadn't been such a term in the Congress of Magic. After only a brief thirty years, the world had become so strange?

Lucien did not give a straight answer but answered with the rigorousness of arcanists, "Technically speaking, the main reason for the discovery of the sun was not the relativistic system. It was only a secondary factor."

I don't know much about arcana. You must be fooling me... The old man couldn't help but feel overwhelmed. He hurried to take out his crystal ball that had been covered in dust for years.

Because he was in the Silent Hell, the effect of his prophecy was limited. However, the Ice Duke knocked on the table and released the suppression of his demiplane. So, the old man drew the conclusion. "The sun has really been discovered... What's wrong with this world?"

The sun had a special position in astrology. It was also a special symbol in the spiritual domain.

"I don't know what's wrong with this world either, but now that a top legend has come to the Silent Hell, I have to check on him, in case the Silent Glacier is attacked someday in the future and I don't know what's going on at all," the Lord of Hell said merrily, as if he were not checking on the enemy but closing a deal with Lucien.

"A top legend?" The old man stared at Lucien again. Although he did not know all the senior-rank sorcerers and archmages of the Congress, he did know most of the Highest Council. Thirty years ago, the young man couldn't have been a legend, and after thirty years, he had reached the peak of legendary? It was even more unbelievable than Brook!

"As far as I know, it's only been a dozen years since Evans began to study magic. Well, he did not become an official sorcerer until the year when the former Ice Duke died," the current Ice Duke added. In the old man's shock, he observed, "Now is not the ancient times, when the big shots could hide for decades but still retain the ability to change the situation. Today, whoever lives in seclusion and does not pay attention to the development of arcana, he'll be completely outdated in ten years. Instead of being a mastermind or a key force, he will be crushed by the wheel of time."

He seemed to be mocking the old man for his confusion after living in isolation for thirty years.

"A dozen years..." The old man could not express anything with language now. What could be achieved in a dozen years? After he began to learn magic, it took him a dozen years to become a fifth-circle sorcerer.

Confirming the information that Lucien did not cover with his crystal ball again, the old man heaved a long sigh. "The very existence of you has suggested the terrifying development of arcana in the past decades."

After his remark, his eyes suddenly turned passionate, and he stared at Lucien. "Just now, you mentioned that the Congress of Magic almost made a breakthrough on the studies of the soul, didn't you?"

"Theoretically, yes." Lucien did not understand why the Ice Duke was helping him to convince the old man, so he was rather prudent. "Mister, what's your opinion on the nature of the soul? For example, if a soul loses the past memories and can never regain them, and it does not have the way of thinking and the personality before, with the waves and vibe of its spiritual power changed too, can we still say that this soul is identical to the soul in the past?"

"Well..." The old man hesitated. He had considered the question before. His wife next to him was a vivid but not extreme case. His special mark had prevented the soul waves from changing.

It was both a philosophical question and one that touched the nature of the soul. Obviously, it was not easy to answer. After a long time, the old man finally replied, "I don't think so. After the five main features of the soul are changed, it will be a new soul."

"Then, if we give the soul memories of the past, raise the previous way of thinking and personality, and forever change its spiritual power and vibe with magic, will it become the previous soul? Is the soul natural-born and above society, or is it social and can be artificially ‘raised’?” Lucien proposed a sharp question. “A different case. If another soul is melted with this soul and inherits its memories, thinking, personality, and wave frequencies while retaining its previous memories, will it equal to the current soul?”

“For example, if Duke Memphiste occupies your wife’s soul and simulates her memories and other features, will he be equal to your wife? What’s the most fundamental quality of the soul?”

Looking at his “wife” next to him, the old man looked gloomy and could hardly give an answer. The Ice Duke intentionally enlivened the atmosphere. “As a matter of fact, the most fundamental quality of a soul for me is the devilish core.”

“I wonder, what’s your opinion on the question, Mr. Evans?” The old man looked at Lucien both earnestly and expectantly.

Thinking for a moment, Lucien said, “I have been to the World of Souls, where I saw the Furnace of Souls.”

“The World of Souls? The Furnace of Souls?” The old man further felt that he had been abandoned by the passing of time.

Lucien briefly introduced the World of Souls and the Furnace of Souls, and instead of telling his central studies, he said more abstractly, “I believe that the soul should have a quality that is of a higher level and more fundamental. It is deeply associated with the Furnace of Souls. As for the specific conditions, I’m afraid that I can only discuss with the arcanists with papers after I return from the primeval hell.”

Looking at the Fire Liquor before him in silence, the old man did not say anything until a long time later. “I have some studies about the soul myself. I would like to exchange our works.”

As expected of a legendary sorcerer. He knows what I am implying clearly. Lucien smiled in satisfaction and had a fair and square exchange with the old man with his current understanding about the soul, excluding the parts that involved other arcana knowledge and a certain model that was to be confirmed on this trip.

The old man's files on the soul were very detailed, including his works on the soul and two legendary spells about the soul. Some of the experiments were too cruel for Lucien to complete himself. He had been looking for other ways to confirm the results until he got the information here. Also, the old man provided his knowledge about the primeval relics in the depths of hell, which added to Lucien's confidence.

The old man also thought hard as he read the files that Lucien provided. He rubbed his forehead nonstop, as if it disrupted something that he always believed in. He said to himself, "... In such a case, resurrection, phylactery, and the effect of the Sword of Truth can all be explained self-consistently..."

Next to him, the Ice Duke put on a solemn expression as he looked at Lucien and said, "I'm here today to ask for your favor, Lucien. I'll provide more detailed files about the primeval hell."

Crossing his hands, Lucien did not give a reply immediately. Was it his attitude, or the Lord of Hell's?

Chapter 805: The Primeval Hell

Memphiste, the Lord of Mysteries, was not bothered by Lucien's silence. He simply went on, "The favor I ask is probably also your purpose, Evans."

"You know my purpose?" Lucien raised his eyebrows and asked back.

The Ice Duke chuckled. "You have specifically come to the Silent Hell before you go to the primeval hell because you want the special Stellar Core, don't you? As a matter of fact, based on the clues I've found, the Stellar Core is not on this level but has been hidden by Tiphotidis into a certain relic in the primeval hell as hope for his resurrection."

"I would like you to go to the relics, find that Stellar Core, and erase all the possibilities of Tiphotidis' return, Evans. The Stellar Core and the detailed files of the primeval hell that I provide will be the reward for you."

"Why don't you go there yourself? If you know the primeval hell so well, why don't you erase the hope of the Master of Argent's revival in person? You can never relax unless you are the one doing it," Lucien said without giving an answer.

Memphiste looked like a pale and sickly man. Had it not been for his silver devilish horns and his evil red eyes, he would've been neglected very easily. In a self-mocking smile, he said, "I dare not enter it exactly because I know it too well. I fear that I'll become a carrier for the primeval devils to arrive. At the very least, I would rather not take the risk until I reach level three of legendary. Sometimes, ignorance means courage."

As he spoke, he glanced at the old man, as if he were mocking the guy for exploring the primeval hell after he just became a legend years ago. Had it not been for luck, he would've been melted by the primeval devils and wandered in the broken relics henceforth.

"Do the primeval devils really exist?" Lucien suddenly opened his mouth and asked.

Memphiste smiled. He knew that Lucien had accepted his request but did not want to set up a contract, in case he would have to worry about the enforcement of the contract if he ran into emergencies in the primeval hell. After all, when the mission was fulfilled, the Stellar Core would be his, and nobody could steal it away.

“If you believe that the primeval devils exist, they will indeed exist. They wander in the relics in the primeval hell and receive the summoning from the main material world and all the alternate dimensions. However, if you don’t think they exist, they will no longer exist. They’re more like an exterior projection of the negative feelings in yourself. Everybody sees different things according to their memories and strength, but the intense negative feelings are the same.” Thinking for a moment, the Ice Duke told his knowledge about the primeval devils in his own way. “Therefore, the most important thing is the control over feelings and desires.”

“It shouldn’t be dangerous for you. Your title is ‘Lord of Mysteries’. Since you are best at manipulation, you can certainly control your own feelings and desires well. Also, you have the help of extraordinary abilities like ‘everlasting peace’.” Lucien did not know the real name of the extraordinary ability, so he simply referred to it with its image.

Memphiste sighed and said, “However, when the primeval devils appear with the wandering souls inside, they can be as strong as top legends. Although it cannot last, that’s enough to crush me. Also, the primeval hell is different from other places in that the slightest negative feelings will be magnified tenfold, a hundred times, and a thousand times. The primeval devils will take advantage of the weakness and plant seeds in your mind. So, you must stop all the negative feelings from appearing in the primeval hell, or you wouldn’t be able to free yourself.”

“Magnified tenfold, a hundred times, and a thousand times?” Lucien’s black pupils in his deep eyes seemed to be glittering.

The files on primeval devils that Lucien had before came from Douglas and Rhine. Their explorations of the primeval hell were relatively smooth, and they were never possessed by the primeval devils. The old man was almost lost and only made his way out with a special legendary item. He was unable to tell exactly what happened. Therefore, it was the first time that Lucien heard such a theory. It matched his speculation very well!

Memphiste put down his special mix and nodded solemnly. "In hell, a lot of devils went to the primeval hell for adventures and enormous strength. Therefore, I have millions of cases as the foundation of my analysis."

The number had been accumulated for tens of thousands of years.

"Hehe. However orderly devils may see, their hearts are always evil and full of desire. When they are not strong enough, it's barely possible for them to stay out of the influence of the primeval devils." Lucien smiled casually, not bothered at all that he was faced with a great devil.

Memphiste laughed aloud. "That's very correct. Therefore, knowing myself very well, I dare not go in personally. Frankly speaking, the devils will suffer no losses after they are possessed by the primeval devils. At worst, their desires will be stronger, and their lives will be much shorter, but their strength will grow significantly. Such desire matches our ambitions and our way of thinking very well. It will not influence other thinking abilities, but will only make us smarter."

That's what we say "ever since I suffered mental diseases, my mental state has been much better"... Lucien chuckled to himself.

After his laughter, the Ice Duke went on, "After you enter the primeval hell, except for the few fixed relics, the environment that every intelligent creature sees is different. In such an environment, the wandering souls will turn into the family, friends, teachers, and students that you value, as well as the enemies that you hate, under the domination of primeval devils. They will play the scenes of betrayals, slaughters, pain, and lust before you.

"We all know that such simple illusions cannot affect the judgment of legendary sorcerers, but for the primeval devils, they do not hope that the people who enter the relics can be bewildered by the illusions so easily but aim for the emotional fluctuation that is from natural instincts. After all, there's a gap between natural reactions and the sensible judgment of oneself."

Lucien nodded his head. "The problem can be avoided by casting spells such as 'Mechanized Mind' in advance."

"Therefore, for top legends, the most important thing is to take care of the sudden attacks from the primeval devils who hide in such illusions. In the primeval hell, they will never be killed. They will be reborn and attack the enemy incessantly. If there weren't a time gap, and if more than three primeval devils could show up simultaneously, even the top legends would not be able to resist the fearless attacks of the seven primeval devils," the Ice Duke mentioned something that Lucien did not know.

Lucien frowned. "Why would there only be three primeval devils at most every time?"

That was his greatest question.

"That I do not know. However, I know that 'Arrogance' always acts alone, because he is an embodiment of arrogance. Also, 'Hypocrisy' never joins the attack but is more used to attacking in secret. If 'Jealousy' takes action with the other primeval devils, he will be your 'helper'. The other four devils often appear in pairs, but they never take action together," Memphiste said in his opinion.

Lucien was rather interested. It's rather creative to consider the problem from such a perspective.

Also, as long as the seven primeval devils were not attacking him at the same time, he would be confident to leave safely even though the other four devils were to join their hands. After all, they could only behave as top legends for a short while.

"Sometimes, the primeval devils wouldn't show up, and the explorers could go into the relics normally and find the ways to summon them..." Memphiste told Lucien the files of the primeval hell that he knew.

...

On the ninth level of hell, Lucien walked deep into the core of the sphere through a bottomless crack.

After descending for a long time, Lucien's feet finally stepped on soft, weird mud, which shivered all the time as if beating hearts had been buried below.

Lucien was holding a piece of time-worn paper in his hands. On the paper that was made from the skin of grand devils, eerie patterns that Lucien had never seen before were drawn. The moment he saw the paper, he felt that he saw greed, arrogance, pain, and other deep negative feelings.

It was the "map" that Memphiste provided for Lucien. As a belonging of Tiphodidis, the Master of Argent, it marked the relic where he hid the Stellar Core. On the other hand, the old man who was good at spirits packed up his stuff, ready to return to the main material world with his wife and Maman to go to Allyn.

Zigzagging forward, Lucien unleashed his air and scared off a bunch of strong hellish devils before he reached the gate hidden at the deepest part of the canyon.

The gate was old and did not have any decorations. Revealing a bronze color, it gave the air of transcendence.

"There is the Gate of Immortality and the Blue Gate. Perhaps this one should be called 'Gate of Desires'." Lucien extended his right hand and pressed the gate.

Feeling the coldness, he found that the gate was opened, revealing the splendid corridor behind it.

"The corridor of a castle?" Lucien, who had been enhanced with multiple spells, walked in slowly.

Different rooms were on the two sides of the corridor. The dark red wood on the doors implied their state-of-the-art quality. Their lower edges were covered in what appeared to be golden foils.

After a few steps forward, alluring moans suddenly entered Lucien's ears.

"Is 'Lust' the first to come?" Lucien looked in through the half-opened door. "It sounds rather familiar..."

Inside the room was a big bed with a red sheet, on which two naked bodies were rolling. The one on the top had purple long hair and a graceful curve, as well as a vigorous face with the beauty that Lucien couldn't be more familiar with.

Natasha?

Natasha's eyes were blurry as she looked down at the girl below affectionately, who was also naked.

Huh. A girl?

It was not until then that Lucien realized that the girl was Sylvia, who was already dead. Her beautiful face that was as pure as a lily was flushing, and her eyes were half-closed, as soul-stirring moans burst out of her lips. Her small but firm breasts were rubbing against Natasha's tightly...

It seemed to be a scene from when Natasha and Sylvia were still together.

Lucien's lips curled, and he chuckled without being affected.

"Jealousy?"

...

In Duchy of Orvarit, Aalto...

Hardly had Gossett, a red robe, entered Philibell's library when he saw that the Grand Cardinal rose in a hurry.

"His Holiness has summoned the Grand Cardinals for an emergency meeting. You will supervise the divine power circle of Aalto for now.” Philibell gave the instruction while he walked to the teleportation circle.

“An emergency meeting? Did something happen?” Gossett immediately became grave.

Chapter 806: Secret Mission

Chapter 806: Secret Mission

In the Bright Hall in Lance, the Holy City...

By the time Philibell arrived, all the Grand Cardinals who were free had been gathered. Benedict III stood above the stairs with a platinum staff in his hands. Behind him was an enormous, sacred cross.

“I’ve summoned you today because I have a secret mission for you, which concerns the glory of the Lord, the survival of the Church, and your future,” Benedict III said solemnly; his slightly cloudy eyes were as thoughtful and peaceful as ever.

Melmax, the Holy Avenger, stepped forward and said, “Your Holiness, what mission is it exactly that requires half of the Grand Cardinals to accomplish?”

He hadn’t recovered from the wounds he suffered during Douglas’ advancement into the demigod level. Therefore, he was rather prudent about missions.

Instead of giving a straight answer, Benedict III looked at the glass window near the dome of the Bright Hall. As the brilliant sunlight penetrated through the colorful glass, dreamy shadows were left on the ground.

“Douglas’ advancement gave confidence to the sorcerers and showed them the bright future of arcana and magic. As long as the path is not proved to be a dead-end, they can hardly be tempted. Also, the situation in the world has been greatly changed. Our estimation of the future has to change accordingly.” Benedict III repeated the current situation with a low voice, “Admit it or not, one demigod, four top legends, and an equal number of legendary experts are out there, and the Congress of Magic is already as strong as us.

“In the meantime, we have to face the northern heretics, the great devil Maltimus in the Boundless Ocean, and the evil god ‘Silver Moon’ in the Dark Mountain Range. The situation is very rough.”

None of the Grand Cardinals said anything because it was an obvious fact. Although the Congress of Magic had to take care of the Lord of Hell and the northern heathens too, the Dark Congress and the Elven Court were at least their allies for now. The Church, on the other hand, was almost helpless.

It seemed to be an inevitable process during the decline of every reigning force. Because their power had left too deep an impression on other forces, and an irresolvable feud had been struck between them, the other forces were likely to reach an agreement to overthrow the reigning force first before they fought each other. It was exactly like what happened to the Magic Empire!

Benedict III’s old and heavy voice echoed in the Bright Hall, “Although I have informed you of the status transformation and the method to gather godhood through the power of faith granted by the Lord, and your strength must’ve increased over the past few years, we still have to face one problem after twenty years of arcana development and the subsequent expansion of the Congress of Magic.”

He paused and looked around at all the Grand Cardinals present.

Saint Maria, Saint Kati, Philibell, Astira, and the other Grand Cardinals all lowered their heads and avoided the pope’s eyes. Over the past years, they had made great contributions to the ever-surging cults under the territory of the Church.

Moving his eyes back, Benedict III went on, “Considering the current trend, until your strength has fundamental improvements and the number of new legends catches up with that of the Congress of Magic, the Congress of Magic will certainly divide and conquer us with its overwhelming strength, exactly like how the Congress of Magic was destroyed by us in the past.

“This is not a threat with the worst possibility. You should know well that most sorcerers in the Congress of Magic haven’t really digested the products of arcana development during the recent two decades. After all, it's normal that the expansion of strength is ten years behind theoretical development. You should know very well how strong they will be in another ten years."

After Benedict III finished, Astira asked in confusion, "Your Holiness, it's very visionary of you to describe the comparison of our strengths in the future. You've analyzed our dilemma too. However, the greatest and most fundamental difference between us and the Magic Empire is that we have you, the Lord's spokesperson on the ground and the strongest demigod. The Magic Empire, on the other hand, only had top legends.

"Demigods are a deterrence and a balance. As long as the demigod is not destroyed, it will be barely possible to eliminate his force, because it will make the demigod fearless and wreak havoc on his enemy. Therefore, demigods who can mutually destroy each other's forces are the best guarantee of peace, exactly like our strike on vampires. I believe that the Congress of Magic will take that into consideration too. Perhaps the situation where we confront each other with the Storm Strait in between will go on, while we gradually carve up the forces that do not have demigods."

Saint Kati also stood up. "Astira is right. The unkillable demigods will keep the current situation. Also, more importantly, as the strongest demigod, Your Holiness can perform God's Arrival. Neither the Silver Moon, the Lord of Hell, nor Douglas can resist it. That's the best guarantee for the Church's position. They will not dare to attack us easily.

"By the time our strength is increased, we will be able to wake up the Lord. Under the brilliance of the true god, all evilness will be melted."

He was only talking about his hope, as to whether or not the God of Truth could be awakened, and in exactly what way it should be done, that was a whole different matter.

Benedict III heaved a sigh. "Demigods are not really immortal. At the very least, I have a lot of problems myself. If they can grasp those problems, even if they cannot completely kill me, they will be able to imprison me like I imprison the monster. Since I have God's Arrival, I must be the primary target for Douglas, the Silver Moon, and Maltimus. It is possible that they will join their hands. How are we going to deal with that?"

No Grand Cardinals were able to give an answer in the Bright Hall. The atmosphere became depressive and frozen. Although the danger was still far away, the worst possibility seemed to be happening sooner or later based on His Holiness' analysis.

"Your Holiness, what is the mission that you want to give us?" Melmax suddenly broke the silence. "Is it about our future disaster?"

Benedict III slowly raised his platinum staff. He looked solemn and grave.

Seeing that, all the Grand Cardinals immediately kneeled and drew crosses on their chests while praying devoutly, "Only Truth lives forever!"

It was the gesture to proclaim the Lord's oracle!

"The Lord has given me an oracle, telling me how the problems can be resolved." Benedict III's voice was filled with "sincere gratitude". "The reason why negative feelings cannot be controlled or separated even though 'containers' are used is that the power of negative feelings and the power of faith are not equal during the last step before turning into a demigod."

Saint Maria frowned subconsciously. "Not equal? They're both the surreal power of the mind. How can they not be equal?"

She suddenly realized what she just said. "Your Holiness, I am not questioning the Lord. I'm only hoping that you can fulfill my ignorance."

"Because Mountain Paradise is behind the power of faith, the projection of Mountain Paradise will appear when one tries to become a demigod. The power of negative feelings, on the other hand, can only gather the seven primeval devils. How can they be equal to Mountain Paradise? As a result, the balance is lost, the problems are left,” Benedict III explained expressionlessly.

“How can they be equal?” Philibell asked. It was a question that they really cared about because they believed that they would reach the step sooner or later.

Benedict III put down the platinum staff and nodded his head. “We need more ‘primeval devils’. We need to gather them into a primeval hell, which requires your cooperation because I cannot accomplish it myself. Actually, it completely matches the core of our path to the demigod level; gathering the power of the people and turning the weak into the strong.”

For some reason, when they heard Benedict III’s announcement, the first thing that the Grand Cardinals remembered was Lucien’s paper and the prediction in it; the evolution from a weak observer to a strong observer!

“Your Holiness, what should we do?” Saint Kati asked. They certainly had to ask every detail clearly. After all, it concerned their own safety. What if their attempts failed, and the primeval devils in their bodies lost control?

“Based on my speculation, such ‘gathering’ will result in subsequent changes in the primeval hell. After that...” Benedict III spoke of his whole plan without hiding anything.

After identifying the key of the plan, the Grand Cardinals accepted the mission, each thinking about their own business. They left the Bright Hall for the final preparations.

After they all disappeared from the Bright Hall, Benedict III still stood where he was and looked at the gate with thoughtful eyes.

.....

“Jealousy?” The moment Lucien opened his mouth, “Natasha” and “Sylvia”, who had been entangling with each other in bed, stood up. One of them stood in the front, and the other clutched her timidly.

“I’m sorry. You are great, but I still love her.” “Natasha” stared at Lucien fearlessly.

Lucien's lips twitched, only because the line was too familiar. Then, he smiled. "It's useless. If I do not have such confidence, how do I deserve to say love? It's time for a new trick, Jealousy."

As he talked, Lucien was already prepared for an attack because Lust might be hiding in the dark. It might be dangerous if they attacked together.

"Haha." "Natasha" and "Sylvia" both giggled in a voice that was completely different from their own. "What a boring man."

In their laughter, their bodies crumbled into dust.

Lucien had thought that the two primeval devils would attack together, but out of his expectation, they simply left.

Turning his head, Lucien saw the dressing mirror on one side of the bed and his reflection in it. It was wearing the same black double-breasted suit, top hat, and black shoes, but on the familiar handsome face, it was not a smile but disdain.

"Lucien" in the mirror suddenly sneered and said, "Do you know that you have been too arrogant? Because of your top legendary strength and your powerful, weird spells, you despise the seven primeval devils and think that they cannot cause you any harm. You laugh at them for their every attempt to manipulate your feelings.

"Your idea is the purest arrogance. Arrogance is never a feeling. So, I have been born in your heart for you to look at yourself. You can never kill me or defeat me, because I am you!"

It walked out of the mirror one step after another, and its black shoes stomped on the tawny carpet.

Chapter 807: The Stellar Core

The Lucien that Arrogance turned into walked out of the mirror gracefully and slowly; its black shoes glittering.

“If you call the most fundamental conclusion that is based on facts arrogance, then arrogance will not be the name of a devil but that of an angel.” Lucien did not attack immediately but observed Arrogance who looked identical to himself except for the countenance in great interest.

Arrogance was still as disdainful as a moment ago. “You dare say that there is not the slightest condescension and mockery in your heart? Arrogance is not a feeling but comes from your mind. It’s the bias caused by your experiences of success. If you say it is a devil, it will be a devil, and if you say it is an angel, it will be an angel. Therefore, it cannot be blocked by your spells. Were you not arrogant when faced with the wrong arcana theories, or when those weaker than you challenged you? Just admit it. Arrogance is not bad at all. It’s a symbol that distinguishes the victors from the losers, like...”

It paused and suddenly raised its right hand while letting out an intricate spell from its mouth.

“Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness!”

...Like when you created ‘Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness’, the legendary spell which was close to absolute zero. Were you not proud of it? Did you not feel subtly jubilant when you dealt with the enemy with the spell?

That was arrogance!

With the indescribable gesture, Arrogance performed the ice-type legendary spell on Lucien, as if it were a real but arrogant Lucien!

Its attack came without any warning. The translucent pillars of light, under the restraint of invisible light and grids of darkness, surged toward Lucien.

Lucien, who had been staying on alert, was prepared for the attack. The moment Arrogance raised its right hand, a dark and profound universe appeared on his back, and in the middle of the colorful stars, an enormous fireball emitted terrifying heat.

It influenced the environment as if it were real, immediately vaporizing the red bed and the tawny carpet in the room.

Snow Goddess' Forgiveness was blown into this Atomic Universe. However, under the heat of the sun and the magnificent storm of energy, the magnetic field and the lasers that bound it were contorted and affected. Therefore, the unimaginable frigidty burst out in advance. Stars were frozen one after another, making the dark cosmos even more desolate.

When the light was finally frozen by the darkness, Lucien had already disappeared from the spot.

Before Arrogance was able to take action, the jolly ticking sounds echoed next to its ears, before everything was ended by a crack.

All the glamorous colors of the exquisite castle were gone, leaving nothing but the monotonous monochrome, where the "Lucien" that Arrogance turned into looked like a puppet from an old picture.

Outside of the window, Lucien's figure appeared. Holding the silver and delicate pocket watch, he chanted the spell that led to unusual waves.

"Luxury Cracking!"

"Luxury Cracking!"

"Soul Smite!"

All the three legendary spells had been attached with "Hand of Uncertainties". The last one was one of the few legendary spells that Lucien picked up recently specifically to deal with spirits, primeval devils, and other enemies who did not have real entities.

Since his destination was the primeval hell, he naturally had to be prepared. Lucien never looked down upon any opponent. Unless he had other purposes, he always tried his best however weak the enemy seemed!

After the three legendary spells were cast, the feeling of frozen time was broken, and the extravagant colors like red and yellow returned. Inside the “old picture”, Arrogance cracked nonstop as the magic effects were gone.

All the effects on its body, including “Spell Trigger”, had completely collapsed under two rounds of “Luxury Cracking”.

Then, after a thud, its body became blurry, and black gas jetted out of its eyes, neck, ears, mouth, and pores, as if a water ball had been smashed by an invisible hammer, with juice splashing everywhere.

“Soul Smite” had heavily wounded and rigidified Arrogance. Lucien certainly wouldn’t let go of such an opportunity. He blew out “Silent Blue”, which he exchanged with Hellen using “Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness”.

The black air around Arrogance and Arrogance itself was frozen and caught in the silent and freezing blueness, losing all the activity.

Right when Lucien was about to impose all kinds of seals so that he could bring Arrogance back for further studies, it suddenly put on a weird smile inside the Silent Blue before destroying itself!

Even the Silent Blue could not completely trap it!

BOOM!

A fireball rolled and rose, and the powerful blast swept across the whole castle. The valuable building collapsed as if it were a sand statue on the beach that embraced a tide.

Lucien blinked to the sky outside of the castle. Looking at the burning remains below him, he considered the features of Arrogance.

“It seems that the devil can simulate all my spells and magic effects including the legendary ones, which makes it look like my duplicate. It’s very similar to Monster Viken in the Realm of Gates, except that it is not half a level higher than me...

“... It does not have a Moon Timer, so it could not get rid of ‘Advanced Time Stop’... Does it mean that the devil cannot simulate the effects of my items?

“... It could not transform its status in my unique way. It’s obvious that the nature of the world on such a level is beyond what the primeval devils can touch and duplicate. It can only do it in a similar way to the primeval devils. That’s why it could not avoid ‘Silent Blue’...”

While Lucien analyzed the situation of Arrogance, laughter burst out in the debris and the wilderness at the same time. “It’s useless. You can’t kill me, because I am you!

“It’s also a behavior of arrogance that you cannot treat yourself fairly!”

The laughter gradually died down. Out of Lucien’s expectation, Arrogance did not attack and consume his spiritual power with a protracted battle. Instead, it melted into the darkness without giving any more sounds, like a ferocious predator that tailed the prey quietly and held itself back from a fierce attack until the prey was exhausted.

Staying on alert, Lucien observed the environment. It was a wasteland where nothing grew. The dim red blood seemed saturated with blood, giving a painful and miserable feeling.

“The Desert of Pain...” Lucien heaved a sigh. It was almost a “landmark” that every legendary sorcerer who came to the primeval hell had seen before. As the greatest feature of the primeval hell, it had been named by a certain ancient legendary sorcerer as “Desert of Pain”.

Lucien continued to fly in the previous direction. After all, if he were scared off by Arrogance just like that, he would never be able to explore the primeval hell.

After flying for a while, the “map” in Lucien’s arms suddenly unleashed intense waves.

Taking out the map that the Lord of Mysteries gave him, Lucien saw that the eerie symbols on it wriggled as if alive and pointed at a certain direction.

The special Stellar Core that the Master of Argent hid is around? Lucien thought to himself. Considering for a moment, Lucien decided to take a look at it since there were no other emergencies.

Navigated by the map, Lucien flew in the dim, dark sky for a while until he saw a shaking temple below.

The old temple was very similar to the temple outside of the Blue Gate and carried the style of the primordial times. The dome was supported by enormous stone pillars.

However, the stone pillars of this temple had half collapsed, and the air of aging and rotting was spreading out.

Lucien observed for a long time with magic, before he finally descended and landed. He then walked into the temple.

The wall of the temple was painted with simple but vivid illustrations. They were the pictures of cruel punishments, including whipping, beheading, hanging, mincing, and drowning, as well as the sacrificial rituals that a bunch of human-like creatures conducted with those punishments.

Looking at the shabby paintings, Lucien almost failed to control his feelings of pain and hate.

“Is this the beginning of the summoning of primeval devils? Have the primeval devils drawn them to allure the adventurers?” Thanks to the help of magic, Lucien kept calm. He recorded the paintings while he pressed further in the temple.

Although the temple was enormous, it was nothing but a minor library for a legendary sorcerer like Lucien. Very soon, he saw the brilliant Stellar Core that was placed on the altar of the temple.

The Stellar Core was smaller and brighter than the one Lucien used to make “Moon Timer”. The space around was curved inwardly because of its attraction, giving the feeling that it was extremely heavy.

The most unique feature of the item was that it carried certain transcendental air. Through the brilliant core, one seemed able to see the shadow of an enormous planet.

COMMENT

Lucien put on a sincere smile after seeing the Stellar Core, not because the material was precious, but because the specialness of it had allowed him to further approach the truth.

Despite his delight, Lucien was not careless. He began to inspect the Stellar Core and the environment with all kinds of spells, in case it was another trap like the Time Plate, or it was part of the Master of Argent’s scheme.

Hardly had Lucien cast his magic when the brilliance of the Stellar Core on the ground suddenly constricted and stretched out into a male in a tight suit. It was exactly Memphiste, the Lord of Mysteries.

“Pleased to meet you, I am Greed.” The devil introduced itself with a smile. Then, pointing at its face, it said, “You must’ve fallen into this guy’s scheme.”

It was obviously referring to Memphiste.

“Huh?” Lucien sniffed with a smile.

Greed chuckled. “Although the guy is not strong, he is exceptional at plotting, and he likes to hurt other people for no reason. You already fell into his trap when you agreed to help him fetch the Stellar Core.

“I know that you did not sign a contract with him, but when you think that you need to come and fetch the Stellar Core, you have essentially handed over the knife to us, the primeval devils.”

Lucien’s smile was gone, and he listened quietly.

Greed was even more satisfied. “Normally speaking, if a top legend like you enhanced yourself with all kinds of spells and entered the primeval hell without any emotional fluctuations, you would’ve only encountered some illusions and the wandering phantoms that were possessed by us, and you wouldn’t have encountered so many of us in a row. However, because you already had the greedy thought that you had to fetch the Stellar Core, there was a gap in your defense that we could make use of very easily!”

Lucien listened quietly but did not give a reply.

“What about it? Isn’t his scheme barely noticeable?” Greed said with an exaggerated tone.

Lucien was still silent.

After waiting for a while, Greed asked with a smile, still pretending to be casual, “Are you not mad? Do you not want to take him down?”

“Whether or not what you said is true, will anger help anything? It will only give your old partner, ‘Abhorrence’, a chance to project into my heart.” Lucien finally opened his mouth. His smile was gentle and peaceful, like the tender light from the bright moon.

Chapter 808: The Devils

Chapter 808: The Devils

Memphiste, or Greed, was stunned for a moment and then grinned. “I just wanted things to be easier. No matter how you feel, what would happen had already happened. I’ve told you. The moment since you wanted Stellar Core, your defense cracked.

“... Then you’ll see the true primeval hell and all the primeval devils there!”

It was not hiding its greed at all.

Every facet of the pure Stellar Core suddenly reflected a figure; a humanlike monster with goat horns!

The many figures then jumped out and joined together in the air, until they formed a huge monster. Its eyes were scarlet, skin pale, with big wings on its back. On the top of its head, there were two silver goat horns. It was Tiphotidis, the Master of Argent, which fell many years ago!

Its scarlet eyes were burning with fury as it hated everything in this world so badly. Coming from the deepest death, it wanted to burn every living thing down.

“It’s all your fault! All of you! My plan was perfect!” it cried in a bitter tone.

Obviously, the resurrection method saved by the Master of Argent had been used by the devil of abhorrence. It was now only a container of the devil!

Speaking of which, the white halos surrounding it spread out in all directions. That was the biggest difference between it and Memphiste. Only the Lord of Silent Hell and a great level three legendary devil could own the power of Ice Death Halo!

The silver-white halos like waves reached further and froze the gray bricks, broken stone pillars, dark-red soil, and even the air.

The freezing was not from extremely low temperature, but the power of corrosion from death. Even the lifeless buildings had been infected by the dead air, and the entire place now felt like a cold tomb.

The devil of abhorrence was the devil with the worst temper. It was used to launch a direct attack to let out the hatred within!

The moment the halos spread out, Greed had started using Memphiste's extraordinary power, Ice Duke, to launch its attack.

At this time, they heard a gentle, remote clicking sound.

In the cold and silent space, the sound seemed to be so cheerful that it was almost creepy.

Click.

Lucien pressed the button and everything instantly came into a pause.

The world had become even quieter now. Lucien then gave Luxury Cracking to each one of them.

He then blinked to a place far away from the temple. He lifted his right hand and the Atomic Universe appeared behind his back. The raging, huge fireball was right beside his right hand, and the extremely high temperature was twisting the air, creating unrecognizable illusionary images.

“Eternal Blaze!”

At this time, Lucien did not care if the Stellar Core would be ruined in the explosion. Just seeing it with his own eyes had made his journey worthwhile!

Lucien could not let greed blind him at this crucial moment.

BOOM!

When time resumed, the power of Eternal Blaze took over!

The entire space was ablaze with the dazzling light, as if a sun god had arrived.

The temple in the middle and the two primeval devils were vaporized within a second before they could even release a bitter cry.

After the extremely high temperature and the blinding light, the powerful energy storm had come to Lucien. However, the almighty power could not hurt Lucien at all, what with the layers of twisted air shielding him.

Because of the special environment in this primeval hell, the mushroom cloud, while shockingly gorgeous, now appeared to be even more beautiful, but in a creepy way, like a huge red straw hat.

After everything calmed down, there was only a huge pit in the ground left. The devils were now gone forever.

Lucien was surprised to see something at the bottom of the pit. It was a shining “gem”.

It was the Stellar Core. The great power of the spell did not destroy it. Lucien started casting the spells to rule out any possible danger from it.

The gravity pulling time and space in from the core had disappeared, and maybe this was the reason why it could stand the horrible power. Although the stellar core had temporarily lost its power to affect its surroundings, its power was still slowly recovering.

Lucien picked it up and put it into his pouch.

At this time, when Lucien was about to leave this place, he suddenly heard the high-pitched, exaggerated laughter.

“There’s no use! You can’t kill us!”

“The defense of your heart has cracked. Then you’ll see the true primeval hell and all the primeval devils there!”

In the roaring and laughter, Lucien was stunned for a second as he did not expect that they also liked the term “primeval devils”.

Lucien ignored the mocking but headed for the relic in the depth of the primeval hell.

After quite a while, Lucien finally saw the magnificent palace at the tip of the peak, which was built from gold, shining in the remaining glory against the dusk sky.

After carefully checking around, Lucien landed in front of the palace and pushed open the heavy gate. He then walked into the boundless darkness.

According to the information provided by Douglas and Rhine, once he stepped in, things that every single individual would face would vary depending on what they believed was the most dreadful.

In the dark corridor, there was only dim candlelight providing the last touch of brightness, like lamps in a tomb.

As Lucien walked in deeper, the numbers of candles increased. Then, he saw a hall in front of him. In the hall, there were lots of silver candlesticks, and there were also crystal lamps hanging down from the ceiling. The entire hall was thus very well-lit, to the point that Lucien could see everything here.

It was a library!

A library that was full of bookshelves and books!

The arrangement looked very, very similar to that of Lucien’s spirit library!

Lucien was a bit amused and speechless. Was this the place he was afraid of?

He walked in the library silently and went toward the biggest bookshelf.

“The Periodic Relation between the Nature of Elements and Prediction of New Elements”

...

“The Energy Distribution of Black-Body Radiation”

...

“New Alchemy”

...

“On the Electrodynamics of Moving Bodies and Mass-energy Equation”

...

“A Relativistic Interpretation and Geometric Description of Gravity and a System of Relativity Under a More General Frame of Reference”

...

“On Quantum Mechanics”

...

Those were all papers that Lucien once published, and all of them triggered all his memories. However, there was only one difference. The author of the papers all remained unknown. The big, scarlet question marks were sharp and intimidating!

Lucien reached out his hand and gave the papers and books a gentle stroke as he smiled. “Several years ago, I would definitely feel extremely shameful seeing this, but now, I can say proudly that, by standing on the giants’ shoulders, I’ve got something valuable of my own, and I finally have some of my own understanding of the world.”

Then he bowed solemnly. “Your exploration and study have led to us approaching the truth of the world. Without you, the great minds, all the human beings here in this world, and I would have lived in ignorance and darkness much longer...

“... I will keep going while bearing your will.”

Suddenly, all the books fell from the shelves as the entire library started shaking fiercely.

Lucien just stood there silently and let the books fall on him. Of course, none of the books could break the protection from Space Staff.

After the library was gone, there was a dark, black gate in front of Lucien.

Lucien realized that he was in a place that looked like a civil court in Holm.

There was a handsome, young man who was wearing a top hat and a double-breasted suit sitting up there. The smile on his face was warm and gentle. The judge was Lucien himself!

He smiled. “Welcome to the real primeval hell!”

On the one side sat six plaintiffs. And they were all Lucien!

One looked extremely arrogant; one kept checking his treasure; one looked rather pissed with everything; one was soaked in agony; one was burning in the flame of envy; and the last one's eyes were full of lust.

They were all shouting, “He's sinful! We accuse him! We're witnesses!”

Lucien was a bit speechless. Without a doubt, the primeval devils were fans of roleplay. However, he was a bit surprised that the seven primeval devils were all here, which was completely different from the information he got from the president and Mr. Rhine.

Facing the seven top legendaries, even if their powers did not last, even if Lucien was also a leading top legendary, he would not be able to handle it. He had better retreat for now.

Chapter 809: Cunning

“Silent! No shouting in the court!” The “judge” picked up the gavel and brought attention back to the bench, looking rather unbiased.

It was Hypocrisy!

Looking at Lucien, Hypocrisy announced, “With regard to the accusation against you, a fair sentence will be given to you. Please go in the dock. Don’t worry. I am the most upright and impartial judge in the primeval hell.”

As soon as Hypocrisy finished the words, Abhorrence sprang up from the chair and said aloud, “I accuse him of the violent desire for killing! Anyone who pissed him off was killed! He killed the followers of Argent Horn, the night watchers, and so many! Even a hundred sheets of paper is not enough for the list!”

“I accuse him of being jealous all the time although you can tell nothing from the outside,” Jealousy said. “His guts are on fire with envy, all the time! He was jealous of the gangs’ life when he was poor. He was jealous of Natasha’s love toward Silvia. He hated Felipe’s reputation, the Hand of Paleness, and even all the great sorcerers in arcana! His body is only a hollow container of acidity as his soul has gone forever because of envy. Disgusting!”

Greed joined and said, “His heart is full of the desire for treasure and reputation. He put his name on his students’ papers and attacked those who didn’t agree with him. He wants everything, leaving nothing to anyone else!

“Those are just on the surface! The deepest reason is that he’s more than arrogant! He looks down upon all the arcanists in the Congress, including Douglas and Fernando. He despises the Saint Truth, including the popes and grand cardinals. He laughs at all the intelligent creatures in the world and believes that he is the only one knowing the truth of the world and the only lighthouse in this dark age!”

“In his mind, all other creatures are savage and silly, and he’s the only one standing above while watching everything with full awareness. Therefore, he's cold, he doesn't care about other people's lives, and he is full of jealousy! All because he's arrogant!" said Arrogance excitedly, waving its arms, as if it was the true judge in the court.

When Indulgence and Pain were about to join, when Hypocrisy was lifting the gavel again, Lucien suddenly smiled, and there a silver pocket watch appeared in his right hand.

Click.

The court suddenly came to a pause, and everything in the space now looked very pale.

Hypocrisy's gavel remained in the air, while Arrogance had become a solid statue, which looked like it was giving a long speech.

And the rest of them had all frozen into statues.

Like an old painting in gray and white.

Without hesitation, Lucien was about to blink to the other side. After all, the devils were too many, and he could not manage to give each of them a Luxury Cracking within the time range given.

Lucien's plan was that after there was a distance between them, he would use Space Shackle to trap them all and then throw Eternal Blaze at him. He knew that this one single strike could not kill them all, but it would earn him time.

At this time, he heard a mix of sounds!

The seven pocket watches and the clicking sound were mixing together. Faster and faster, as if it was going to blow at any time!

Lucien saw that each of the seven "Lucien" had a silver pocket watch in their hand! Exactly the same pocket watch!

There was a sarcastic smile on their faces, as if they were saying, We were all lying! We could even copy your legendary items!

Hypocrisy reached out its right hand.

“Luxury Cracking!”

The previous fights were for Lucien to lower his alert. Arrogance, Greed, and Abhorrence purposefully made Lucien believe that he could run away because of Moon Timer at any time so that he could be confident enough to come to this place where the seven of them could show up together!

Meanwhile, Arrogance grinned at Lucien and said, “Storm Barrier!”

The devils were grinning in triumph. Lucien had to pay for underestimating them!

Lucien had to pay for his own arrogance!

Without his arrogance, Lucien wouldn’t have fallen into such a trap.

Abhorrence reached out its right hand and was thrilled as if it had seen Lucien’s death.

“Positron Cannon!”

We were devils! Known for our cunning tricks of playing with human minds!

So cry, shout, and die!

Jealousy took a gloomy glance at the rest of the devils and said in low voice, “Eternal Blaze!”

You shall all die!

Meanwhile, Soul Smite from Greed, Space Staff from Indulgence, and Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness from Pain were all shooting toward Lucien.

This was totally out of Lucien’s expectation. For a second, he was stunned. Facing the seven most powerful spells, for a moment, Lucien understood how his enemies felt.

No one could take the seven top legendary spells all together, including any top legends!

Earlier, Arrogance, Greed, and Abhorrence were just pretending that they could not copy extraordinary items!

But how could they? How was this possible?

Where did the substance come from?

Like all the classic villains who did not want to accept their fate, Lucien kept asking the same questions...

However, as an arcanist, Lucien's thinking went much deeper. There was something wrong.

If it had been someone else, it would have taken the arcanist much longer to realize what was wrong here, and within seconds, the spells would have destroyed everything. But Lucien was different, as he was here for a reason. He was here to verify an idea!

Seeing that Lucien had given up on defending himself, the devils were gloating wildly.

At this time, a meaningful smile emerged on Lucien's face.

From another perspective, this had verified Lucien's guess!

Hypocrisy and Arrogance first realized what was going on, and they looked totally shocked, as Lucien's body suddenly collapsed inward.

Meanwhile, the stars in the Atomic Universe behind Lucien were orbiting in the mysterious tracks. The huge fireball had revolved to the other side and left a black hole there. The black hole looked rather intimidating as even light could not escape from its power of pulling in!

The dark hole and Lucien's collapsed body started linking with each other in a creepy way. Then, Lucien himself had become the cluster of darkness, and the horrible attraction was twisting the surrounding time and space.

Luxury Cracking hit it, but then nothing happened!

Storm Barrier had disappeared!

When Positron Cannon hit the dark hole, it only shrank slightly!

None of the seven legendary spells worked, and the darkness still existed. It then stretched and pulled and converted into Lucien again.

“This isn’t arcana...” Greed took a step back.

Arrogance cried out of great shock, “How is this possible?! This thing can destroy the entire world!”

Hypocrisy looked at Lucien and murmured, “How...”

“As long as you dare to imagine, the world can be anything, isn’t it?” Lucien smiled, having no intention to launch his strike right away.

Hypocrisy’s eyes suddenly went wide. “You’ve known about it?”

“Of course. Do you wanna see Gamma-Ray Burst, God-Killing Swords, or Eternal Return?” Lucien joked.

He then closed his eyes, and his consciousness soared!

Chapter 810: Heart and Trace

Chapter 810: Heart and Trace

Closing his eyes, Lucien felt that his consciousness suddenly soared like a little bird that finally got rid of the cage and was embracing the blue sky. It kept rising higher and higher, and finally, it could look down upon the entire earth.

Facing the seven top legends, like a poet full of romantic thoughts, Lucien did not cast any defense on himself. However, none of the devils seized the chance to launch an attack. Instead, they stared at Lucien, frowning, as if Lucien was not even in the same dimension as them!

Lucien's consciousness started getting blurry as it kept soaring. When Lucien felt that it had hit his limit, he felt his consciousness ran into something soft and intangible.

Boom!

Instantly, Lucien felt his soul tremble, and his spiritual power had just broken some kind of shackles and then spread out like waves.

The dark sky, the red soil, the gold palace, the court, and even the primeval devils cracked like a mirror falling onto the ground.

Crack...

The entire hell had split into countless tiny pieces, and behind the pieces, it was this primeval chaos that comprised of colorful light.

The illusionary light was like lines, sketching and outlining the figures of human beings, dragons, and devils as they kept changing. There was no order at all, and some faces on the figures looked furious, some looked greedy, some looked painful, and some had apparent desires.

Such a colorful but illusionary world of “negative emotions” was boundless. However, around Lucien, the part of the world had collapsed into a very vivid and real scene.

Beneath Lucien's feet, there was an amusingly tiny planet. It was blue and was covered in something blurry. Underneath the planet, there was a city flying in the air. The magic tower built in the city was so tall that the tip of it could almost touch the blue planet.

Underneath the city in the sky, it was the chaotic reflection of Aalto, the City of Psalm.

All of these were under constant changes, like a human mind that was full of all kinds of thoughts.

Lucien did not try to see what was at the end of the world. He opened his eyes and looked back. He saw that behind the gate, it was the very bottomless canyon that he saw when he came in!

In the canyon, the old bronze door now looked rather gauzy and dimly discernible.

In front of the gate stood a young man wearing a black, double-breasted suit. He had a good-looking face, but his eyes had lost focus, and his expression was blank. His right hand pressed against the bronze door as if it was firmly glued on it!

It was Lucien himself!

But this Lucien now seemed to be part of the bronze gate, and thus, his figure also looked illusionary and blurry.

As he expected, this was the place where all negative emotions gathered, and the bronze gate was in fact the gate of his mind!

Lucien looked around and saw the seven primeval devils. They no longer looked like Lucien. They looked like figures made of light spots. However, the negative feelings coming out were still rather intense.

This place was, of course, not only Lucien's mind. To be more accurate, through touching the gate, Lucien's mind had mixed with the countless negative emotions together in this dimension, and thus, a creepy and mysterious primeval hell was reflected.

Therefore, the hell looked different to each individual!

But now, Lucien had seen the true primeval hell. His body was standing outside, and his soul had entered in to explore his mind.

The so-called primeval devils were also reflections of one's own negative emotions amplified by this dimension, and therefore, they could not be destroyed. Due to the unusual nature of the Stellar Core, it could hide here.

In most cases, top legendaries usually had great control of their minds, and therefore, most of them could see up to four primeval devils. However, something went wrong, or perhaps there was a conspiracy behind it, but all seven of them showed up at the same time.

Therefore, as long as one could imagine, the dimension could be anything, even if it went against the rules of arcana!

Hypocrisy, which had lost its shape and was now a cluster of white light, asked again, "How did you know?"

Underneath the white light, there was dark miasma churning.

Lucien smiled. "You can copy my spells. I don't think that's strange. After all, this place can amplify all the negative emotions, and perhaps you can connect to my mind..."

"... Although I don't understand how you did it and what are the rules behind it, it's still within my comprehension, and I've seen it somewhere else. But now, you can even copy a top legendary item and its power. I can't even do this. I'm a top legendary specializing in time and space, and I can't do this, then how can you?"

"... The only possibility is that there were another seven similar space-time legendary items in this dimension, which means among those souls that got lost here, there were seven as powerful as me.

"... If it had been just one or two, possible, but all of you were too greedy. That's the biggest commonality shared by all devils!"

In fact, Lucien knew it well because he got this idea a long time ago.

“You’re too arrogant. Why can’t we?” Arrogance shouted. It was now only a golden light ball. “You just got lucky!”

Jealousy, the green light ball, sneered, “Don’t celebrate too early. What can you do after this? You’ve triggered the true power of the primeval hell, and sooner or later, you’ll be infected and become another lost soul!”

Hypocrisy also said coldly, “There are a primeval hell and seven primeval devils in everyone’s mind. You can never get rid of us! Even if you can get out this time, after what had happened, we live forever in your mind, and we’ll torture you, and we’ll corrupt you every second of your life. How long can you resist that? The final victory is ours!”

“I’ll now turn you into a monster so full of hatred that you won’t even be able to recognize yourself!” roared the devil of abhorrence.

The seven primeval devils joined again, but this time, they had changed their way of fighting. From each of them, a fine line had reached all the way to Lucien. The seven lines were in different colors!

Lucien, however, started clapping while facing the threat. “Good point. There are a primeval hell and seven primeval devils in everyone’s mind. Ever since I was born, I’ve been dealing with you all.”

The seven primeval devils had no idea what Lucien meant.

“I’ve heard a saying before. It tells us that we can only look at a person’s specific motivation when he does something, but not all the thoughts he has. If not, then all the human beings in this world are corrupt...”

“If we probe into a person’s mind, true, it is always full of bad and filthy ideas.” Lucien smiled in a half self-mocking tone. “I admit that I do have some shameful thoughts from time to time, but in the end, the thoughts would never come true because I’ve conquered them!

“Every time when I did something, I did have more or less some bad thoughts, but in the end, I defeated all of them, so I can stick to the good things that I believe in.”

Lucien looked more serious, and he said to the seven devils, “The way I think and the belief I have all come from the many fights with you, devils. And I have always been the winner. Now, do you think I’d be afraid of you, losers?”

As he was speaking, Lucien took a step out, and his figure suddenly looked extremely tall and big. In fact, it was because the seven devils had suddenly become much smaller and shorter as they bent their backs low.

Arrogance finally realized what was going on and said furiously, “You’re arrogant, too arrogant. You’ve defeated us before, but that doesn’t mean you always do. Your attitude will lead to your final failure!”

Hypocrisy’s body started shaking fiercely after hearing Arrogance’s words. Such an idiot!

Arrogance was basically telling Lucien how to defeat them!

The rest of the five devils remained silent.

...

In Lance, in a spacious underground hall at the bottom of the Bright Hall.

There was an old cross in front of the hall that had witnessed the passage of time. Apart from this, there was only a rusted candlestick.

This was the first sanctuary that the Saint Truth had during its development.

At this time, the candles suddenly lit up. The twelve grand cardinals including Saint Kati, Saint Maria, Philibell, and Astira were standing there, each in one corner.

In the middle of the hall, there was a strange three-dimensional structure that looked very different from those normal divine circles and magic circles. It was like a collection of childish scrawling.

Around the strange structure, Benedict III kept walking back and forth and checking. The rest of the grand cardinals also did the same to make sure that they wouldn't be sacrificed or devoured by it like Harex, the Lord of the Boundless Ocean.

"Ready?" Benedict III asked in the weak tone.

After multiple confirmations, the grand cardinals responded together, "Your Holiness, we're ready!"

Chapter 811: The Real Viken

Chapter 811: The “Real” Viken

Benedict III turned around abruptly. With his back against the old cross, he said solemnly, “Let’s begin.”

After a brief hesitation, Saint Kati suggested, “Your Holiness, should we wait for a while longer? Such an attempt is very dangerous. You may be heavily wounded and fall into dormancy even though you are a demigod. Why don’t we have another few minimal simulations? Or we can wait until the Angel King wakes up. He’ll be able to separate you from Monster Viken with God’s Guard at the critical moment.”

What he did not say out aloud was that, if the ritual to gather negative feelings and primeval devils to summon the primeval hell failed, His Holiness might be unable to control Monster Viken anymore after being heavily wounded and that he would even be swallowed. By then, with Monster Viken’s personality, which was close to that of primeval devils, they wouldn’t end well at all. The South Church would definitely fall apart, and even the Congress of Magic and the Dark Congress would suffer destructive strikes.

That was because Monster Viken did not have boundaries or anything that he needed to protect. His sole interest was destruction and corrupting other people. With that in mind, he might attack the magic apprentices, bishops, and arcanists alike without considering the consequences.

Faced with a demigod, only the experts above level three of legendary had a chance to save their lives or stall the enemy. Therefore, unless the other people stayed in Allyn or the Holy City forever, their destiny would be unavoidable. After all, there were few experts who could protect them.

Kati’s concerns were exactly what was on the mind of most Grand Cardinals. However, before they said anything, Benedict III already said slowly but peacefully, “I’m very confident about it, and I have to thank Lucien Evans for his remarkable contributions to the studies of the observer effect.

“Let’s begin. After I overcome the insidious problems and I’m no longer restrained by Monster Viken, I’ll be the strongest demigod under the Lord. With the help of God’s Arrival, all the enemy forces will bend before us!”

He did not mention destroying the Congress of Magic or the Dark Congress because all the Grand Cardinals knew that the organizations protected by demigods would never really die until the demigods perished. Their worst outcome was to change their appearance and exist in a different form. Another cruel and cold fact was that demigods never died. They could always return from the river of fate.

Of course, after Lucien discovered the sun and confirmed the existence of planets, the Grand Cardinals were much more open-minded now. After all, there were so many more planets and resources. All they needed to do was to drive the Congress of Magic out of this world rather than seeking to eliminate them.

Hearing the pope’s confident declaration, the saints calmed down too. They believed that His Holiness would certainly not joke with his own life.

They left the corners and reached the twelve pillars that supported the weird cubic circle. Then, their bodies blurred into mists, and intense negative feelings flowed out.

Pope Viken stepped into the center and stuck his platinum staff against the hole at the top. Then, with his eyes half-closed, he chanted an evil, weird, and eccentric spell that was entirely different from the sacred and solemn divine power.

A wind started to blow. The feelings of gloom, darkness, corruption, and pain immediately filled this ancient sanctuary.

Centered at the platinum staff and Pope Viken, lines and symbols glittered. Some were silver, some crimson, some pure gold, and some dimly green. They changed nonstop exactly like the erratic mind of human beings.

The light and symbols flowed toward the twelve pillars, dyeing the misty shadows of the Grand Cardinals in different colors. They floated fuzzily like phantoms made of the light that represented different negative feelings.

As the shadows that looked like the primeval devils took shape, screams, moans, and roars suddenly echoed inside the ancient sanctuary, making the place look like the most horrifying and brutal hell.

As if he had heard the summoning of the devils and corrupt souls, a deep dark shadow suddenly appeared behind Pope Viken, also with intense hate and fury. It was exactly Monster Viken.

Boom!

The moment Monster Viken appeared, dark air emerged from the void of the circle and exploded. Then, colorful light was condensed in the black air and stretched out boundlessly.

In the cluster of light, the faces of miserable human beings, devils, dragons, and vampires appeared. For a moment, all the crazy faces were moving in a mess. It truly felt like the primeval hell!

His eyes half-closed, Viken made another step forward and uttered obscure words, as if he were a god berating the devils.

The platinum staff glowed, and the primeval hell simulated at the center of the circle rose. After it gradually left the ground, the floor was no longer as vintage and gray as a while before. The strange symbols were gone, replaced by a deep, dark, and bottomless abyss.

The simulated primeval hell kept rising, and spots of light glittered in the abyssal darkness down below. Lights in different colors were emerging, and the faces of countless intelligent creatures were also showing up, exactly like the reflection of the fake primeval hell up above. The only difference was that the darkness here was high, mighty, manipulative, and intangible.

Viken had indeed summoned the primeval hell!

.....

Inside the primeval hell, as Lucien pressed forward, making Arrogance, Greed, Hypocrisy, and the other primeval devils smaller and smaller, the void and the rays of light in it suddenly began to tremble!

In the meantime, twelve shadows similar to the primeval devils were generated nearby, and the seven primeval devils expanded as if they had drunk tonics. They all laughed gloatingly and terrifyingly.

“Haha. Somebody summoned the primeval hell!” Hypocrisy looked at Lucien mockingly. “How unlucky of you. In such a case, it won’t be just a battle of your heart!”

Abhorrence gnashed its teeth. “Too many negative feelings and too many lost souls have been gathered in this place. The power when they are combined will be unforgettable for you! Face my fury and hate, and cry!”

“This is already the power of demigods, and your body is still outside, making it impossible for you to carry out all your strength!” Arrogance looked down at Lucien. “Kneel and beg. Perhaps I’ll give you a quick death!”

“Summoning the primeval hell...” Lucien looked at the void, stunned. So fast?

.....

Seeing that the primeval hell was summoned, Philibell, Philip, and the other Grand Cardinals were all relieved. They had survived one of the two dangers. Then, they would summon the projection of Mountain Paradise to balance the projection of the primeval hell so that the pope could complete the melting.

They thought and struggled to resist because the primeval hell had a strong attraction force on them in their current state. They might be lost and swallowed by the primeval hell if they were careless.

Right when they waited for Pope Viken to summon the projection of Mountain Paradise with the platinum staff, Viken suddenly opened his eyes, which glowed like two suns.

In the meantime, the dark and corrupt Monster Viken behind him stepped forward and melted into his body.

As a result, Viken's left eye dimmed like the darkest night, which was a major contrast to the bright right eye. However, a strange balance seemed to have been maintained. He put on a mocking smile.

“What exactly has happened?”

“They have melted so easily?”

“Damn it!”

Different thoughts occurred to the Grand Cardinals, who subconsciously wanted to get out of the circle. However, the powerful force of assimilation from the primeval hell stalled them.

Viken laughed blatantly and pointed his platinum staff ahead. “You are fortunate and favored, and you will receive the greatest glory, which is to melt with me, the incarnation of the Lord, to wake up the one true god and become part of Him.”

As he pointed his platinum staff and uttered his crazy declaration that contained supernatural powers, the simulated primeval hell dispersed and tied up the Grand Cardinals. All of a sudden, they felt that Pope Viken was their destiny, and they sincerely wanted to melt into him!

“Why is this happening?” Saint Kati exclaimed in shock.

Viken, both the pope and the monster, sneered, “Because I am the greatest primeval devil, and you are equal to my clones! This is decided by the feature of primeval devils. I'm sorry that I neglected that in the files I gave to you. Those who did not become a demigod based on this path can never sense it.”

“No wonder you were willing to share it!” Philip cried desperately.

“Are you out of your mind? You are dissolving the foundation of the Church!” Philibell roared, stressing that the dissemination of faith couldn’t be done without them.

The colorful lights of negative feelings jumped among the Grand Cardinals, causing them to assimilate with Viken faster and faster.

In a warm smile, Viken said, “That cannot be helped. Although I appreciate Lucien Evans’ contributions to the observer theory and the two thought experiments, it is not a perfect theory after all. Our integration is not temporary, and we will be separated again.

“Of course, the most important reason is that I am not strong enough as an observer. So, I need you to melt into me in order to really summon the primeval hell. Only after I become a true god that everything can be perfectly solved.

“If I succeed, the Church will never collapse with me as the true god, and it doesn’t matter if you are here; if I fail, I’ll fall into a long dormancy and even get swallowed by Monster Viken, in which case the Church matters little to me! I don’t care if the world will be destroyed after my death!”

The Grand Cardinals couldn’t have been more regretful, but they were not devastated yet. They talked in private before and predicted possible changes. At this moment, if they were to take action together according to the emergency plan, and since Viken could not be distracted, there was a good chance that they could escape!

They were certainly no fools that would believe everything that the pope said!

Right when they mobilized all their strength and attacked together, Saint Maria and Grand Cardinal Philip suddenly lost focus and fell into madness, melting into the simulated primeval hell voluntarily!

Had they been controlled by Viken already?

Desperation, regrets, pain, and other feelings rose in the hearts of the other Grand Cardinals, making it even less possible for them to resist the assimilation. As a result, they were melted and reflected in the real primeval hell!

Boom!

The darkness on the floor rose and embraced the fake primeval hell in the sky, gathering into a world that was full of betrayals, slaughters, jealousy, and lust!

Boom!

Behind Viken, the space was torn apart, and the hallowed, wondrous hymns came out. The glorious and brilliant Mountain Paradise had arrived!

The two of them moved toward each other, raising an uncanny air that surged toward the sky. In every corner in the entire world, the unusual view of half night and half day was showing up.

In the City in the Sky, Douglas sensed something when the primeval hell was gathered. He blinked to the midair and looked at the direction of the Holy City in a daze. Stars emerged in his eyes and moved in mysterious trajectories, as if he were performing astrology with them as the crystal balls.

“What is Viken trying to do?”

Chapter 812: Blockage

Chapter 812: Blockage

“What is Viken trying to do?”

At the bottom of the Boundless Ocean, in a magnificent black palace, the Lord of Hell, who was holding the gold trident, suddenly stood up from the throne. His red eyes that were always filled with mockery stared at the sky in shock. Through the blue water and the surging waves, he “saw” the unusual phenomenon where one half of it was evil and dark and the other half was sacred and bright.

At the same time, his real self deep inside the hell suddenly felt palpitation, as if something very close to him had gone out of control.

“The primeval hell?”

Maltimus’ voice of confusion echoed in the palace of the sea emperor. It was safe to say that the primeval hell and him were in a relationship of duality. However, he was not a representation of the primeval hell, and the primeval hell was not a part of him. They were only connected to some degree.

Even so, the primeval hell was of paramount importance for him!

Suddenly, his lips, which had been wearing a mocking smile, were frozen as he thought of a possibility. “Viken intends to become a true god? Has he lost his mind? Does he not fear that he will lose all his consciousness and get melted by ‘Mountain Paradise’ or the primeval hell?”

“Now that he balances Mountain Paradise with the primeval hell, it’s possible that he can really grasp the tiny chance of hope...”

Although Maltimus would love to observe whether or not it was viable, he knew very well that Viken had to be stopped. If Viken really surpassed the limits, the demigods like him would probably perish for real!

No demigods other than him could make the advancement!

.....

In the Valley of Fiery Stone in the Dark Mountain Range...

Alterna, whose long blond hair was tied up and dangled on her shoulder, pressed her hands on the Sword of Origin and Destiny on the ground and stared at her pet, Danisos the Dragon of Time and Luminosity, carefully, with her mouth moving vaguely, as if she were trying to hold back her saliva.

Danisos kept his head low and dared not look at Alterna, fearing that he might be eaten if he looked at her again.

Suddenly, he had uncanny fear and couldn't help but raise his head, and Silver Moon Alterna before him had vanished at some point!

The high sky that was full of space gaps and dark mists had been completely covered by the half darkness and half brilliance.

"Is it caused by demigod advancement? No! What's Viken trying to do?" With the preliminary control over time. Danisos had a basic perception of fate. So, he realized what was going on very quickly.

.....

In the Maple Palace in Antiffler in the Holy Heilz Empire...

Rudolf II clenched his right hand hard, with both mockery and fury.

"Viken is crazy enough to lay fingers on Mountain Paradise? Does he hate that his life is too long and he can never really die?

"Soon, although he will not really perish, it will definitely be more miserable than the real demise!"

Many thoughts occurred to him, but they eventually gathered into a concern.

"Will Viken succeed?"

.....

In the ancient sanctuary below the ground of the Holy City, when the Desperate World gathered by the projection of the primeval hell encountered the projection of Mountain Paradise summoned by the platinum staff, a storm of energy swept out in circles, blowing down the wall of the hall and knocking up the dome!

BOOM!

The clerics in the Holy City heard a dull but extremely loud explosion. Their ears hummed first, and soon, they lost their hearing.

The ground rolled up and down like a gigantic snake. The churches, ashrams, and abbeys protected by the divine power collapsed abruptly.

BOOM!

Stunned, the clerics watched the Bright Hall, which was a symbol of the center of the Church, being blown away, while a blurry, colorful world that was full of pain and desperation entangled with the glorious Mountain Paradise where hymns were resonating, before they rose into the clouds like a blast!

Immediately, from the evil and dark knight, intelligent creatures appeared. There were humans, dwarfs, elves, dragons, and many ancient species that had been extinct for a long time. In a sacred and bright day, the angels with pure wings on the back and the holy spirits sang and praised in the infinite light.

In the place where they were gathered, an old man who was wearing a sacred crown stood straight despite the pain on his face. His whole body was both illusionary and real, and it was as transcendental and intangible as the pictures next to him. It seemed that he was really in a different world; a marvelous world that was higher than the earth and the sky!

“His Holiness?”

“What’s he doing?”

The clerics were shocked. In their eyes, the pope extended the platinum staff in his right hand, illuminating a corner of the dark and corrupt world, and the dark and evil shadow on the left side stepped forward, contaminating the bright and sacred heaven.

Such a view could not only be seen in the Holy City but in every place, including Allyn, Rentato, Antiffler, Syracuse, and Aalto!

“Isn’t it Benedict III?” Having just played a game, Heidi was stretching her arms to relax when she suddenly stiffened. She just saw the astonishing sky outside the window.

Annick, who had been well-tortured by the eraser experiment and the delayed choice experiment, also raised his head and looked at the pope in a daze, not knowing what was happening.

Was the unusual phenomenon caused by demigod advancement? But he was already a demigod!

In the marvelous world where he could be seen in every place, Viken couldn’t have looked more twisted. He maintained his sanity with the power of the primeval hell and prevented himself from being melted by Mountain Paradise while avoiding the corruption and assimilation of the primeval hell with the enhancement of Mountain Paradise. He tried to seize the point of balance and seek the gate of breakthrough with the enormous power!

As a result, he shouldered excruciating pain, but he still mumbled to himself, “Not enough! Not enough!”

The brightness that the projection of Mountain Paradise let out was even more dazzling. The clerics and believers in the Holy City suddenly felt something. They all knelt on the ground.

“Almighty Lord, you are one, and everyone.”

In every place that worshiped the God of Truth, the devout believers and clerics, regardless of their locations and ages, were all caught in a certain holy, touching atmosphere. They all knelt on the ground and prayed at the same time.

“You are the beginning, and the end.”

“You are the moment, and forever.”

From them, brilliant, pure, and sacred light flew out into the midair and melted into the day!

The dark world was immediately suppressed. It was almost purged, but it still managed to deal with it.

Viken kept on murmuring as if he had gone mad, “Not enough! Not enough!”

Suddenly, a cold and bright moon appeared in the sky. Driving away part of the darkness as well as the brightness, the pure and dreamy moonlight enshrouded Viken at the center.

On the other side, noises of tide burst out, and a gold trident rose to the sky with overwhelming blueness. In the seawater, there were no fish or seaweeds, but erupting volcanoes, bottomless canyons, silent battlefields, and other sceneries of hell!

“Life Deprivation!” The Lord of Hell pointed the gold trident at Pope Viken!

.....

Above the City in the Sky, Douglas said solemnly, “Brook will stay in Allyn. Hathaway and Fernando will come with you. The other members of the Highest Council except for the legends who are supervising the branches will all return to Allyn.”

At such a moment, only top legends could play a role on the battlefield. Therefore, Douglas did not ask the other legendary sorcerers to join him.

Douglas’ voice was not loud, but every sorcerer in the City in the Sky heard it clearly. They immediately panicked.

“Master, why am I the one who stays here? It should be Hathaway.” Brook flew into the sky and expressed his confusion.

Douglas said solemnly, “You are the person most likely to reach the demigod level other than Lucien. Bear the big picture in mind and don't be stubborn.”

He was not subtle at all.

“Master...” Brook fell silent.

At this moment, Fernando and Hathaway had already joined Douglas. The Lord of the Undead had also teleported himself over.

“Vicente, don't play tough.” Fernando glared at him.

Vicente sneered with his skinny cheek that did not have any muscles. “Old pervert, I am a top legend as well! If you fail, there is no place that I can hide in!”

The Resting Place appeared in his back. From the black tombstones, roars echoed from the depths of hell. It was the first call and the initial cry of life!

Chapter 813: Mayhem

“The Original Body?” Douglas, Fernando, and Hathaway were all knowledgeable sorcerers. Based on the black tombstones, the screams of death, and the initial cry, they recognized that Vicente’s real body was indeed the legendary Original Body of the school of necromancy!

However, at such a critical moment, they did not have the time to ask about the details. After Douglas enhanced themselves with a legendary spell that was similar to the telepathic bond, the four of them blinked to the unusual view of half hell and half heaven in the high sky.

Although Viken’s real body was above the Holy City, his attempt seemed to have placed him in a strange domain that was marvelously connected to every corner of the main material world. He was in the middle of this world but somewhat beyond it.

It was truly an unimaginable state. That was why the unusual phenomenon created by Viken was seen by all intelligent creatures, and that was why Silver Moon Alterna, the Lord of Hell, Douglas, Fernando, and the rest of them could enter the strange domain and attack Viken directly without spending time on space jump!

The Silver Moon fell in cold light, and the tide surged crazily with the life-depriving air of hell. However, the moment they approached Viken, the intimidating heaven on one side where angels and holy spirits gathered unleashed sacred and ivory light that filled up the space next to Viken, creating a shelter where there was nothing but the holy light. Chaos, darkness, evilness, and pain were gone.

Viken was now able to perform the legendary divine powers like the Blessed Realm without chanting!

Even though he hadn’t succeeded yet, such a change seemed to be indicating something!

The bright moonlight from the falling moon hit the Blessed Realm, making a light splash out. A layer of black fire was raised, and the holy light was burnt into nothingness.

The moment the tide hit the Blessed Realm, it lost all the splendor and became gray and dim, as if most of its vitality had flowed away. It was exactly “Life Deprivation”, the Lord of Hell’s best skill!

Under the collective attack of two demigods, a crack echoed in everybody’s heart. The Blessed Realm had collapsed.

The remaining black fire and the black water spread out to Viken, but he showed no reaction at all because illusionary ripples were spreading out of his body as if he were in the middle of “God’s Guard”. He was placed in a different world that was more marvelous and strange. He was higher and more intangible than demigods. Therefore, the remaining power of the two demigods after being blocked by Blessed Realm could not break the gap and really touch Viken’s body.

It meant that Silver Moon Alterna and the Lord of Hell’s strongest attacks had been blocked! Even though Viken was focused on his breakthrough and could not spare his attention, he was not on the losing side at all!

“Is this really the correct path?” The Lord of Hell habitually thought of retreating first and solving the problem with schemes later, but he got control of himself quickly. If Viken was not stopped and taken care of now, there wouldn’t be another opportunity in the future however many plots and schemes he had.

Not overestimating the power of true gods while inferring based on existent levels, true gods could definitely crush the general demigods exactly like demigods could crush general legends. Perhaps only Viken could’ve survived the attack of a true god with “God’s Arrival”. No other demigods could achieve the same.

“Eternal Blaze!”

Suddenly, Douglas’ solemn and intimidating voice echoed next to the ears of Maltimus and the Silver Moon.

The Silver Moon rose again and got away from the center. The tide ebbed crazily, revealing the empty “beach”. Viken seemed to have sensed danger. He drove the scared kingdom that was formed by the power of Mountain Paradise to spew out thick and divine light again, letting the Blessed Realm reappear.

He was now really able to perform divine powers freely without any chanting!

However, it was the end of it. The dim, desperate, and devastating “incarnation” of the primeval hell spurted out streaks of light in different colors, which moved as unpredictably as the treacherous human mind. They had interwoven into a gigantic and transparent heart that covered Viken and the Blessed Realm.

At the same time, the half illusionary and half real holy light flew from all directions in places like the Holy City, San Ivansburg, Aalto, and Rentato. Except in the Dark Mountain Range, the City in the Sky, and the dozen regimes of fake gods, almost every place had pious believers or clerics who kneeled on the ground, touched as they offered their power of faith.

BOOM!

The most dazzling light burst out, eclipsing the brilliant heaven and the dark hell. If it were not in the marvelous domain, the creatures who raised their head and looked at the sky at this moment would have been blinded.

The high temperature at the center twisted everything, but nobody could see it. They could only sense part of the secrets from the crazily raging storm of energy and the heat that seemed to be igniting all matters.

The ebbing tide manifested the views of hell at the edge of the marvelous domain, blocking the energy storm, which was already far away from the center.

“This is almost as powerful as ‘God’s Arrival!’” Although Maltimus hated to admit it, he had to draw the conclusion that Douglas’ Eternal Blaze was no weaker than God’s Arrival after he became a demigod. “However, this is a ranged spell and the power is not concentrated enough. Its damage on demigods is not as good as that of God’s Arrival. Also, it cannot erase all the traces. But of course, it has certainly reached the maximum of pure violence.”

As the energy storm rushed over nonstop, Maltimus frowned slightly. “It’s exactly because the energy is not focused that I and the glutton cannot cooperate with his attack. I only hope that this ‘Eternal Blaze’ can blow up Viken’s defense and prevent him from recovering for now.”

Under such circumstances, it was impossible for the Lord of Hell and the Silver Moon to give Viken more attacks, which would have been “drowned” by the energy storm and the super-high temperature. If they had attacked in advance, they couldn’t have avoided the Eternal Blaze themselves, because if they left enough time for themselves to dodge, Viken, who could perform legendary divine powers directly, could also set up defenses. It would have only been a waste of time!

After the energy storm was more or less pacified, Maltimus and Alterna hurried to sense Viken through the barriers, ready to seize the opportunity to completely shatter his defenses.

At this moment, the corrupt mind made of the power of the primeval hell next to Viken had already been vaporized, and the Blessed Realm, where hallowed hymns were echoing, had been broken as well. Even his body that was transforming between illusionary and real was dimmed, as if the marvelous domain that separated the reality from him could not take such massive energy and such terrifying heat.

Of course, the Lord of Hell believed that it was because the marvelous state was not perfect enough and had not touched the essence. Otherwise, it could never have been broken by pure violence.

Maltimus was delighted at Viken’s situation. Eternal Blaze was indeed almost as powerful as God’s Arrival.

However, before he had the opportunity to attack, the divine kingdom and the primeval hell on Viken's two sides spurted out their powers again, and the Blessed Realm and the Corrupt Mind reappeared, protecting Viken at the center.

His cooldown seemed to have been reduced to the minimum, and he had infinite and incessant energy.

Under such circumstances, the Lord of Hell and the Silver Moon naturally failed to seize the momentary opportunity!

Viken was not bothered by the collective attacks of three demigods and multiple top legends at all. He continued roaring crazily, "Not enough! Not enough!"

Together with his roar, the whole world seemed dimmed. In the primeval hell that was jumbled with various colors, the faces of humans and dragons were more vivid than ever. The twelve figures were even leaking out actively.

Inside the Holy City...

A priest who prayed piously was dwelling in the touching atmosphere that was devoid of pain and sadness when he suddenly sensed excruciating pain on his back. A red heart appeared on the ground before him and kept beating in inertia.

He looked at his chest, only to see a gigantic, bleeding hole.

"It's... It's my heart?" He used the last bit of his strength to turn back, only to see a priest that he knew.

The priest's facial muscles were twisted, and infinite hate beamed out of his eyes. He put his right hand on his mouth and licked the blood on it.

He did not look like a human being any longer, but more like a hateful devil!

Why? Since when had he been paying tributes to the primeval devils?

The pious priest collapsed; his question unanswered.

“Ahhh! Ahhh! Ahhh!”

Screams echoed in the Holy City, Aalto, Ifai, Rentato, and many other small cities and towns. Dark, twisted, and illusionary shadows that were brimming with negative feelings flew into the sky and embraced the corrupt and desperate mind that the primeval hell turned into!

The evil and dark world spread out and reached another balance with the divine kingdom. The twelve figures in it kept flying to the ground and then flying back in cycles.

The City in the Sky was already covered in a mist, with a starry sky popping up.

After Douglas and the rest of them left, Brook fully activated the defense without the slightest carelessness.

However, the sorcerers in Allyn were still more or less panicked. Mr. President's order and the uncanny view of the sky that they could see had given them uncanny fear.

Suddenly, an explosion burst out, attracting the attention of all the sorcerers around. They saw that a sorcerer had been blown into two halves by an enormous fireball, and his body was still burning in the flame. On his opposite side was a young sorcerer whose face was full of jealousy. He was attacking everyone around him crazily.

What's going on?

The sorcerers in Allyn were even more panicked.

On the top floor of the headquarters, Brook sensed the accident and gave the order calmly. “With the help of the city defense, the Punishment Department will execute the sorcerers who have been corrupted by primeval devils before. The other sorcerers are allowed to defend themselves with magic without being restrained by the rules of the Congress of Magic. Everyone, there is no need to panic. No more people will be corrupted under the blockage of the city defense.”

At this moment, an archmage came to his library and reported, “Mr.

Brook, something strange has happened!”

Chapter 814: Plan of the Devils

Chapter 814: Plan of the Devils

Brook's spiritual power spread out in the whole library, controlling the pivot of the magic circles, commanding the tower guard, supervising the defense of Allyn, and watching over the big picture of the whole City in the Sky. He could not spare much of his attention to the archmage. So, he asked from far away, "What happened?"

How could he have neglected any accident in the City in the Sky when he controlled the city defense?

The archmage said quickly, "A few members of the Highest Council who should've returned did not return!"

While saying, he walked into the library in a panic, but Brook was too occupied to remove the defense circle. He simply asked, "Who didn't come back?"

"There are..." The archmage spoke something, but suddenly, he lunged forward. His body became blurry and twisted, as if it was jumbled by streaks of light in different colors.

Zi, Zi, Zi.

In weird noises, the devil-like phantom passed the first magic circle, but it was soon condensed between the two magic circles.

Then, it traveled through the magic circles and lunged at Brook who was at the center.

Every time the magic circle took effect, it would turn from real into illusionary, as if it were in a different world, in order to pass them. However, such a status could not last. So, it had to sense the fluctuations of the magic circle keenly in order to find places for it to step on.

It was not until then that Brook realized that the guy had been corrupted and possessed by a powerful primeval devil through the seed that was planted into his heart a very long time ago.

He stared at the primeval devil. His eyes were filled with electricity as he tried to identify the person.

The devil's face changed all the time, now old and now young, now handsome and now hideous. It was quite dazzling.

Brook, however, recognized one of the faces. He asked in shock, "Melmax?"

He was the only top legendary knight at present!

"Melmax" laughed crazily. "Melmax is already dead. Standing before you is an incarnation of the True God Viken!"

Brook sighed, as if he realized something. "You're the most determined and devout knight that I know. I didn't know that you would also choose the path of primeval devils, and by using the primitive way without sharing the negative feelings with a container, no less."

Not every Grand Cardinal could find a legendary fake god or Demon Lord as their container. Therefore, many of them chose Thanos' version, which had a lot of problems. Melmax, who felt that he was determined enough to overcome the negative feelings, was the one who accomplished it first. Also, there wasn't really any influence after he completed it, at least none he could see.

However, after he was utilized and possessed by Viken, the negative feelings in his heart completely burst out.

Manipulated by Viken, the primeval devils that the twelve Grand Cardinals turned into possessed different people through the seeds of corruption that they planted earlier, attempting to raise havoc and create more negative feelings for Viken to absorb.

Of course, the seeds of corruption that could avoid the blockage of city defense had high requirements. The targets had to voluntarily allow the devils to enter, and they had to have abundant negative feelings in the first place.

The more inconspicuous projects were the projections with which Viken controlled Saint Maria and Philip. It had been made when they resonated with Mountain Paradise and received the grace of the God of Truth. The target would feel none of it until it was possessed at the critical moment.

“This is my offering to the Lord. You faithless sorcerers would never understand it.” Melmax suddenly became solemn. Then, a sun rose slowly behind him, illuminating the horizon and driving the darkness away.

The devil was capable of using his “Morning” blood power!

It seemed that his knowledge of the blood power was beyond that of all the legends. No wonder he was the only top legendary knight at present.

Brook sighed again and asked Prospell to lock the top three levels of the magic tower. Electric currents burst out of his body, and magnetic fields appeared, twisting the darkness. The Kingdom of Electromagnetism had arrived.

He tried to drag “Melmax” into his own demiplane for the battle, in case the other sorcerers of Allyn were affected.

However, “Melmax” had come to create chaos and more negative feelings. How could he drop the opportunity? Although the body and soul of an archmage could only carry out the strength of top legendary briefly, it was enough to resist the magnificent attraction from the Kingdom of Electromagnetism.

He's George, Atlant's student. Where's Atlant? When they were about to fight, Brook suddenly thought of that.

.....

In Nekso Palace in Rentato City...

After a silver sword flashed, a knight in a solid, delicate full armor watched his body cut into halves in shock. His face was still twisted with jealousy and hate.

Crack, crack, crack.

The two parts of his body were separated into countless pieces and bones and fell on the ground like raindrops.

Looking at the tall figure before them as well as her purple long hair and silver armor, the nobles who were hiding in the Nekso Palace heaved a long sigh in relief. It was too dreadful! A radiant knight turned into a devil and killed plenty of nobles. If the queen hadn't arrived in time, they would have been brutalized!

Winston, the other legendary knight of Holm, was watching over the colony in the alternate dimensions. So, they placed all their hope on Queen Natasha.

"Rest assured. The Congress of Magic has remarkable studies on primeval devils. Few powerful knights were possessed, or they couldn't have escaped our attention. As for the knights of lower ranks, they do not have enough negative feelings to be corrupted. I've asked the Sword of Truth's Knights to eliminate the corrupted with the police. The peace of Rentato will be restored," Natasha said calmly.

He knew that the corrupted could only cause limited chaos and damage. What would decide everybody's fate was the battle of demigods and top legends that was going on in the sky.

The queen's unhurried tone and steady attitude tranquilized the trembling nobles. All their negative feelings began to disperse.

At this moment, John walked out of a secret room within the palace with Joel, Alisa, and Grand Duke of Orvarit. He carried a thick-barreled gun that emitted silver metal colors on his back. It was a Gauss Rifle that Lucien created for him in person. Every shot equaled an attack of a radiant knight.

"Go to the Atomic Universe," Natasha said to her father, Joel, and John, not bothering that many other nobles were around. They would be absolutely safe over there.

John nodded and walked into the portal on Natasha's left side with Grand Duke of Orvarit who looked rather complicated.

Looking at that, the nobles were suddenly enlivened and filled with hope and expectations. If they could also enter the Atomic Universe, wouldn't they be able to avoid the havoc outside and the unpredictable attacks?

"Your Majesty, could you also allow us to enter the Atomic Universe? We'll only add to your trouble in your place," an earl said first.

"Yes! We'll be safe if we hide in the Atomic Universe!"

"Your Majesty, we are all your loyal subjects. Please protect us!"

All the nobles echoed excitedly. For a moment, the idea seemed to be supported by everyone.

Natasha stepped forward and stopped before the portal. She looked around at the nobles and said solemnly, "You can hide here. There's no need to go to the Atomic Universe."

"Why? Your Majesty, are we not your subjects?"

"Your Majesty, are you going to renounce the contract between the sovereign and the nobles and stop protecting us?"

"You don't deserve to be the queen!"

Suspensions and criticisms came out of the nobles. The near-death experience just now had filled them with fear, which burst out after Natasha turned them down.

"My father, Aunt Camil, and Lucien's Uncle Joel and Aunt Alisa have been under the protection of Lucien and me. I'm very certain that they are not corrupted or possessed, but I'm not very sure about you. So, for the safety of the Atomic Universe..." Natasha said as calmly as if she were ordering the food for tonight. "Whoever approaches the portal will die."

"Don't bother her. Let's go over and enter the Atomic Universe. She dare not kill us unless she doesn't want to be the queen anymore!" a noble shouted in the crowd and was cheered by everyone. All the nobles swarmed toward the portal.

A cold and indifferent sword flashed, and the few nobles in the lead watched each other's upper half bodies leaving their lower half bodies. Their blood sprang and sprayed on the people behind them.

"She... She really dares to kill us..." The nobles were stunned, not having the courage to move further.

Natasha then said indifferently, "As I said, whoever approaches the portal will die."

She pointed the Sword of Truth at the ground, and the nobles backed off subconsciously.

Right then, an old voice echoed in the crowd, "When did you discover me?"

The nobles dispersed in fear, revealing the old man who had been hiding at the center since nobody knew when. His face changed between an earl that everybody was familiar with and an old man. The only thing they had in common was that their eyes were all closed.

"Atlant, it's you..." Natasha raised the Sword of Truth and chuckled. "There were indeed some flaws. For example, the nobles were too moody, and the radiant knight somehow drove them to this place just now. However, it mattered little to me, because even without your manipulation, I would've killed anyone who approached the portal.

"At a moment like this, the safety of the Atomic Universe must be guaranteed. After all, all of Lucien's resurrection methods are kept in Babel. I cannot be careless about that."

Suddenly, the portal glittered, and John walked out.

"Why are you here?" Natasha asked in confusion.

John said solemnly, "I am your knight and the captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights. At such a moment, I have to stay with my teammates and protect the peace of Holm.”

Natasha was silent for a moment. Then, she nodded her head. “Go now.”

Atlant quietly watched John leave and the nobles run out of the palace before he said with a bitter smile, “A real knight... I wanted to be someone like him, but I didn’t know until today that you people would be controlled by Viken after turning into the status of primeval devils.

“Although you have the Sword of Truth and the Shield of Truth, you cannot stop me from destroying all of Lucien’s resurrection facilities, because I am an authentic level-three legend now.”

After Lucien left, the portal from the Allyn magic tower to the Atomic Universe had been half-closed. Nobody could enter without the permission of the people inside. Therefore, the “gate” in the Nekso Palace became Atlant’s target.

Natasha listened quietly before she suddenly slashed backward.

The silver light flashed, and the portal dimmed before it collapsed in a crack in the end.

Looking at Atlant’s shock and disbelief, Natasha put on a smile of satisfaction that was as beautiful as a rising sun.

“Now, I cannot go in either.”

Chapter 815: Get the Situation Under Control

Chapter 815: Get the Situation Under Control

In the City in the Sky...

A senior-rank sorcerer shot out Dissociation crazily, making the common and middle-rank sorcerers as grim as the dead. Desperation was spreading out.

Suddenly, a mist fell and imprisoned the senior-rank sorcerer, covering and dissolving “Dissociation”. Then, a deep and dark ray pierced out of the mist and hit the senior-rank sorcerer.

Immediately, his magic effects were gone, and he could no longer cast any spell. Even though he was despising other people in arrogance, he was briefly stunned. After all, magic was already his instinct!

That was the reaction that most sorcerers had after they were hit by Antimagic Ray.

At this moment, spells came from all directions, completely taming the senior-rank sorcerer in neat cooperation.

The order that Brook gave the sorcerers of the Punishment Department was that they should try to control and seal the targets if their safety could be guaranteed, but if they felt it was dangerous based on their abundant battle experience, they could execute the targets without fearing investigations or penalties in the future.

It was not until the crazy sorcerer up ahead was shackled that the middle-rank and low-rank sorcerers who were desperate and anguished finally woke up from the nightmare. They saw people walking out of the white mist. The badge of black staff on the strangers’ chests suggested that they worked for the Punishment Department. The young man leading them smiled at the sorcerers who hadn’t entirely recovered from their shock yet and said, “Don’t worry. Few people are corrupted, and we have basically cleared them. However, you'd better not run about on the street, in case my subordinates accidentally hurt you."

Hearing the reliable, comforting voice, the middle-rank and low-rank sorcerers around were finally relieved. They looked ahead, only to discover that the fire in the burning magic tower had been extinguished. Although smoke was still popping up, the explosions and cries were dying down.

After the young man left, a low-rank sorcerer finally confirmed with other people. "Is he Mr. Jurisian?"

"Yes, that's him. It seems that the corrupted have indeed been curbed!" The middle-rank sorcerer next to him heaved a long sigh.

Jurisian was a weirdo among sorcerers for choosing to join the Affair Committee instead of the Arcana Review Board after he won the highest honors including the Silver Moon Medal. However, it was for the same reason that he was one of the most powerful and influential persons in the Affair Committee. His intelligence couldn't have been false.

The low-rank sorcerer who asked at the beginning was obviously relieved. "That's only natural. Except for the legends who are watching over the major branches, all the legends have returned. The corrupted cannot cause much harm."

He did not believe that legendary sorcerers could be affected.

The middle-rank sorcerer who answered his question nodded, but then he remembered something and pointed at the sky with a bitter smile. "What we have here is just some minor trouble. The real danger is out there.

"If Mr. President cannot stop Viken, we..."

For a moment, the atmosphere, which had been getting better, became quiet and depressing again. All the sorcerers on the spot raised their heads and looked at the battle in the sky, where the fate of the whole world would be decided, but there was nothing they could do about it.

It was cruel yet undeniable that several people could decide the future of the majority. The differences in capabilities were too obvious. This was not arcana, where a certain genius might be able to “defeat” a legend because of certain inspirations. Even someone as talented as Mr. Evans spent more than ten years practicing before he finally caught up to the few guys in the sky.

As the chaos was settled, more and more sorcerers in the City in the Sky paid attention to the battle in the sky. Heidi, Annick, Samantha, Felipe, Ataman... There was no exception.

Only Oliver, Hand of Annihilation, and Bergner, the Prophet, were teleporting themselves to the thirty-fourth floor of the Allyn magic tower, ready to assist Brook to deal with the devilized Melmax.

It was not because they did not trust Brook. Even if he were to duel with Melmax’s original self, Brook wouldn’t be on the losing side. Right now, Melmax arrived as a projection in a body, and he could only briefly carry out the top legendary capabilities, so it wouldn’t be too hard for Brook to defeat him with the help of Allyn’s defense.

The only thing that was tricky was that the battle had to be finished quickly or transferred to a demiplane, in case great losses were caused to Allyn. Although the city was well-defended, it might not be able to take an explosion that burst out from within.

.....

Inside the third generic school...

Shivering, Ali and his classmates hid in the classroom while they watched a devil, whose body had turned enormous, chasing after the teachers and janitors who were organized to defend the school. Some of them were sorcerers or magic apprentices, some were retired soldiers, and some were knight teachers who taught fighting and knight’s code of conduct. Although they were not of high levels, they were still able to resist the enemy for a while.

Looking at the twisted face and the burning eyes on the devil, Ali felt fear from the bottom of his heart. What's going on? How is this happening?

Terrorized, he couldn't have admired the teachers who protected them with magic or blood power more. That was the "essential ability" after all the fancy exteriors were gone, like the knowledge he had picked up.

Scary roars echoed in the school building nonstop, building up the tension in the atmosphere. The whole classroom was like a warehouse full of alchemical dynamites that were waiting for a tiny spark to blow up.

Bang!

A huge noise of collision came over. Stunned, Ali saw that the devil, which was getting stronger and stronger and suppressing his teachers, fell on the ground and cramped before it split apart.

"What attack was that?"

"Have the knights come to our aid?"

In their exclamations, Ali saw that a team of fully-armored knights came from far away on an aircraft, and the golden-haired man standing in the lead of the massive aircraft was holding a thick rifle in his hand. Obvious electric arcs were still dancing out of the barrel.

"Dear students, I am John Wesley, captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights. There's no need to panic. The situation is already under control. We will take over the defense in this area and clear the rest who are corrupted. Please don't panic and don't run amok."

John's voice was shivering as he spoke. It could not be helped. In order to stabilize the situation and everybody's mind to stop the negative feelings from gathering, he made use of the senior-rank electromagnetic gun just now. As a result, he could barely control his body at this moment.

However, even his shivering voice sounded like "hymn" for Ali and the other students. Many of them were crying; their fear and hate flowing out with their tears.

Ali collapsed against the wall. It was too dangerous just now. A dead body was lying in his classroom! If it were a music class or one on noble etiquette today, instead of a magic-related class where the teacher killed the corrupted student as soon as possible, there might have been dire consequences.

Noble etiquette, noble... He suddenly remembered Jane and grew nervous. How was the Mills School? Was Jane alright?

The more he thought, the more worried he was. Although he knew that the Mills School was much better defended than his school, he still could not stop himself from worrying.

It's dangerous to run out. It's dangerous on the street... Hesitating and struggling, Ali suddenly stood up and was about to run to the Mills School.

Suddenly, a shadow jumped before him and stopped him with a sword. "Where are you going?"

Obviously, he had been treated as a corrupted.

Looking at the knight before him, Ali decided to confess the truth after hesitating for a moment. "Mr. Knight, I have a friend in the Mills School. I want to confirm her safety."

The knight frowned. "Those who were corrupted in the Mills School had been cleared out. Since none of the teachers were weak, no innocent people were hurt."

Ali almost collapsed again after hearing that, feeling fortunate after the disaster. He never believed that a kind girl like Jane would be corrupted anyway.

At this moment, John went into the office and turned on the loudspeaker.

"Dear friends, this is 'Arcana Voice'. I will broadcast to you the updates in Allyn, Rentato, and other places..." "Nightingale" Louise was given the important task of calming everybody down.

“... Mr. Raventi is watching over the Holm Royal Magic Tower, and Mr. Morris is going to the Nekso Palace to activate the defense circle and help the queen...”

“... The report of the Mills School is provided by Jane, an intern at our radio station. She would like to tell all her friends that she is safe and there is no need to worry about her. Also, she would like her friends to call XXXXXX...”

Ali was completely relaxed now. He turned his eyes at the sky and looked at the battle scene that was beyond his imagination while praying silently in his heart, Great God of Truth, Emperor of Arcana, and Atom Controller, please help us make things better...

Similar prayers and hope were everywhere in Rentato City.

.....

Inside the primeval hell...

The lost souls and the streaks of light in different colors joined into the bodies of Arrogance, Greed, and Hypocrisy, making them larger, taller, and more and more concrete.

“You are dead for sure!” Abhorrence grinned hideously at Lucien.

Lucien, who was considering what had happened, suddenly raised his head. His deep and bottomless eyes made the cranky devil shut its mouth.

Chapter 816: Confirmation

Chapter 816: Confirmation

Sensing that it could not be daunted by Lucien who hadn't even said anything yet, Hypocrisy raised its head and laughed. "Seven authentic top legends, twelve incarnations that are formed through the reverse summoning of the main material world, and countless more lost souls. Lucien Evans, there is no way that you can resist it. No top legend can resist them. Also, you have no escape in this place because your body is still connected to the Gate of Desire!"

Its words sounded half true and half false. There was no telling whether it was shaking Lucien's confidence or creating a desperate atmosphere, but since it was an external reflection of the mind, such communication did not delay their attack at all. Therefore, together with the laughter of Hypocrisy and the roars of Abhorrence, the transparent, illusionary souls, which were mixed with black, gold, or green negative feelings, lunged at Lucien from various directions.

In the meantime, the primeval devils like Arrogance and Greed also changed their forms, appearing as Fernando, Hathaway, Brook, Lucien, Danisos, and other top legends as they tried to replicate their abilities to attack Lucien. For the primeval devils that did not have real bodies, the top legends who were more like spell casters were more suitable for them to carry out their supernatural powers to affect the mind.

As a result, Lucien was faced with Fernando's "Furious Storm", Hathaway's "Luxury Cracking", Brook's "Electromagnetic Decline", Danisos' breath of time, Harex's "Death Vortex", and his own "Positron Cannon". Also, such attacks were not simple illusions but carried actual damage!

.....

In the high sky, inside the marvelous realm that the whole world could see.

When Viken absorbed negative feelings and the corrupt souls crazily, making the Desperate World projected by the primeval hell darker and more obvious, Vicente's body suddenly trembled at the edge, and the dim fire in his eye sockets was blackened. However, his face was dead and his muscles had withered a long time ago, making it impossible for him to show any additional expression.

Hehe. Vicente snorted. His body burst out into a cluster of grayness that was full of the scent of death. It revolved in the sky nonstop and opened a black gate that seemed to be made of pure death.

Hu!

The gate let out a long and distant sigh because it was opened all of a sudden. A black body taller than all giants walked out like a mountain.

Enveloped in the black air, the body seemed to be wearing a misty coat. Through the black air, it could be vaguely seen that it was made of dragons, humans, elves, dwarfs, werewolves, demons, devils, and other intelligent creatures. It emitted enormous and astounding pressure.

The moment it appeared, the intelligent lives in the black air opened their eyes at the same time. As a result, black, transparent shadows appeared in the void, only to be swallowed by the intelligent lives that constituted the Original Body, before they screamed and became part of it. The intense pain and abhorrence were dwarfed by the everlasting death.

Fernando, Hathaway, the elven queen, and the other top legends cleared the ambush of the primeval devils in their own ways. Douglas, the Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell were having a relatively easy time because the dark shadows could not approach them at all.

At this moment, Vicente's "Original Body" suddenly opened its eyes, and two dim red flames bounced out. Wherever his eyes reached, everything became a dead and cold void. Even the Corrupt Mind and the Desperate World around Viken were gradually stiffened into eternal peace. Only the Blessed Realm was barely affected.

It was the most special ability of the Original Body, known as “Original Stare” or “Stare of the Death”. It was similar to Apsis’ Life Removal but was more powerful, and it was almost on par with the Lord of Hell’s Life Deprivation.

Under the “Stare of the Death”, one of the defense layers around Viken was immediately dissolved. Only the Blessed Realm was left there standing.

It did not mean that Vicente was as strong as demigods. It was only because the legendary product of necromancy plus alchemy was unique and suppressed the corrupt phantoms that did not have real entities.

That was also the specialty of magic. By choosing the right magic, it would be possible to resist an enemy that was much more formidable than oneself.

Seeing what the Original Body had achieved, the Lord of Hell seized the opportunity. He did not say anything but simply raised his gold trident as he commanded the ocean to attack the Blessed Realm.

“Passage of the Styx!”

Maltimus did not discuss with Alterna and Demartes because he believed that they would definitely see and grasp the opportunity!

The blue water immediately turned gray. Floating in it were the translucent, dull souls. It flowed from the void and into the void, as if it had penetrated the whole process from life to death.

It was the mysterious Styx, the center of hell and abyss! Naturally, the attack was also one of the Lord of Hell’s most powerful attacks.

At this moment, Douglas seemed to sense that the origin and destiny of the Styx was the Furnace of Souls that he was already very familiar with.

The gray Styx surged to the front of the Blessed Realm without a sound. In the blink of an eye, the ivory, holy light of the Blessed Realm became gray and dim. The exuberant vitality began to fade and collapse.

After the Styx broke the Blessed Realm and reached Viken, and when Viken hadn't reestablished defense with the power of the sacred paradise and the primeval hell, the high moon that observed everything fell abruptly toward Viken, leaving a chilling tail behind. Around its course, a black fire of the void was vaguely burning.

Pa!

A clear and somewhat inaudible crack echoed, which deprived Viken of the feeling that he was in a different world. He was no longer a unique existence that nobody could touch or attack!

After the marvelous domain was broken, the silver moon rose rapidly while a boundless cosmos appeared above Viken's head. The clear and brilliant stars in it denoted everyone's fate.

It was the starry star of destiny!

In the illusionary starry sky of destiny, the star that represented Viken suddenly glowed and fell like a meteorite, hitting Viken brutally.

It was exactly Douglas' "Fateful Meteor"!

After he became a demigod and his Host Star of Destiny was connected to the starry sky of destiny, the legendary spell went through drastic changes and was a real demigod-level attack now!

"Positron Cannon!"

"Grandeur Obliteration!"

"Nature's Punishment!"

...

When the "Fateful Meteor" landed, Hathaway, Fernando, the elven queen, and the other legendary experts also took the opportunity to attack, swearing to disrupt Viken's breakthrough.

Hardly had the brilliance spread out when the explosions, which were loud enough to kill everyone, burst out.

BOOM!

Dazzling brightness raged out, and the energy storm was sweeping, eclipsing the dark evil world and the hallowed paradise.

The Lord of Hell thought to himself, After this attack, Viken must be heavily wounded and disrupted from the breakthrough even if he is not dead... The guy had been smashed by a demigod's "Fateful Meteor", "Positron Cannon", and many other supernatural powers without even the slightest protection. Even he would've been heavily wounded. Even though his life wouldn't be in danger, he certainly wouldn't be able to finish what he was doing.

Due to the energy storm, Douglas and Fernando could not see clearly the situation inside, but they had guessed a thing or two based on their experience.

In the City in the Sky, except for Brook and those involved in the battle, all the sorcerers who were looking at the sky felt intense hope and joy. Had the crisis been resolved? Was Viken stopped before he became a true god?

A disaster seemed over now!

In the third generic school of Rentato...

Ali listened to the broadcast and looked at the sky. Although the scene was changing too fast for them to see clearly, the final picture that had been frozen gave them expectations and delight.

Was the nightmare over?

It had to be. Now that three demigods and more top legends had joined their hands, they could even kill a true god!

The energy storm gradually died down, and the scene at the center was revealed. The incarnation of the primeval hell that was full of negative feelings and the most sacred Mountain Paradise was still there, but Viken, who was supposed to be in between them, was nowhere to be seen.

"Is he dead?"

“Can he only return from the river of fate a very long time later?”

The attackers were both delighted and suspicious. Suddenly, Douglas saw a black spot there.

Right when he was about to cast another Fateful Meteor, the black spot expanded and wriggled, turning into Viken again, and the Desperate World that was full of faces of intelligent creatures and the sacred kingdom where angels and holy spirits sang nonstop slowly descended, gradually melting into his body!

“Hahaha.” Darkness and light replaced each other incessantly in Viken’s eyes as he burst into laughter. “If I did not have any confidence, why would I have decided to make the advancement in the main material world instead of a secret alternate dimension?”

“Thanks to your help, I have broken the most difficult barrier. After I melt Mountain Paradise and the primeval hell, you will receive the audience of a true god!”

At this moment, he was placed in a marvelous state where he could not be attacked again. Also, it seemed even more perfect and unbreakable than just now!

Even such attacks did not kill him? The demigods and top legends calmed down after the slight shock and continued their attacks. For them, they would never give up until the last moment.

The sorcerers and civilians in Allyn and Rentato, on the other hand, did not have such great self-control. After Viken’s crazy announcement, their faces were grim and full of desperation.

If the super-luxury lineup of three demigods and multiple top legends failed to stop Viken at the beginning, what could possibly stop Viken right now?

Done. Everything was done.

They stared at the sky with their faces stiff and dull, as if they had been caught in an eternal nightmare of desperation.

.....

Inside the primeval hell and faced with the attacks of Arrogance, Lucien suddenly sighed and put on his symbolic smile before he said in a low voice, "I'm here to confirm something, and your presence helped me to confirm it. Therefore..."

Before he finished his sentence, he stepped forward. Although his body did not turn taller or bigger, his aura became extremely horrifying all of a sudden. The phantoms that lunged at him backed off quickly in screams, and the seven primeval devils that were ready to cast "spells" could barely stand steadily on their feet.

What's going on?

What has he confirmed?

What's he trying to do?

The moment the questions popped up in the minds of the primeval devils, Lucien's body dispersed and became illusionary, and his face was solemn and grave!

A vast, fascinating cosmos slowly appeared in hell.

Chapter 817: Back Against Back

Chapter 817: Back Against Back

The boundless cosmos in hell was profound and dark, with brilliant and dreamy stars in it. It looked like the starry sky of destiny, but there were some indescribable differences between them.

The cosmos slowly surfaced in every corner of hell, but it did not collide with the Death Swamp, the Silent Hell, the Burning Metropolis, or the Endless Canyon, and the devils were not affected at all. It looked like a supermassive hologram.

A heavy, thick, boundless vibe that dwarfed everything appeared with the cosmos, giving everybody the feeling that they were looking at the stars at night. Even the most evil and brutal devils felt that their minds were empty and the universe was too magnificent for them. Their busy lives were so hilarious, and the only thing worth respecting and embracing was the vast cosmos.

For a moment, the schemes, betrayals, slaughters, fire, and blood that filled the whole hell stagnated, replaced by quietness. The primeval hell that was made of the streaks of lights in different colors seemed to have been caught in a slowed time and space, in which pain, hate, and all the other negative feelings were much thinner.

The seven primeval devils stayed where they were and stared at Lucien in a daze. Their minds were too overwhelmed for them to launch an attack or to stop him from taking the unusual action.

Lucien, on the other hand, did not consider the attacks of the seven primeval devils at all because he was now in a marvelous state similar to that of Viken in the main material world. He could both affect this world and remain untouchable and unattackable because he was in a different time and space.

His eyes half closed, Lucien suddenly opened his arms, making the gesture that he was about to embrace the cosmos. At this moment, a shadow suddenly crawled out of the back of his pure soul.

The moment the shadow crawled out, Lucien's face had minor changes. It kept the original handsomeness but emitted a strange ordinariness. He became someone that the primeval devils wouldn't mistake for Lucien based on both the air and other features!

Lucien, however, did not find it strange at all, because it was still himself. It was him from his previous life, Xiaofeng!

It was Xiaofeng, whose face was entangled with Lucien's on the Furnace of Souls!

The shadow that crawled out of Lucien's back just now stuck its back against his back. Getting more and more clear, it turned out to be another Lucien with distinctive features and qualities that the primeval devils couldn't have failed to recognize. However, this Lucien did not have a gentle and stubborn vibe.

"What is this?"

"Why has Lucien been divided into two parts?"

The primeval devils stared at that in confusion, having no idea what was going on at all.

Suddenly, a void split in the gap, and an enormous and terrifying attraction force came over, dragging the whole primeval hell into the world that was both dark and bright.

"Viken is summoning the primeval hell and trying to melt us!" Arrogance roared in shock and fury. Changes and more dreadful things were happening on two sides at the same time. Which side should they focus their attention on?

The primeval hell and the primeval devils were two sides of the same coin in the first place. If the primeval hell was swallowed and melted, there would be no more primeval devils. Or rather, a stronger primeval devil would show up, but it would only be one side of Viken!

While the primeval hell moved toward the world which was both evil and sacred slowly but surely, Lucien showed absolutely no reaction and remained the same. The Lucien on his back opened his arms and made exactly the same gesture.

Pa!

The moment Lucien's two souls leaned against each other with their hands open, Lucien's body outside of the Gate of Desire collapsed and spread out into the world of the mind and the soul, crawling into both Luciens.

Wu!

In the soundless roar, the souls of the two Luciens were vaguely concrete, and their backs were connected to each other due to a certain special relationship.

Boom!

As a real explosion burst out, Lucien's soul that had the features of Xiaofeng suddenly opened its eyes. The reflection of the vast universe that showed up everywhere in hell was immediately zoomed in. It was no longer a river of brilliant stars, and an enormous fireball, as well as many planets of different sizes, could be seen clearly. Among them, a blue planet was particularly beautiful!

Boom!

The soul that carried the features of Lucien opened its eyes at the same time. However, what his arms were embracing was the colorful cosmos of elements. Then, the stars from the Atomic Universe spread out and got more and more real. Also, the perspective rose higher and higher, revealing a planet that was shrouded in mist.

Then, the views of two different universes constricted quickly. They were clearly separated from each other, with the two Luciens at the center as the boundary!

Crack! Crack! Crack! Crack!

The scene was barely completed when the whole primeval hell collapsed and let out the noises, which suggested that it was on the brink of destruction, as if it could not shoulder the invisible pressure anymore.

Arrogance, Hypocrisy, and the other primeval devils looked at each other in bewilderment and realized the same thing.

“Lucien Evans is attempting to break into the demigod level!”

But his way was different from that of Thanos, Viken, or Douglas!

Was it because their cognitive worlds were different?

.....

In the City in the Sky and Rentato, most sorcerers and civilians looked at the sky in desperation. Even the joint attack of three demigods and multiple top legends did not stop Viken's advancement. Who could possibly stop him now?

Under normal circumstances, some sorcerers and ordinary people would've told themselves that Viken's advancement was not the end of the world. Chances were that Viken would become benevolent after he turned into a true god. However, the madness of the corrupted and the blood and chaos they created were still fresh. Nobody expected that Viken, who was known as King of Calamities, would suddenly change his personality.

Seeing that Viken was gradually melting the primeval hell and Mountain Paradise, and seeing that the attacks of Douglas, the Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell achieved no result except for breaking Viken's defense and blowing him out of the intangible marvelous statue, the sorcerers, nobles, and civilians got more and more desperate.

Under the pressure of doom, many experts tried to fly into the marvelous domain, ready to offer their strength. It was better to be killed in a battle than to be killed in waiting!

However, Viken's melting was not as slow as it seemed. Before they approached, the melting had already approached the end.

Inside the Atom Institution, Heidi said with a self-mocking smile, “I wonder if the curse worked at all...”

Because of the defense of Allyn, it was impossible for the sorcerers to attack.

Annick comforted her by saying, “It doesn’t mean that the breakthrough is successful. At the very least, Viken’s form of existence has no substantial changes yet.”

Of course, that was only for now.

In the third generic school, although none of the students could understand such a sophisticated battle, the fact that Viken remained undestroyed and was even laughing out loud informed them of the situation. Their hearts were heavier and heavier.

Suddenly, Ali narrowed his eyes and blurted out, “There seems to be a cosmos in the primeval hell!”

“Primeval hell” was a term that they just picked up from the broadcast.

There’s a cosmos in the primeval hell? The other students all looked over, finding it hard to believe Ali’s words.

However, their eyes told them that, in the primeval hell that was gradually being pulled into the main material world, there was indeed one, no, two separated cosmoses. One of them had a gigantic fireball and a blue planet, and the other was the same as what Ali saw in the cosmic observatory, albeit with an additional planet that was enshrouded in a fog!

“Is this the planet that we are in?” Douglas, as a demigod of the school of astrology, felt that the planet enshrouded in the fog was so familiar, and that the other cosmos was so strange!

Suddenly, his eyes were frozen. “That is the real cosmos!”

...

“Mr. Evans!”

“It’s Mr. Evans that is at the center of the cosmoses! Two Mr. Evanses!”

Exclamations echoed near Ali in Rentato, Allyn, and every place that could see the anomaly in the sky. Suspicion and shock were flowing everywhere.

“It’s really our teacher!” Heidi was immediately cheered up.

Although she did not quite understand why her teacher appeared in the primeval hell at such a critical moment, it was always a delight that something interrupted Viken’s breakthrough.

Sprint said in a low voice, “The melting seems to have been slowed!”

Before he finished his sentence, they saw that both Luciens leaned backward. Their backs gradually melted with each other, and an overlapping boundary appeared.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

Cracking sounds burst out in the primeval hell as it shook violently. All the negative feelings, lost souls, and primeval devils appeared to be dispersing.

Although the melting cosmoses did not have the dreamy and hazy sound and visual effects, the slow, determined, and soundless approach gave everyone a shock from the bottom of their heart!

“The melting has been slowed!”

“Mr. Evans slowed down Viken’s melting!”

“Is he trying to break into the demigod level?”

Exclamations of surprise, happiness, and gratitude burst out in Allyn, Rentato, and many other places. Intense hope had emerged out of desperation!

Heidi said excitedly, “If our teacher breaks into the demigod level successfully, the primeval hell that Viken intends to melt will probably be dissolved directly!”

“Haha. It’s really fortunate of us that our teacher is making the advancement in the primeval hell at such a moment!”

The depression and desperation were entirely gone. Other than the people who were still fighting, all the sorcerers, knights, and ordinary people looked at their sky nervously, praying for Mr. Evans’ successful breakthrough.

The Lord of Hell was stunned for a moment, before he laughed, “Viken, today is not your lucky day. Lucien is trying to make a breakthrough at such a time in such a place!”

Viken stopped laughing crazily and said as cold as ice, “It’s just a minor accident and will not change the final outcome.” He couldn’t have appeared more confident.

Maltimus smiled in mockery. “In any case, Lucien has delayed your advancement, which has given me time and an opportunity!”

Then, he tore off his left arm, and his real body that was hidden deep inside the hell broke its left arm too.

Without making a sound, the left arm exploded into a spring of blood, which then turned into an evil and chaotic “gate”.

Chapter 818: Screams

The “gate” was full of evil eyes that were yellow and white. They were dense and did not blink at all. Despite the blockage of the marvelous domain, the sorcerers, knights, and ordinary people who looked up from the ground felt that their minds were in chaos. They could barely control the madness of their souls and their surging desire for slaughter.

The left arm of Maltimus’ real body did not recover as quickly as before and remained missing, but the chaotic and bloody gate took shape rather slowly. Of course, it was only slow compared to how Viken melted the primeval hell earlier. It actually only took several seconds.

During the few seconds, the two reflections of the cosmoses surpassed the boundary slowly but surely. Their edges overlapped but did not affect each other. Even two asteroids that seemed to be colliding passed each other and flew away. They seemed next to each other, but at the same time, they seemed to be in two completely different worlds, not knowing each other’s existence at all!

As the edges of the two cosmoses overlapped, Lucien’s soul with the features of Xiafeng and the soul that was half Lucien leaned more and more into each other, starting to melt miraculously!

Just now, they were like two independent persons holding the cosmos before them with their backs against each other, but right now, they were like conjoined twins who shared the back!

There was no dazzling brilliance, violent noises, or other unimaginable phenomena. The two Luciens began to melt in a strange and unique way just now. The more they melted, the more obvious the feeling that they did not belong to this world was.

For some reason, the lost souls and primeval devils began to tremble in fear. Even though they no longer had concrete bodies and were entirely made of negative feelings, they couldn’t help but feel intimidated.

Gold, green, black, red, and all the other colors began to shiver. The lost souls and the primeval devils were dismembered, releasing the powerful attraction force that only negative feelings and primeval devils could perceive.

The elven queen was just pulling the Bow of Nature's Punishment when her body became blurry and a shadow was about to crawl out.

Aglaea had to stop and melt her body into the reflection of the elven tree behind her, restraining the shadow with its root.

On the thirty-fourth floor of the Allyn magic tower...

Although Brook was stronger than Melmax and had the help of Oliver and Bergner, he had to focus most of his attention on controlling the aftermath to prevent Allyn from being ruined. The three legendary sorcerers were engaged with Devil Melmax in such a fierce battle that Brook's library was razed to the ground.

Had it not been for the deep, dark magnetic field and the cage made of silver, terrifying electric snakes, the battle of top legends would've definitely destroyed the magic tower and half of Allyn.

However, even though the battle was difficult, Brook was not anxious, because he knew very well that Melmax's project could not last. The real key was still the battle of demigods and top legends in the sky.

Suddenly, Melmax froze, and shadows and negative light spurted out of his body into the sky. Due to the changes caused by Lucien, it was impossible for him to resist the attraction force now that he did not have a real body or his longsword.

Although Brook, Oliver, and Bergner had no idea what was happening in the sky, Melmax's changes were certainly no secrets for them. Seizing the opportunity, Brook's Kingdom of Electromagnetism constricted and confined Melmax, and Oliver and Bergner pushed him into the demiplane with their legendary spells.

Zi, Zi, Zi.

Melmax was shoved into the Kingdom of Electromagnetism. Brook was immediately relieved. He would be fearless in his demiplane. After all, the students and servants had already evacuated. Also, in his demiplane, he was as strong as a demigod.

“I’ll finish him. You go to control Allyn’s defense circle,” Brook said in the telepathic bond as he entered the Kingdom of Electromagnetism.

Although the control pivots on this floor had all been destroyed, there were other control pivots in Fernando, Hellen, and Hathaway’s libraries on the thirty-third floor.

Under the help of Prospell, Oliver entered Fernando’s library, which was unlocked, and controlled the defense of Allyn.

It was not until this moment that they had the time to observe the battle in the sky.

“Lucien is trying to break into the demigod level...” Slightly frowning, Oliver said, “However, it is entirely different from Mr. President’s. It’s not demiplane versus the cognitive world plus the starry star of destiny, but the real cosmos¹ versus the actual cosmos².”

The primeval devils might have neglected it, but Oliver, as a legendary sorcerer, keenly sensed the fundamental difference between the two breakthroughs. During Lucien’s advancement, his demiplane was merely a medium and not an important part.

Bergner asked in confusion, “Is it based on the observer effect? Is the feedback of the real world an observer effect?”

“Maybe...” Oliver hesitated. “In any case, if he can advance successfully, there will be no way for Viken to make the breakthrough.”

.....

In Rentato, in Nekso Palace.

A silver sword that carried hideous cracks of the void broke Atlant's defense and hit him, but he put on a weird smile and collapsed quickly like a broken mirror.

Another illusion? Natasha, who was holding her Sword of Truth, slightly changed her expression and blinked. Exactly at this moment, an ancient and distant sound echoed at the perfect timing.

“Visual Deprivation!”

Natasha's body was immediately bent as if she had been smashed by a hammer. Blood flowed out of her eyes, and she went through a lot of trouble to get back on her feet. However, her silver eyes lost their splendor. It seemed that she couldn't see anything anymore.

Having been transformed into the status of primeval devils, Atlant was truly mysterious and unpredictable. Since the battle began, Natasha had hit him seventeen times, but he was an illusion ten times, and some noble or knight outside died on behalf of him the other seven times!

Despite the help of Morris, Natasha could not tell whether or not the Atlant before her was real or fake. So, as she attacked with her full strength, she gradually lost her hearing, touch, smell, and vision.

Closing her eyes, Natasha sensed the environment with her willpower. Suddenly, she slashed out again; her sword flashing coldly and indifferently.

The cracking sound of the void echoed, and Atlant's body was hit by the light of the sword.

However, the body broke again like a mirror, not giving any sense of reality.

“Sense Deprivation!” Atlant's voice came from all directions, and everything became dim all of a sudden in Natasha's eyes. She seemed to be left alone standing where she was in the whole world.

Seeing that, Atlant's images appeared everywhere around her. He smiled and said, “I said that you cannot stop me. I'll ask for somebody inside the Allyn magic tower to turn on the portal in exchange for yourself.”

Faced with such a tough and strong legendary knight, Atlant could not deprive her of her senses and intuitions once and for all. He could only do it step by step.

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when his eyes were opened, and a silver sword glittered.

Crack.

All the images were broken, and a body made of twisted colorful light showed up, falling apart under the hideous illusionary gaps.

“How... How could you find me?” Atlant struggled to say, filled with disbelief. How could Natasha find him right now when she failed to with all her senses and intuitions?

Cling.

A unique-shaped necklace appeared in Natasha’s hands, which emitted the crisp sound of metal collisions.

Although Atlant did not recognize the item, he could tell that it could help Natasha resist multiple attacks that were based on illusions. However, just now...

“You...” His body was even closer to destruction.

As if she heard his question, Natasha’s lackluster eyes gradually recovered. She chuckled and replied, “It was on purpose.

“This is a legendary item that Lucien crafted with the materials in the treasury of Holm, but it cannot help me find you. I intentionally let you deprive me of my senses and intuitions because my eyes, ears, and intuitions would deceive me... Only by eliminating their interferences and sensing with the mind could I really ‘see’ this world and you who were hiding in the dark.

“Well, since a long time ago, I’ve been practicing in seclusion where it’s quiet and I can’t sense anything.”

She changed Lucien's words so that Atlant understood what had happened.

At this moment, the enormous attraction force from the primeval hell came over, and the negative feelings inside Atlant's body flew out. His eyes became clear again. He coughed and said in regrets, "Why... Why couldn't it happen sooner? In that case, I wouldn't have been manipulated by Viken."

Natasha stepped forward. Her war boot let out crisp sounds on the ground as she said solemnly, "Although I hate to speak to someone dying so bluntly, I have to say that instead of complaining that the changes in the primeval hell are too late, you should complain that you made a decision too early. You should've waited to choose your path until Mr. President became a demigod."

Atlant heaved a long sigh, and his body collapsed completely.

Under the Sword of Truth, there was absolutely no chance for him to be resurrected.

Natasha raised her head and looked at the changes in the high sky with her half-recovered vision. She said with a smile, "Why didn't you do it sooner? That way, I wouldn't have taken such a risk..."

She could've hidden in the Atomic Universe with the Grand Duke of Orvarit as it would be impossible for Atlant to break in. However, she felt obliged to stick with her subjects at such a moment.

.....

The foul and chaotic gate was opened in a loud noise, and a meatball with countless eyes and the limbs of countless species rolled out, spreading out the air of blood, slaughter, and craziness.

Exactly at this moment, the breakthrough of the two Luciens approached the end. Their bodies below the head had been completely melted, but their faces were still facing their respective cosmos.

The two Luciens suddenly put on a miserable expression. They leaned backward at the same time and began the final melting. The two cosmoses with a blue planet and a misty planet did not seem as independent from each other. A strange, cracking sound of rubbing came out!

BOOM!

The volcanoes inside the hell erupted at the same time. Every devil sensed that the void next to them was trembling and creaking, as if the world was about to fall apart, and from the places they could not see, another enormous cosmos was running over!

“No!”

The illusionary feeling made all the devils cry and scream from the bottom of their hearts. For a moment, the whole hell was filled with such noises. Even the few devil dukes were trembling, having no idea where their fear came from.

In Allyn and Rentato, Heidi, Annick, Ali, and the other people also heard the squeaking sound from the void next to them, as if something was crushing it from the other side, and it was on the verge of destruction under the enormous pressure.

What was going on?

Shock, panic, fear, delight, and all the other feelings burst out!

Some were scared, some trembled, some kneeled, and some cheered!

Chapter 819: Return

Suddenly, the light of the whole world was gone. Allyn, Rentato, hell, and abyss were all caught in the deepest and heaviest darkness. The weird squeaking noises had vanished too. Every sorcerer, every knight, every noble, every civilian, every demon, and every devil sensed unprecedented peace. They could even hear their own heartbeats or blood flows.

Dum! Dum! Dum! Dum!

Their hearts beat faster and faster and more and more intensely. Right when they could not stand the extreme peace and were about to shout, darkness suddenly faded, and brightness was back again!

Nothing seemed to have changed. In the high sky, the Will of Abyss, who had been summoned by Maltimus at a great price, smelled the air of hell, which he hated most, and the air of Maltimus, which he was the next thing he hated most. He abandoned his old nemesis and charged at Viken, and the other demigods and the top legends cooperated with him, “helping” him dissolve Viken’s defense.

In the primeval hell, it was already barely possible to distinguish the two Luciens, although their faces were still changing, as if they were seeking the most fundamental similarities.

In the cosmos that had an enormous fireball, the picture zoomed in, and the blue planet grew larger and larger. The picture of the cosmos with the misty planet also zoomed in.

As the two planets grew larger and larger, the devils and lost souls in the primeval hell burst out their final and loudest screams.

Bang!

In the crack that echoed at the bottom of every intelligent creature’s heart, the primeval hell fell apart!

The primeval devils and lost souls were reduced into negative feelings in different colors, loosening and ebbing.

At the same time, the two cosmoses and Luciens vanished!

“Where is our teacher...” Heidi was at a loss. Such a situation did not happen when Mr. President became a demigod.

Suddenly, her eyes froze because she saw a lot more people in the Atom Institution! There was also an enormous tunnel that was similar to the super large collider that her teacher designed!

The dreamy tunnel of the collider overlapped the many magic circles of the Atom Institution, but they did not affect each other at all, as if somebody had created an illusion here.

“This is...” Heidi and Annick forgot about the battle in the sky. They looked at the enormous tunnel in shock. Many people in white suits walked before them anxiously as if they were preparing an important experiment.

In shock, Heidi subconsciously extended her right hand, trying to touch a man.

Her fingers slowly reached the man’s face, but it penetrated through it as if it were made of air. The man showed no reaction either.

Katrina looked at that in shock. “Is this phenomenon caused by our teacher’s advancement?”

Taking a deep breath, Heidi looked at the street out of the window, only to discover that not only sorcerers and wagons but many iron monsters were crammed and moving forward slowly on the broad road before the Allyn magic tower!

Far away, many skyscrapers that looked like magic towers overlapped the original buildings. Thanks to their glass windows, they were like palaces made of gold under the sunlight.

In the high sky, a bird-like monster flew by quietly and looked down on the ground.

Everything was so real but so quiet. There was not the slightest sound or anything that could be touched!

Compared to the sorcerers who could still observe the environment, the nobles and civilians were completely lost. Their mouths were open and their eyes were hollowed as they stared at the additional world that was not the same as theirs but had certain weird similarities. They felt that they were in a dream!

“Is this a mirage...” somebody murmured subconsciously, but their eyes were frozen. It was obvious that they could not think anymore.

Gradually, the skyscrapers, the iron torrents, the tunnel, and the crowd on the street blurred.

Soon, they completely vanished, as if everything just now was really a dream!

“Is this the phenomenon caused by our teacher’s advancement...” Heidi repeated what Katrina said.

BOOM!

The explosion in the high sky woke them up, reminding them that there was still a battle that concerned their own fate over theirs. Therefore, they raised their heads and looked over again while wondering what happened just now and if Mr. Evans had become a demigod.

After Lucien and the two cosmoses disappeared, Viken seized the opportunity to swallow and absorb the broken primeval hell, not bothering that it would cause his imbalance, because he did not really have a choice. The primeval hell would be gone in a few more seconds!

Perhaps decades or hundreds of years later, the primeval hell would be gathered again, but it would be pointless for Viken.

This time, without Lucien’s blockage and the resistance of the primeval devils, Viken’s melting was very smooth, but at the same time, he was rejected by Mountain Paradise.

Thanks to the help of Douglas, the Silver Moon, the Lord of Hell, Fernando, and Vicente, the Will of Abyss broke the strange state that Viken was in and created explosions, slaughter, and blood, hoping to kill Viken who was focused on melting the primeval hell.

Viken's body became illusionary and more and more dim under the Will of Abyss' attacks.

At this moment, Viken suddenly chuckled mysteriously.

In his eyes, darkness and light replaced each other, and the remainder of the primeval hell and the still powerful Mountain Paradise swapped places. As a result, the Will of Abyss was placed in the range of Mountain Paradise.

The Will of Abyss was even angrier. For some reason, he suddenly roared and expanded. All his limbs were falling off, and the eyes were protruding out!

“Back off! He's going to self-explode!” Maltimus roared and retreated quickly.

He paid a great price to summon the Will of Abyss exactly to get an attacker who was not scared of death, but the Will of Abyss turned out to be even more hardworking than he expected. In order to perform the attack, he had chosen to self-explode!

Of course, Maltimus could easily tell that the guy was definitely befuddled just now.

Boom!

An explosion that was multiple times more powerful than all the attacks previously burst out. The sky was colored by the boundless brilliance of blood. The defense of Mountain Paradise was broken as angels perished. Only the seraphs managed to retreat to the Realm of Gates in time and survive the disaster.

Light and energy surged out, and the demigods including Douglas were pushed to the edge of the marvelous domain.

The sorcerers who observed the battle were surprised and delighted. The self-explosion of a demigod could certainly stop Viken, if it didn't kill him!

“Sometimes, the Will of Abyss can be quite lovely even though he is a wild card...” Many arcanists “thanked” the Will of Abyss in their hearts.

.....

Above the ninth level of hell, Lucien slowly appeared from the void, turning from the status of dispersion to collapse. He was still wearing the black double-breasted suit, the top hat, the bow-tie, and the monocle, and he was still holding the staff. However, he had an additional feeling that he did not belong to this world. It was exactly the transcendental, changing, and intangible feeling of demigods!

“What I saw in the end... It’s exactly like what I suspected...” Lucien woke up from the uncanny state.

.....

The bloodiness and the energy storm were gone, and the center of the marvelous domain was blank, as if it had been wiped off by an eraser.

“Has Viken died with the Will of Abyss?” Aglaea asked delightedly.

Although Viken wouldn’t really perish, he wouldn’t return from the river of fate until millions of years later, and his fatal threat, Mountain Paradise, was already gone.

The Silver Moon was still in the sky, and Maltimus looked at the center solemnly and confusedly. After a brief daze, Douglas shouted, “Keep attacking! The domain is not gone! Viken is not dead yet!”

The marvelous domain appeared because of Viken’s advancement. Its existence suggested that Viken was not dead, and his attempt was not entirely disrupted yet!

Hardly had Douglas given a warning when an invisible window blew from the marvelous domain and water secreted from the void, giving the feeling of both light and darkness. It was completely in violation of common sense!

The water gathered into a tide and surged at the center, drowning the demigods and the top legends.

At the center, an illusionary heart that was both dark and bright showed up and beat nonstop. In the left atrium was the dark, evil, and corrupt Desperate World, and in the right atrium was the sacred, bright, and vast Mountain Paradise.

“We’re close to success, but so is Viken. As long as we destroy this ‘heart’ and prevent it from absorbing the water, we will really stop him!” Douglas was ready to cast an “Eternal Blaze”.

However, he found that he was unable to cast any spell in the tide that was both dark and bright.

Similarly, the Lord of Hell and the Silver Moon could not make use of their supernatural powers either.

Thinking for a moment, Douglas dispersed into a world with mountains, lakes, forests, and grasslands. It was exactly his demigod image.

This world tied the tide nearby, slowing it down. Viken’s “heart” beat more slowly too.

Seeing that, the Lord of Hell also dispersed his body, presenting the view of the hell and dragging the tide around.

A cold and dreamy silver moon fell, freezing the tide, and the shadow of the elven tree showed up, extending its roots to grab the water.

The projections of the Thunder Hell, the Element Paradise, and the Resting Place came too, but the force of boundary was much smaller than that of demigods.

Under their joint attacks, the tide almost stagnated. Viken and his enemies were in an impasse, but he was still absorbing the water one drop after another.

Looking at that, the legendary experts down below could not hold it anymore. Natasha was the first to flash to the sky and slash Viken’s heart with the Sword of Truth.

The aura of the silver sword broke the sky and entered the marvelous domain, but it soon disappeared.

Here, without the power of top legendary, one could not even raise ripples!

The attacks of the other legendary experts were the same. The sorcerers, nobles, and civilians down below couldn't be more anxious.

Damn it. A few more top legends would be able to turn the balance!

Damn it. Why are all the top legends except Mr. Brook and the devil dukes who cannot come to the main material world all up there?

They almost couldn't stop themselves from joining the battle, but the effort of Natasha and the other legendary experts let them drop the idea.

.....

After Lucien recovered from the uncanny state, he jumped into his own Atomic Universe without any delay. Then, instead of entering Babel, he teleported himself to the thirty-third floor of the Allyn magic tower.

"Turn off the blockage," Lucien said in a low voice.

Oliver and Bergner were looking at the sky anxiously. Hearing Lucien's calm and steady voice, they were surprised and relieved. Turning off the blockage in the city defense, they allowed Lucien to go to the sky and said in a hurry, "It's great that you're back!"

The sorcerers who looked at the sky so nervously that their hearts almost stopped beating suddenly discovered that the vague mist before them was disappearing, and a person appeared at the edge.

The familiar black hair, the handsome face, and the dreamy ring... They all held their breath.

“Master!”

“Mr. Evans!”

Exclamations followed. The sorcerers’ anxieties were immediately more or less eased. The man who had always created miracles was back!

Suddenly, a sorcerer bowed in confidence and gratitude.

“Your Excellency, it’s great that you’re back!”

Influenced by him, more and more sorcerers paid respect to him.

“Your Excellency, it’s great that you’re back!”

In their greetings, the blockage was completely gone. Lucien nodded at them and blinked to the high sky.

Chapter 820: The Boundary Between God and Men (2 in 1)

Chapter 820: The Boundary Between God and Men (2 in 1)

In a half-empty marvelous domain, Viken's heart that was both bright and dark beat nonstop, but it could only struggle to absorb the sap from the boundary of the demigods and top legends, including Douglas, the Silver Moon, the Lord of Hell, and the elven queen.

At this moment, the change in the blockage of Allyn was reflected in his mind that seemed to be everywhere.

There couldn't be a better opportunity! He wouldn't stand a chance after Lucien joined the battle!

A dark and illusionary vein suddenly extended from Viken's heart, which passed through the tide made of the water as if there were no resistance and pierced into Aglaea, the elven queen.

Aglaea did not pay much attention to it. With the protection of the elven tree, Viken's attempt that only carried one percent of his power could not penetrate through nature at all.

However, at this moment, a shadow mixed with strong hate and pain suddenly emerged out of her body, which stretched out beyond her control and grabbed that "vein"!

No!

Aglaea exclaimed in her heart when she realized that the "container" with which she completed the status transformation had gone out of control. As her primeval-devil half went out of control, she could not control herself anymore!

Did Viken hold such a powerful control over all primeval devils?

At this moment, she felt that the Viken before her was so lofty and sacred that she only wanted to worship him!

In the meantime, quite a few black veins extended out of Viken's heart and penetrated into the bodies of top legends including Belkovsky, crazily absorbing their primeval-devil halves. Only Fernando, Hathaway, and a few other exceptions managed to avoid it.

For a moment, negative feelings and pieces of black shadows flowed into Viken's heart along the veins. Douglas, the Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell intended to assist them, but they were mired in the tide and couldn't do anything except to watch it happen.

The way to become a demigod that Viken released before had such severe deficiencies!

It was the complete way to become a demigod without any traps, and its deficiencies and flaws were inevitable even for Viken himself. That was probably why other people believed him. However, at this moment, he was the most powerful primeval devil, and that was why he was fearless. He was reluctant to reveal the secret to the North Church, because Belkovsky, who had the accumulation of the power of faith and godhood, could very likely break into the demigod level soon and be on par with him. In such a case, he wouldn't be able to control other people like he could right now.

As his power rose, the tide was propelled and moved to Viken's heart, allowing him to absorb crazily. After every drop he absorbed, he would be more powerful than before. After only a few moments, the "heart" already lengthened and changed, vaguely showing Viken's appearance. At this moment, Lucien had just flashed to the sky and was about to go into the marvelous domain to stop Viken.

At this moment, Viken suddenly laughed crazily. "You should come too!"

Glittering veins stretched out of the heart and pierced into the body of Rudolf II who was also working hard at the edge.

Rudolf II watched Viken in shock as lofty, bright, and golden shadows flashed in his body nonstop with the obvious air of Mountain Paradise!

“Thanos, I did not expect you to revive and return, but you can only serve as my nutrition now!” Viken’s crazy voice echoed in the clouds. “You hid rather well, but I got suspicious during Mecantron’s resurrection! I did not point it out exactly because I was waiting for this moment!”

Thanos? The sorcerers down below were shocked.

Rudolf II could not say anything anymore. His body quickly dimmed, and his hair grew white. The golden shadows broke into pieces and flowed into Viken’s body through the veins.

Boom!

A soundless explosion and infinite brightness burst out. Lucien, who had just reached the marvelous domain and was about to attack, was forced to step back. In the perception of his spiritual power, Viken had vanished!

As the light gradually dispersed, the elven queen, Belkovsky, Rudolf II, and some other top legends could not maintain themselves anymore. They fell out of the marvelous domain to the ground. For a moment, they had even lost the basic ability to fly themselves.

Thankfully, there were plenty of other legendary experts outside. Some were elves, some were from the North Church, and some were from the Holy Heilz Empire. Those legendary experts prevented their leaders from becoming the first top legends who were killed in a crash, because their leaders were not legendary knights and their bodies could not stand the collision.

As the light faded, the center of the marvelous domain could be sensed by Lucien, Douglas, the Silver Moon, and other demigods. Viken’s hair had turned black, and his wrinkles were gone. His eyes were profound and dark, as if he were only in his thirties. However, his nose was slightly protruded, making him look rather scary.

Lucien, Douglas, and the other experts had all seen him in such a form before. It was the image of the King of Calamities on many magic classics.

Next to Viken, the holy angels and the evil devils entangled each other, worshiping and praising him. A realm where heaven and hell coexisted in peace was created.

The realm did not seem to be in this world. Although Lucien, Douglas, and the other demigods could see the view and hear the songs and praises, they could not perceive it or the air of Viken inside. It seemed that they were facing a hologram, and the angels and devils were far away in a different world.

Viken adapted himself to his new status and smiled. “Evans, what a shame. You’re one step late. Are you very surprised?”

He sounded gentle and calm, but it was as astounding as a clap of thunder when the legendary experts and the sorcerers, nobles, and civilians down below heard it. Their bodies were trembling in shock!

One step late?

Had he become a true god?

Done. Everything was done...

Desperation spread out, but people still had hope, because there were four demigods on their side. Even if they could not defeat Viken, they should be able to hold the situation and stop him from doing whatever he wanted.

Douglas, Alterna, and Maltimus, as demigods, were much more grave, because they found that they could not even tell how strong Viken was. Of course, they did not give up and simply kept attacking Viken.

The bright and dreamy moon, the corrupt and evil hell, and the flashing fateful meteor ran toward Viken at the same time.

Lucien, on the other hand, seemed too shocked to perform any attack. He merely nodded his head and said, “I’m quite surprised that your way of demigod has such severe deficiencies. That’s why I’m one step late.”

“This step is exactly the boundary between life and death. Now, I am already a true god. You cannot defeat me at all. No, it is impossible for you to even reach me!” Viken smiled kindly as the light of the silver moon, the outburst of the hell, and the fateful meteor passed through him as if he did not exist at all.

The songs and praises of angels and devils went on without being disrupted. The sorcerers were even more desperate. They could not even reach the enemy? Such a capability gap was almost the distance between heaven and abyss!

“Do you see? This is the true god. I can appear at any place at any time and attack anyone, but you cannot break the boundary between god and mortals. You cannot touch my real body at all.” Viken turned his head, as if he had finally got the status under control. “Even if I stand here and let you attack me, you cannot hit me at all. Your attacks will have no effects.”

True god. He's really a true god... The sorcerers, nobles, and civilians felt that their bodies turned soft as they looked at that. It seemed that their feet could no longer bear the weight of their bodies. That was truly a devastating opponent!

How is he going to deal with us?

Will he kill us or domesticate us into lambs?

Viken smiled and said, “I don’t need you anymore. You can disappear altogether...”

When Viken finished his declaration and was about to attack, the muscles on his face suddenly bounced, as if something down below was trying to crawl out.

Such protrusions were so dense that all his skin that was exposed to the air was occupied. Then, lumps were jumping even on the long robe that was transformed by his strength. They couldn’t be more hideous and disgusting.

“This is...” In shock, Viken tried harder to control himself. Douglas, the Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell did not know what was going on exactly, but they did know that it was a rarely-seen opportunity and immediately began their attacks.

However, their attacks still could not break the boundary between god and mortals!

Viken's body gradually became transparent, both bright and dark. The faces of intelligent creatures emerged from it.

The faces, some pious and some in pain, surged out nonstop and created the protrusions!

"Why is this happening? Why is this happening?" Viken roared crazily, shocked and infuriated. The legendary experts and the sorcerers down below were all astounded. What happened to the true god?

Viken gazed at Lucien, who had been quiet and did not attack, as he murmured to himself, "I have already turned into a strong observer and a true god by gathering everyone's power! Why is this still happening? Why is this still happening?"

Annick and Heidi became pale. Had the Congress' "observer hypothesis" raised such an invincible opponent for them?

Looking at Viken, Lucien repeated expressionlessly but with a higher voice, "The observer effect?"

Then, his lips curled, and he smiled somewhat mischievously.

"It was a trick!"

It was a trick? Annick and the other sorcerers opened their mouths, completely unable to close them.

It was a trick? Douglas, the Silver Moon, Fernando, and the rest of them couldn't help but look at Lucien.

It was a trick? Viken's body trembled so hard that the faces seemed to be tearing apart his skin and running out. His eyes were filled with confusion first, before infinite fury surged out.

Keeping the smile, Lucien said, "The truth of the world and the nature of magic is..."

His face suddenly became solemn, and the void behind him began to tremble, manifesting a boundless cosmos. The cosmos zoomed in, with a lower and lower perspective, allowing everybody to see the gigantic fireball and the blue planet that they had seen previously.

"This is the secret of immortality, the truth of the world, and the essence of magic!" Lucien announced solemnly.

Then, he extended his right hand and waved it in the air. A series of complicated equations were immediately displayed, as if there was a cubic stream screen around. Even Douglas felt that his head was dizzy as he read it.

"This is a math model that describes space." Instead of seizing the opportunity that Viken could not control himself to attack him, Lucien began to introduce the equations, making the arcanists of the Congress of Magic feel extremely weird. Why is Mr. Evans doing this in the middle of such an intense battle? Is he trying to blow up Viken's head when he saw that the boundary of god and men was unbreakable? If his plan works out, it will probably be an unprecedented and unrepeatable battle case...

"The previous theory of relativity describes a '3 + 1' dimension, and this is a model that describes more dimensions." Lucien did not give more details because the premises and hypotheses of the math model alone could've taken him half a day to illustrate, and few people on the battlefield could understand it.

In the sky, Lucien slowly and casually walked toward Viken who was trying to control himself with the boundary of god and men.

"In this model, we can assume that the universe we live in is a high-dimensional universe, whose projections in different three-dimensional spaces form many parallel universes," Lucien spoke lucidly as if he were teaching Heidi and the students a class. "Math tells us that in the three-dimensional state or four-dimensional state, parallel universes can barely meet each other. In that case, we may overlap, but we cannot touch or sense each other.

“However, just as two random straight lines on a piece of paper have much higher chances to intersect than to parallel, in lower dimensions, our microscopic particles and our fundamental world incessantly entangle with their counterparts in other universes. That is exactly superimposition and entanglement. However, as we, the real world, and the macroscopic universe kick in and the dimension increases to a higher level, the entanglement and intersection are gone, and only one state is fixed. That’s why the mysteries of the microscopic domain cannot be reflected in the macroscopic world!”

Lucien spoke very slowly as if he were teaching a class or engaged in small talk, but the sky suddenly turned dark, and a crazy wind blew out from the ground into the marvelous domain.

Douglas and the rest of them kept attacking Viken while they listened to Lucien’s words, which seemed to have really explained a lot of experiment phenomena as well as the transition between the microscopic domain and the macroscopic world.

The world next to Viken where angels and devils mixed and sang together was unaffected, allowing him to focus on self-control. He tried to get rid of the embarrassment as countless faces were conflicting and squeezing out of him. He did not entirely understand what Lucien was saying, but he did not stop glaring at Lucien’s eyes at all. Even if I have been tricked, I still have the strength of a true god. After I get control of myself, I will kill you!

Lucien’s voice grew louder and louder. “This model explains the transition between the microscopic domain and the macroscopic world, but we will easily discover that there is no place for magic and supernatural abilities.

“Therefore, in this model, we have to add two premises. The first is that the soul does exist. It is essentially a high-dimensional object that can spread out special electromagnetic waves...”

BOOM!

A thunder rumbled in the sky, but no lightning struck down, as if the world was stopping Lucien from talking.

“As high-dimensional objects, souls are projected into different parallel universes, except that the projections are different due to the different coordinates of the dimensions. For example, in some universes, the souls are so weak that they are barely detectable, and in some universes, souls can directly walk on the earth. The electromagnetic waves they emit are very powerful.”

BOOM!

Another thunder rumbled, and the sky was completely dark, as if a storm was coming. But still, no bolts of lightning occurred!

Lucien turned a deaf ear to the thunder and simply kept on walking to Viken. “Of course, if that is the only premise, the best we can expect is that certain creatures with powerful souls will have simple abilities such as setting fire, moving objects, or telecommunication. There will only be the most unattractive extraordinary powers, and there won’t be the weird yet brilliant magic, or any of the unusual animals.

“Therefore, my other premise is that, for reasons that we haven’t quite figured out, another universe has some sort of entanglement or intersection with our universe!”

Crack! Crack! Crack! Crack!

Bolts of lightning danced like clusters of silver snakes and illuminated the sky and the world. The angels and devils around Viken that praised and sang for him lowered their voices, and Viken appeared to be stunned again.

In the middle of the bursting bolts of lightning, a universe that was very similar to the one behind Lucien was displayed. The strange feeling that everybody sensed during Lucien’s advancement just now spread out again.

Lucien suddenly raised his voice and announced magnificently, “Therefore, the entanglement of the microscopic particles and the fundamental world is much more powerful than usual!

“Therefore, in the quantum eraser experiment and the delayed choice experiment, the state of entanglement is more difficult to destroy than expected!”

In the sky that was brimming with bolts of lightning, a torrential storm poured down. The whole world seemed to be drowned!

“The stronger coherence belongs to the microscopic domain. It is insignificant compared to the macroscopic world. When macroscopic factors are involved, it will be destroyed easily.

“Therefore, the macroscopic world is real and material, without any dispersion or illusion. However, the foundation at the bottom level of the macroscopic world is not so steady!” Lucien moved another step forward as his voice got louder and louder.

COMMENT

The angels and devils next to Viken had all fallen into silence. There were no more songs or praises!

“Under normal circumstances, such unsteadiness will not cause any consequences, but on special occasions, say, during the reproduction of creatures, it will lead to many more mutations. That’s why we have so many species and so many tricky monsters!”

In the pouring rain, the glittering lightning, and the rumbling thunders, the universe Lucien displayed zoomed in, allowing everybody to see the familiar fireball and the blue planet again!

Lucien said aloud as he stepped forward, “That’s why the ‘spiritual power’ of our souls can develop an assortment of strange spells beyond the monotonous abilities! That’s why reshaping and the elemental changes on the material level are relatively easy!”

The angels and devils around Viken looked afraid. Douglas, on the other hand, abandoned the futile attacks and focused on listening to Lucien’s narration. In the meantime, Viken seemed more and more desperate and crazy.

“It’s true that the source of our energy is the fluctuation of the ocean of energy in our void, but the ocean is not in our universe because we cannot grasp its momentary rise at all!

“Since the two parallel universes intersect and have different space-time changes, it gives us a chance to make use of their ocean of energy and the bottom-level matter like virtual particles!

“The conservation of energy is that of two universes, not just our own!”

As Lucien talked on, the ordinary people and the nobles on the ground were completely confused. They had absolutely no idea what he was talking about. Even the legendary experts in the sky were also mostly in such a state. Only the arcanists were listening to him half confused and half enlightened. Some were ecstatic, and some were trembling!

“Our souls exist in a high dimension and are projected to all the parallel dimensions. Our own souls are only part of the essence. Therefore, our meditation is actually to perceive another universe through the connection between the two soul projections. The environment of meditation that we establish—or our cognitive world—is the instrument of our communication. Therefore, the more similar and the more entangled it is to another universe, the more powerful it will be. That’s exactly the feedback of the real world!

“Therefore, most of our magic models are essentially the different variants of such a math model of space-time communication. Naturally, the more accurate they are, the more powerful they will be!”

BOOM!

A noise that could almost be compared to the self-explosion of the Will of Abyss just now echoed. The darkness in the sky co-existed with the gigantic fireball!

The boundary of god and mortals around Viken seemed to be under enormous pressure and was squeaking!

“In this model, gravity is quantized and exists as a relatively low-dimensional notion. When two universes intersect, it will entangle the gravity of our world, hence the mist that covers the planets and the sun, the star graves where there is no gravity, and the many alternate dimensions. Therefore, we cannot locate any planet at all without considering the influence of other universes!

“That’s the reason why planets were never found before!”

When he said that, Lucien suddenly thought of the moment when he read “Arcana” for the first time. At that time, Oliver and Mr. President were deeply upset that planets could not be discovered!

Quantized gravity... Douglas calmed down and thought hard!

“Wu! Wu! Wu! Wu!”

Miserable cries burst out. The angels and devils around Viken shed bright or dark tears in fear. The boundary of god and men trembled more and more violently, and it was squeaking louder and louder.

Inside Viken’s body, faces flew out and vaporized into dust, and he looked more and more crazy and hateful.

“The soul is in a high dimension. So, our death only means the elimination of a soul’s projection and the loss of current memories and special waves. However, our actual soul is never gone, and the projection will reappear after a while!”

As Lucien made the statement, faces of souls appeared in the storm, crying, cursing, and threatening. The ordinary people down below all shivered as they looked at them.

“Therefore, part of our spells and supernatural powers actually carry the features of high dimensions too. We can be resurrected through methods like the phylactery immediately after the death, we can perform space jump, the Sword of Truth can eliminate all traces of existence, and the Elimination blood power can destroy the source of the supernatural powers by blocking the connection of two universes!

“Therefore, our real path to the demigod level is the arcana approach: to let the projection of the soul reach the nature of the soul in the high dimension!

“Therefore, after the two universes have a slight intersection, there will be creatures that are closer to the high dimension but not perfect, like the Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell! That’s why the Furnace of Souls and the Styx that represent the essence of the high-dimensional souls show up! That’s why there are the primeval hell and the World of Souls where souls and feelings gather!

“Therefore, the mysteries of immortality that we saw in the Chamber of Immortality were actually another universe! It represents our other self!”

His magnificent voice put an end to the cries, curses, and beg for mercy. The storm stopped, the lightning and thunder were gone, and the angels and devils dispersed into the light. Viken’s body began to quiver, and after his every movement, some faces of souls were flying out!

Lucien had already reached before Viken. He looked down at him pitifully. “Your path to reach the high dimension by gathering many souls seems correct, but it is actually wrong. Those are not the projection of the same soul, and you cannot get the essence of your own soul in the high dimension. Therefore, while nothing wrong happened before your success, you will lose your undead quality after your success because it is impossible for you to be revived through somebody else’s soul.

“Of course, it was exactly because of the correctness of your path on the surface that I was able to fool you with the ‘observer effect’. Otherwise, I wouldn’t know how I can ‘really’ kill you at all.”

In his black double-breasted suit, Lucien put on his gentle smile again. He pressed his chest with his right hand and bowed slightly. “Now, I would like to repeat that, in the microscopic domain, where our experience in the past is no longer applicable and where the methodology we are used to errs, all the explanations and theoretical models must be strictly built on mathematics. Otherwise, explanations and hypotheses would only be illusions and fantasies!

“To put it simply, any hypothesis that is not based on math models is pure nonsense!”

Pa!

In Viken's shock and devastation, the boundary of god and men next to him was broken even though Lucien did not perform any attack at all!

In the sky, the darkness and the gigantic fireball faded, and the clear blueness was restored!

Chapter 821: Level and Power

Chapter 821: Level and Power

The sky was blue and cloudless. The bright sunlight sprayed on Allyn whose blockage had been activated again, adding a golden layer out of the pale mist.

The legendary sorcerers like Oliver and Bergner and the common arcanists like Heidi, Annick, and Sprint were all so shocked that they could barely close their mouths. Lucien Evans' solemn description just now outlined a clear, meticulous, and self-consistent system and answered the problems that had bothered the sorcerers for tens of thousands of years, including the essence of magic, the essence of the soul, and the feedback of the real world.

Although he only proposed concepts and hypotheses and reached a logical conclusion based on them without any detailed research, its agreement with the phenomena and experiments had suggested its correctness. It was a brainstorm that gave them an unprecedented shock. The nature of the world seemed to have been vaguely presented before them!

That was the eternal pursuit of every arcanist!

Multiverse, high-dimension space, indestructible soul, and other notions that were as unbelievable as dream talk refreshed their view on the world again.

So, the "space" that represented the real world was actually another parallel universe!

So, one's death was only the dispersion of the projection of the soul's nature!

So, some posthumous customs were not entirely wrong when they stated that one would be judged by the God of Death after death, and some of the souls would turn into intelligent creatures like humans, dragons, and elves, some would turn into common animals, and some would be confined in hell for good.

However, if they did not have current memories and personalities, and if they lost their unique waves and air, would they still be themselves?

“As expected of the Worldview Destroyer...” Other than the ordinary people and the nobles who couldn’t follow him, all the intelligent creatures who had a slight understanding of the world repeated the nickname subconsciously in their mind. The skyscrapers, the iron torrents, and the intelligent creatures with human faces and features that were right before their eyes but could not be touched forced them to treat the theoretical model fairly despite their subconscious resistance. At the very least, it was easier to accept than the observer effect was.

On the other hand, Lucien had triggered the feedback of the real world and broken Viken’s boundary between god and men only by the interpretation of his arcana system that was closer to the nature of the world. It was even more astounding and made them barely able to believe their eyes!

It was possible to blow up a sorcerer’s head with arcana theories, as could be seen from many examples. However, Viken hadn’t been a sorcerer since a long time ago. He did not have a cognitive world, and his heart of faith was absolutely under his control. Despite that, his defense had been broken when Mr. Evans did nothing but elaborate on the new arcana system with his mouth. They couldn’t help but feel that they were in a dream.

Of course, if we are not in a dream, then...

For some reason, they looked at Viken now with slight pity instead of fear and desperation. Such a fact was too brutal and merciless!

Watching the boundary next to him where light and darkness coexisted collapse inch by inch, Viken seemed to have been stunned. He wasn’t doing anything for a moment.

Lucien stopped further approaching. He put down his right hand and said with mixed feelings, “Therefore, I always believe in ‘god’; every one of us is our own god!

“Instead of pursuing the nature of your soul, you try to melt other people’s soul waves, hoping to find the path toward the high dimension with a number. That’s the opposite approach. It’s like in mathematics. We are trying to increase equations and solve the unknowns, whereas you are increasing the equations and the unknowns at the same time. How can you get an answer in such a way?

“Sometimes, the changes in quantity do not necessarily lead to a change in quality, or rather, the change in quality is not necessarily what you desired.”

When he said that, Lucien thought of himself. He couldn’t have reached the demigod level as fast if he hadn’t been transmigrated for a certain reason and carried the soul features of both universes, which allowed him to find things in common through comparison and research. Lucien’s soul had already dispersed, but the remaining pieces still gave Xiaofeng the language ability.

The transmigration when Xiaofeng died resulted in the amazing changes in the burning library and formed something that connected the two universes like the cognitive world. It was Xiaofeng’s cognitive world and connected his original universe. That was why Lucien succeeded so easily when he tried to sense the real world through meditation for the first time.

At that time, Lucien thought that it was because of his breakthrough in spiritual power in the crisis. Now, he finally realized that although it was part of the reason, that was not all of it. It must be noted that there had been many geniuses whose spiritual power was much greater than Lucien at his age in the history of magic, but their first attempt at meditation was never so easy and fast!

Therefore, it was impossible for other people to detect the spiritual library no matter how they tried, just like how they could not destroy the cognitive world directly. It was already the sophisticated knowledge that involved the changes in the intersection of universes. Even Lucien did not know much about it right now except for the basic concepts and the few formulas.

The content preservation of the spiritual library was obviously the protection of his instincts. Otherwise, the feedback of the real world would be too strong, and the connection with the original universe would be intensified. It was possible that the transmigrator couldn't take it and would be pulled back to the original universe.

As for the reason for his transmigration, Lucien did not waste his time thinking about it, because it was very likely to be a coincidence. For example, Lucien lost his soul on this side, and Xiaofeng lost his body on the other side, so they had weird synchronizations now that the two universes had preliminarily entangled. There were also many other guesses. Their odds were all extremely low.

However, Lucien wasn't too astonished. Even the events with the lowest odds could happen when there were infinite repetitions. From that point of view, everybody could be a lucky dog!

Hearing Lucien's words, Viken burst into fury, and the faces of souls in his body cried. After most of the powers of negative feelings and faith dispersed, it seemed that he could basically control his body right now.

"In any case, I have melted the powers of Mountain Paradise and the primeval hell. Even though I have not reached the level of a true god, I still have the power of true gods. Let's see if you can handle that!" Viken suddenly raised his right hand. Although he did not have his platinum staff with him, illusionary angels surfaced around him and prayed on the ground.

"Almighty Lord, you are one, and everyone."

...

Viken's vibe soon became high, unpredictable, and sacred. Ivory holy light was gathered in his hands. Then, centered at his body, infinite brilliance burst out and locked onto Lucien!

He was now able to cast "God's Arrival" instantly!

His God's Arrival did not carry any sequelae now!

Obviously, he was the power source of God's Arrival himself right now!

The ivory and holy light seemed to have frozen the time far away. The top legends further away showed no reaction. Only a silver moon, a nine-floored hell, and a lifelike world appeared and floated in the ocean of holy light, but they couldn't stop much.

God's Arrival hit Lucien who was not far away before Viken. The ivory light glittered and drowned everything.

"Is he dead?" Viken thought in delight and confusion. He had performed "God's Arrival" with the power of the true god. No demigods could withstand a head-on clash without dodging!

The brilliance of God's Arrival faded, and the frozen time melted and pressed forward. Before Viken, a man wearing a black double-breasted suit slowly surfaced, as handsome, gentle, and graceful as before. He even had a delicate silver watch in his hands, and he snapped the cover to watch the time.

How was it possible? How could he remain intact without being damaged at all after being hit by God's Arrival with the power of the true god?

Not just Viken, but Douglas, Maltimus, and the legendary experts around them, as well as the sorcerers and knights on the ground, had the same thought.

Lucien's body turned concrete very soon. He said with a peaceful smile, "The nature of 'God's Arrival' is to find the connection between the high-dimensional soul and its projection and destroy everything along the connection. That's why it can lock onto the soul and cannot be avoided. That's why it can attack a target from a long distance away. That's why it can prevent the experts other than demigods from being resurrected."

As he spoke, he smiled again. "Now that I have learned its nature and mechanism clearly, and now that I am also a demigod who can perceive the 'connection', I can leave this 'dimension' temporarily through the connection, before I come back by reestablishing a projection. Naturally, you cannot hit me.”

“No, it’s impossible!” God’s Arrival was the source of Viken’s confidence, and God’s Arrival at the level of the true god was even more so. How could he not get mad? His eyes were bloodshot as holy light continued to gather in his hands!

“You are one, and everyone.”

...

“You are the moment, and forever.”

...

“You are the creator, and master.”

...

God’s Arrival was blown out again and again, but Lucien’s body flashed through the infinite light and reached Viken’s side.

“I know who I am, what status I am in, what God’s Arrival is, and how I should evade it, so I am a real demigod. You, on the other hand, only have the power of the true god, and you do not have the knowledge of the true god and the demigod. You do not know anything at all. What makes you think that you can hit me?”

Lucien looked solemn and pitiful. He extended his right hand and said solemnly, “Under normal circumstances, a similar spell in the level of the true god can attack the nature of the soul in the high dimension, which will completely kill the soul.”

The vast cosmos appeared behind his back as the gigantic fireball and the blue planet revolved slowly.

Chapter 822: The Poorest Villain in History

The moment he finished his sentence, spots of peaceful light popped up like a lake that was reflecting the moon at night. Under the gentle breeze, tiny ripples were spreading out.

The spots of light were instantly gathered in Lucien's hands into a glistening staff.

Douglas, Maltimus, and the other demigods were all more or less stunned. Was Lucien capable of casting Space Staff, a legendary spell, without chanting just like Viken who broke into the level of true gods?

However, they soon thought it through. Now that Lucien had basically figured out the essence of magic, chanting or not chanting did not really have any difference!

The Space Staff in Lucien's hands was waved, and the spacious area up ahead was suddenly caught in an extremely slow state that was similar to the effect of Advanced Time Stop. Even another "God's Arrival" in Viken's hands had been frozen in the ivory light.

Viken, who claimed to be the only one who grasped the mysteries of time and space except for the God of Truth, had brilliant spots rising inside his body, exactly like the light of the legendary river of time. It helped Viken to get rid of the slowed state.

Maltimus became grave when he watched Lucien's "Space Staff" to be gathered, because he discovered that even though he was immune to Time Stop effects, he did not seem capable of resisting such slowness. Such a state was not directly cast upon the recipient but changed the environment in a certain unusual way. Naturally, it was impossible for him to be immune to that!

Was it Lucien's real demigod attack after he advanced into the demigod level? Like Douglas' "Fateful Meteor"?

Douglas frowned slightly. He realized that the Space Staff had not just “slowed” the environment around Viken but also placed it in a demigod state that both belonged to and did not belong to this world. It was similar to the condition of the “cognitive world”.

Viken’s overwhelming power of the true god was unleashed, allowing him to get rid of the influence of Lucien’s Space Staff. At this moment, the perspective of the vast cosmos behind Lucien’s back rose, and the gigantic fireball and the blue planet were gone. A cluster of darkness where there was not the slightest light appeared.

Boom!

From the darkness, the unimaginably horrible energy surged and quickly died down. Rising and ebbing, it was truly an unpredictable ocean of energy. This was too fast a change to be observed for the other universe, but when it was viewed from this side, due to the different speeds of time, the demigod experts could manage to sense the fluctuations!

Boom!

The terrifying energy that surged out leaned outward and ran into the slowed world next to Viken!

It became another channel that connected to the other universe like the cognitive world! Also, because it was slow, it had “borrowed” the fluctuations of energy!

Boom!

Energy ran out as if it had been generated out of nothing, drowning Viken who was emanating dazzling brilliance immediately!

Particles appeared and disappeared in pairs. The slowed world was nullified very soon. At the center of the energy tide’s rampage, a cluster of fluids where light and darkness entangled twisted and grew larger, turning back into Viken. However, he seemed much dimmer and weaker than before!

After suffering the heavy wounds, Viken was finally recovered and refreshed from the madness caused by the blast of negative feelings and the sacred faith. He gnashed his teeth and said, “Just because my ‘God’s Arrival’ cannot hit you does not mean that it cannot hit other people. I don’t believe that you will watch them be killed without doing anything!”

Lucien was amused. “Why don’t you take a look around yourself first?”

Viken’s senses, which had been suppressed by the energy tide, spread out. He felt that he was in midair and the Holy City was below him. As for Allyn and Rentato, as well as the legendary experts around him, they were nowhere to be seen.

“Previously, you were connected to every corner of the world and could even directly influence them only because of the marvelous domain when you broke into the true god level.

“It’s a high-dimensional state, in which the long distance in the lower dimensions is much shorter. However, after you failed to break into the true god state, and the boundary between god and men was broken, the marvelous domain naturally started to disappear. Your usage of God’s Arrival further accelerated the process and made it disappear fast. Right now, you can only affect the Holy City and attack us who are in the marvelous domain.”

Lucien said with a smile. On the other side, Douglas, the Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell gathered and defended Fernando, Hathaway, and the rest of them. Although they could not resist God’s Arrival in the true god level individually, they were still able to resist the attack after joining their hands.

Their communication was purely conducted through spiritual power. The long talk actually only took a brief moment. His body trembling violently, Viken cast another God’s Arrival, and the projection of the parallel universe behind Lucien had perspective changes again!

.....

After Viken attacked Lucien with God’s Arrival for the first time only to miss the target, the legendary experts who attacked outside of the marvelous domain, as well as the sorcerers, nobles, and ordinary people on the ground, watched them turn vague and quickly disappear in the bright and blue sky.

“Why have they disappeared?”

It was their subconscious question, but very soon, every intelligent creature with the slightest knowledge came up with the reason. Viken’s attempt at advancement was over. Naturally, the unusual phenomenon that the whole world could see and reach came to an end.

“I wonder how it will end on the other side...” Heidi looked at the sky in concern.

Sprint snorted. “Viken has only the power but not the knowledge. I don’t see how he can win the battle when he cannot hit our teacher. Let’s drop the question and remember the equations and models that our teacher just gave to study them.”

“Yes, that’s what matters!” Annick shivered and returned from his shock, agreeing with Sprint’s suggestion.

Heidi thought for a moment and nodded very carefully. “That’s right. Our teacher is a cunning person—no, clever grand arcanist—who has both the knowledge and the power. He will only let Viken reach the end in desperation. There won’t be any hope for him. The arcana system and the essence of magic and soul that our teacher just gave are of greater significance.”

Therefore, the arcanists of the Atom Institution were gathered, trying to recall and study the equations that Lucien gave earlier.

Such a scene happened in every corner of Allyn. Everybody was diligent and hardworking. That was exactly what stimulated minds needed!

As for who Viken was exactly?

Well, he would be killed by Mr. Evans soon. There was no need to waste time on him. Learning and studying were more important!

Natasha, who was descending from the sky, said to Hellen next to her with a smile after realizing the situation, “I’ve seen plenty of plays and operas, but Viken is probably the first regretful and desperate supervillain who has been forgotten even before the final battle.”

Hellen’s eyes lost the focus. She turned a deaf ear to Natasha’s words and murmured to herself, “It was a trick... It was a trick...”

Rendered speechless, Natasha raised her head and looked at the sky. Even the Witch of Iceland had forgotten Viken, too.

As a matter of fact, the fact that she was talking and laughing here instead of going to the Holy City in a hurry to help her husband had suggested her own attitude toward the final battle.

.....

“You are one, and everyone...”

In the distant and holy prayers, infinite ivory holy light burst out and surged at Lucien, but Viken did not check the result of this “God’s Arrival” at all. He simply turned around and left the range of God’s Arrival, tearing apart the space.

He could not hit the enemy, and he no longer had any hostages. How could he win the battle?

After coming back to himself, Viken naturally chose to strategically relocate, or in other words, to run!

Boom!

An enormous and terrifying explosion echoed, and a world-destroying energy storm broke out!

Boom!

The energy storm collided with the light of God’s Arrival and resulted in another astonishing explosion.

The sky was filled by the brightness that the sun could not be seen until a long time later.

The sweeping energy storm disrupted Viken's attempt to escape, making his body even dimmer.

Lucien has directly resisted God's Arrival? Viken thought in shock.

"Your God's Arrival is exactly your 'true god'. It has only the power but not the corresponding level. It's easy to resist it as long as there is enough energy." Lucien slowly appeared up above.

Just now, he extracted and created anti-protons and other matters, transforming "Positron Cannon" into an authentic "Antimatter Cannon". Through the energy storm caused by its obliteration with common matters, it offset the ocean of light caused by God's Arrival.

Although God's Arrival had other special effects, such as slowing time and locking the soul, they could barely work on Lucien who was in the demigod level right now.

"Also, have you sensed that your power is weaker and weaker every time you use God's Arrival?" Lucien smiled and gathered Space Staff again. "It's because the source of your power of faith and your negative feelings has been ruined by yourself and cannot be restored anytime soon. Therefore, your power cannot be refilled after it is used up."

As he spoke, Lucien pointed the Space Staff and locked the space around, slowing the changes and sabotaging Viken's efforts to escape.

Another energy time surged over, and Viken's body was already on the verge of collapse.

At this moment, a bright and beautiful moon descended from the sky. Life Deprivation was cast out, and a shooting star with a long tail of light fell without a sound.

After the beautiful view emerged, Viken struggled with madness beaming out of his eyes. He appeared to be transcendental and dispersive again.

“You will die with me even if I must die!”

After suffering consecutive attacks, he was already on the verge of death. Having been a brutal man all the time, he naturally had the idea of self-explosion. So, he transformed his status and lunged at Lucien.

Seeing that, Lucien smiled, and his body grew illusionary again, as if he were about to disappear from this world.

Chapter 823: Path of Immortality (End of the Main Storyline)

Seeing that, Viken grinned hideously in his heart. His body that was flashing and twisting erratically suddenly collapsed, turning into two worlds where light and darkness overlapped. One of the worlds was evil and corrupt, brimming with pain and desperation, and the other was lofty and sacred, with singing angels everywhere.

The remainders of the primeval hell and Mountain Paradise reappeared, forming the previous balance again. Viken was briefly given the feeling that he belonged to and did not belong to this world again.

Such a transformation suggested that Viken had completely abandoned himself. He would rather retrograde and perish in order to find an opportunity to deal a critical blow on Lucien so that he could only “return” millions of years later like the mysterious existence of the World of Souls!

Such a feeling was already close to the vibe that Lucien gave other people. The two of them seemed to be in the same world!

Gotcha!

Viken grasped Lucien’s air instantly!

However, at this moment, he realized that the space around him became dark and deep, with brilliant stars scattered everywhere. The edge of the space far away vaguely constricted, and the power of the wind that represented electromagnetism was divided into parts, as if it was exchanging something. Below him were elements in different colors that were similar to planets. Electrons surrounded the atomic nucleus and dispersed into a cloud. Above his head, there was an enormous fireball.

It was Lucien’s “cognitive world”?

I could actually break into his “cognitive world”?

No, it's because our current state is similar to the status of the cognitive world, which does not entirely belong to this world but is connected to it in a certain way.

Viken thought quickly and basically understood what was going on.

Of course, he also knew that there was still a major difference between their state and the cognitive world. He was able to break in obviously because Lucien intentionally adjusted the status of his cognitive world.

Why is he doing this?

In any case, now that he dares to let me in, I will completely ruin his cognitive world. It will be even more difficult for him to recover and return!

When countless thoughts flashed in Viken's heart in the blink of an eye, he made a decision quickly. The primeval hell and Mountain Paradise began to expand.

Suddenly, he saw the Lucien who was in the "cosmos" far away putting on a gentle and graceful smile again. In the meantime, the enormous fireball above his head was turned to the back of a cluster of intense darkness.

The darkness that even rays of light could not leak out of released an unimaginable and most horrifying attraction force. Immediately, Viken, including his primeval hell and Mountain Paradise, was attracted to it!

In the normal space, any of Lucien's Host Stars of Destiny couldn't have influenced the material world effectively. However, Viken's status was synchronized with the cognitive world at this moment.

Under the all-absorbing attraction force, the expansion of the primeval hell and Mountain Paradise was stopped, and Viken was devoured by the darkness before he was able to let out a scream.

Lucien, however, was not relaxed. He was even more solemn than before. His cognitive world quickly faded. The perspective of the shadow universe behind his back changed, displaying indescribable darkness instead of the gigantic fireball and the blue planet.

The darkness was even more intimidating than that inside Lucien's cognitive world. Even though it was in a different universe, the demigods like Douglas and Maltimus still realized that it was powerful enough to tear them apart easily.

Then, the darkness in the cognitive world had minor "communication" with the darkness!

Crack! Crack! Crack!

The stars in Lucien's cognitive world were absorbed into the darkness. Everything was trembling. However, the items inside the darkness also flowed into the other darkness through the channel of communication.

"Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!"

A soundless scream burst out. Lucien hurried to abort the connection and turn the darkness backward, redisplaying the gigantic fireball. However, even though he had done everything perfectly, his cognitive world was already an utter mess. His body slightly dimmed. It was obvious that he had been badly hurt.

2Viken had been completely done for!

Maltimus was feeling rather sympathetic after witnessing the scene. Lucien was too strong right now!

At first, he thought of helping Viken flee in order to maintain the balance of the situation. However, neither Douglas nor the Silver Moon loosened their wariness of him. Therefore, he could only choose to submit in the future...

The shadow universe and the projection of the cognitive world were slowly gone. Lucien's body quickly turned concrete. He slightly nodded at Douglas, Silver Moon Alterna, Fernando, and the rest of them.

The darkness in the sky was gone, and the bright sunlight sprayed on his body, covering him in gold.

In Allyn and Rentato, although nobody cared about the battle any longer, many people were still mumbling to themselves, “It was a trick... It was a trick...”

.....

One day later, in Babel in the Atomic Universe...

Hardly had Lucien come out of his laboratory when he saw Natasha appreciating the cosmos outside of the window, which was entirely different from that in the main material world, with a glass of red wine in her hands.

“Have you found a way to recover Mr. Maskelyne?” Natasha asked in concern.

Lucien nodded but shook his head. “I’ve found something, but more research is still necessary. Even though I am a demigod, I am not omnipotent.”

When Viken melted Mountain Paradise, the seraphs who were capable of fleeing like Maskelyne hid in the Realm of Gates. After all, unlike the primeval devils, they were not deeply connected to the primeval hell.

“A demigod...” Natasha grimaced, indicating that she would work hard herself. “What exactly is the high-dimensional soul you talked about? Do they have self-consciousness? Can they control their respective projections?”

She was quite interested in Lucien’s model. Although most of it was too confusing, she finally understood the key to her advancement. However, she had her concerns, fearing that the soul essence in the high dimension could control her. She did not feel quite comfortable when she thought that something mysterious could control her and wanted to slay it, even though it was another “her”.

“I don’t know. If I could completely understand the nature and status of the high-dimensional souls, I would already be a ‘true god’. For now, I can only make speculations based on the phenomena as well as the things that I’ve felt after I became a demigod. For example, it is possible that the high-dimensional souls are in chaos, and only after they are projected to different parallel universes and combined with matters will the unique self-consciousness be generated. That's why one's memories and ways of thinking will be gone after death. They do not belong to the soul essence in the high dimension." Lucien spoke of his thoughts which he wasn't quite confident about.

"There won't be any self-consciousness until it is combined with matters? But there are a lot of souls that are separated from their physical forms, like ghosts, aren't there?" Natasha said like a curious arcanist.

Lucien thought for a moment and said, "The souls that I often talk about are more like shells that are made of electromagnetic fields and the special isotopes of certain elements. They're matters, too. At least, I think that the projection of high-dimensional souls has to be based on matter in our universe."

Natasha scratched her chin. "What about the starry sky of destiny? There isn't any matter in that. Also, why do the stars that exist in reality indicate our fate?"

"You've answered your own question." Lucien was amused and took over the champagne that Natasha poured for him. "Through the connection between the high-dimensional souls and their projections in a material world, we can grasp all the traces of the souls in the material world. The mechanism is the same as that of God's Arrival, except that God's Arrival is used for destruction purposes. In the high-dimensional state, all the traces of all lives must be overlapping or entangling. That's the real appearance of the starry sky of destiny. So, when there are changes on one side, the other side will sense it.

"When there are all the traces, we will be able to infer some of the future changes. It's like all questions can be answered when there are enough equations. However, since the 'future' involves too many factors and unknowns, there can only be rough, indefinite predictions.

"Such overlapping or entanglement in the high-dimensional state can only be seen when we meditate through the cognitive world or when we perform astrology. Its projection is also based on matters. So, it is manifested through the stars, and the information is hidden in the law and status of different Host Stars of Destiny.

“Therefore, the starry sky of destiny shares the same law as the starry sky in reality, but it runs in very different ways. Mr. President successfully advanced into the demigod level mainly by grasping his Host Star of Destiny, or the traces of his own soul.”

Hearing Lucien’s brief description, Natasha nodded thoughtfully. “Therefore, the starry sky of destiny reflects most of the laws of the stars in reality, but the stars in reality have barely anything to do with fate?”

“Yes.” Lucien did not think that Natasha could understand any further interpretations right now. So, he nodded his head in approval.

Natasha seemed to be in a better mood. “You’ve touched the essence of high-dimensional souls through the connection of two souls. How are you going to become a true god and realize immortality?”

She had already learned from Lucien that he melted a soul of his own from another universe. That was why he could advance into the demigod level so quickly. However, Natasha did not have many complaints. After all, she did not even know Lucien back then. The Lucien she knew had always been the one after the melting.

Thinking for a moment, Lucien said, “It is impossible to calculate the essence of the original soul in reverse with the answer and part of the laws of projection because equations are not enough and there are too many unknowns. Therefore, in order to realize immortality, we can only find ways to go to other parallel universes to search for our other ‘selves’ and learn more answers and laws. Then, we will be able to solve the simultaneous equation and find out the math model about the essence of the soul.

“So, find more ‘selves’, obtain more information, and advance through meticulous math models. That’s an arcanist’s path of immortality!”

Natasha said enviously, “The direction is very clear... What about knights?”

“The further you go down on the path of immortality, the more similar things you will see. After all, it is already close to the essence of the world. Therefore, the path of knights and the path of arcanists should be basically the same except for some of the details.” Lucien chuckled. “The advancement cannot be made based on natural instincts anymore. You have to figure out the corresponding things and compare yourself with more of yourselves.”

Natasha’s lips twitched and decided not to consider such a troublesome question for now. “Why do you think there is magic on our side but there isn’t on the other universe?”

“The power of soul projections has different influences on fundamental matters. Also, time flows faster on our side and more slowly on their side. So, we can make use of the rising and ebbing ocean of energy on their side, but they cannot use ours.” Lucien’s voice became low.

“However, since there is an intersection, there should be corresponding changes on that side too, shouldn’t there?” Natasha asked in confusion.

Lucien put down the cup and walked to the window before he replied with a smile, “Perhaps there are like macro electrons¹ and ball lightning...”

“What?”

“I was just kidding.”

(End of Volume VIII and the main storyline)

Chapter 824: 61 Days to Go (Side Story: Year 24 of the Arcana Calendar)

The lights on the Triumph Avenue of Rentato were just on. The wind at the late spring was still somewhat chilly as the night fell, forcing the passersby on the street to cover themselves more tightly.

Donnie pressed his black top hat and got off from the bright yellow bus. Roaming on the street that was as bright as day, he walked toward the “Knowledge Bookstore” near the Triumph Square.

“Has Herald of Arcana and Magic for this week come?” Donnie asked the bearded boss.

The boss, who had deep yellow hair, replied without raising his head, “No, and it will never come again.”

“Is that so...” Donnie did not sound surprised. He simply heaved a sigh, as if he had seen it coming, with complicated feelings.

The boss finally raised his head and observed him with a pair of owl eyes. “What’s to be sorry about? After the magic stream screens were popularized into home televisions, and Ms. Heidi made major breakthroughs in artificial intelligence, it was only a matter of time for such a poorly-poised newspaper to disappear.”

His weird pupils reflected a handsome young man who was no more than twenty years old. It was supposed to be the most vigorous years of his life, but his blue eyes were full of exhaustion and depression.

Donnie said with a bitter smile, “I grew up reading the Herald of Arcana and Magic. It guided me to embark on the arcana path and pursue the truth of the world. For me, it is a beautiful memory and a part of my life that I will never forget.”

Thanks to the popularization of magic radios and TVs and the application of artificial intelligence, the citizens now had plenty more sources of information. They were much less dependent on the newspaper. Now that the basic knowledge of arcana had been disseminated, most ordinary people were not interested in the more sophisticated arcana theories anymore because they seemed unrelated to life. After all, they could learn the introductions from the mainstream newspapers, the radios, and the home TVs. Therefore, Herald of Arcana and Magic, as a newspaper that introduced arcana and magic, was no longer necessary, and the circulation had plummeted.

The magic apprentices and arcanists were not likely to buy the newspaper either, because they had more professional academic journals such as “Allyn Impression” that better met their appetites and News of the World. So, since three years ago, or year 21 of the arcana calendar, a lot of such newspapers had gone bankrupt. Finally, it was Herald of Arcana and Magic’s turn despite its fame and the fact that it represented the golden years of arcana.

The boss of the bookstore pointed at the bookshelves. “If you want to learn the basics of arcana, there are many professional books here. If you want to learn the latest trend of arcana studies, you can subscribe to Allyn Impression or watch the News of the World TV Channel every day. There really isn’t any need to read Herald of Arcana and Magic.”

Under the bright magic lamps, the rows of blue or black books emitted weird colors and made Donnie felt dizzy. His veins bulging, he said, “That will be unnecessary. I haven’t grasped my own books yet.”

He had come to the Triumph Square on the bus because Herald of Arcana and Magic was already unavailable near his school, but the Knowledge Bookstore still had it. Little did he expect that Herald of Arcana and Magic could not sustain any longer after only one month.

The boss chuckled. He looked at the badges of magic apprentice and intern arcanist on the chest of Donnie’s black robe, as well as an emblem that was seven bright leaves on a black background, before he remarked, “You’re a fifth-grader of ‘Nature’s Heart School’, aren’t you? There are only 61 days to go until the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic, and you’re still buying Herald of Arcana and Magic? You should focus on your studies.”

The moment he heard the “College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic”, Donnie’s facial muscles cramped, and he looked confused, agitated, and depressed. “It’s the weekend today. There are no classes until eight at night...”

He explained subconsciously before he smiled in self-mockery. Why do I bother to explain that to him?

After twenty years of evolution, under the lead of the Congress of Magic, a three-tier school system, namely generic schools, alchemical and vocational schools, and advanced magic colleges, had been established on the whole continent.

The generic schools were mainly open to children and adults who did not know how to read. The education would take five years. Then, after passing the exams that included measurement of spiritual power and tests of basic arcana theories, the graduates would go to the preliminary magic schools, where they would become magic apprentices, professional alchemy workers, or take part in other occupations.

The preliminary magic schools had a five-year curriculum too. Through the real basic education of magic and arcana, qualified magic apprentices and intern arcanists were raised. Eventually, they would take the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic and be admitted to the major magic colleges.

In the College Entrance Exam, those who had already become official sorcerers would receive bonus scores.

Donnie was about to leave when the boss smiled and said, “I can see that you have no magic items with you except for the three badges that the school gave you. I don’t think you’re from a rich family. You’d better focus on your studies.”

Under such a school system, the magic items and potions that could relieve fatigue, keep the mind sharp, and increase memory abilities were favored by most students.

Although such accessories and potions were forbidden in the real College Entrance Exam, they were of great help for the students to improve their learning efficiency. So, nobody would refuse them, unless they couldn't afford them.

Donnie blushed immediately. Shy and awkward, he was about to flee from the embarrassing bookstore.

"I have a 'Lucidity Necklace' here that I can rent you for two months..." The boss' unemotional voice came into Donnie's ears and made him stop.

Then, he turned around abruptly and looked at the boss. "Why?"

He was both excited and suspicious. However, his eyes caught a book named "Recognizing Different Deceptive Magic Contracts", which was written by Lucien Evans, on the bookshelf. He thought to himself, Do I have to pay my soul as the price?

The boss chuckled. "I am a loyal reader of the Herald of Arcana and Magic too. Otherwise, I wouldn't have bought it in the end. So, when I see you, I feel that I see myself from a long time ago... Why, are you scared that I have other purposes? You are free to bring the contract to the city hall for assessment."

"I... Do I need to pay anything?" More or less relaxed, Donnie asked earnestly.

The boss thought for a moment. "A down payment of ten coins, and working for me for two months after your College Entrance Exam."

Donnie nodded quickly after he heard the terms. "Alright! No problem! Sir, when are we going to sign the contract?"

One "Lucidity Necklace" was worth two to five queen gold coins. Having rented one at such a low price, Donnie was naturally excited.

"The necklace is not with me. You can come again tomorrow at this time." The boss nodded.

Donnie thanked him and left the bookstore for the bus station. All he could think of was the amazing experience and the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic that was to come in 61 days.

As he waited for the bus, Donnie looked at the Triumph Square, where a bronze statue that was wearing a double-breasted suit and a top hat with a staff in his left hand and a pocket watch in his right hand, stood.

“Mr. Evans...” Donnie mumbled with both admiration and certain “hate”.

“Bus No. 36, bound for ‘Land of Thousand Lakes’...” As a cold, mechanical female voice echoed, a dim red bus stopped before Donnie.

Donnie woke up from his thoughts and stepped on the bus, placing his school badge in the sensor area.

“From the No. 7 Magic School of Rentato. Eight free rides left...” The mechanical voice echoed again without any feelings.

“Nature’s Heart” was a magic school co-established by the Congress of Magic, the Elven Court, and the Kingdom of Holm. It was the seventh preliminary magic school in Rentato.

“Artificial intelligence is truly convenient...” Donnie thought subconsciously. “It’s a shame that I don’t have a chance to witness the combination of artificial intelligence and alchemical life as what Ms. Heidi described...”

Thinking about random things, Donnie returned to his school, which was outside the city, right on time for the evening class.

“Today, I’ll introduce to you the special theory of relativity.” Mr. Slington, who had a long white beard, said hoarsely, “This is Mr. Evans’ profound description of space and time. With your current expertise, it is impossible for you to understand it. All you need to do is to grasp the key points.”

Donnie’s facial muscles were cramped again. He looked at the banner of “61 Days Left Until the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic” at the back of the classroom and became focused.

After the evening class, Donnie returned to his dormitory dizzily. He lit the small magic lamp and prepared for exercises.

“‘Evans Instructions’, ‘Lucien’s Guidance’, ‘Detailed Explanations of the Questions in the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic by Lucien Evans’...” Donnie read the collection of tests one word after another, feeling a stronger and stronger headache. “Evans, Lucien, Lucien, Evans...”

Although he knew that those books were published by other people under Mr. Evans’ name, he still gnashed his teeth at the two words that frequently showed up.

Calming himself down, he opened one of the books and decided to review and consolidate “History of Arcana and Magic” first.

“... In which year did Mr. Lucien Evans propose matrix mechanics? What’s the significance?”

“... How many times has Mr. Evans won the highest honors including the Arcana Prize and the Holm Crown Prize?”

...

“Lucien, Evans, Evans, Lucien...” Donnie rubbed his forehead and closed the book in agitation, opening another collection of tests.

“... Please recite in full the periodic table that Mr. Evans proposed and perfected.”

“... What is the Lucien Constant? What equations are related to it?”

Pa.

Donnie closed the book quickly and drank water to calm himself down. He decided to go for another one.

“... What is the Evans Field Equation about? What’s your understanding of it?”

“... Could the Lucien Equation describe all the microscopic particles?”

“Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

A miserable, painful, and furious scream burst out of Donnie’s mouth and spread far away in the night, echoed by similar sounds in other dormitories.

Chapter 825: Shadow

Chapter 825: Shadow

"You're screaming as if you've run into a ghost." As a low and unpredictable voice echoed, the door of his dormitory was opened, and a young man with messy hair walked in. His eyelids were bloated, and his blue eyes were bloodshot, as if he hadn't slept for a long time.

On his back, a pale and fuzzy shadow was stuck to him and floated forward with the feet away from the ground. After it showed up, the whole dormitory suddenly became cold, as if the night of spring turned into a dawn in winter.

Donnie quivered and hurried to put on the long coat that he just took off. "Sammy, I see the ghost on your back every day. Why would I be scared of ghosts? Besides, if there are really any evil spirits, those teachers of the school of necromancy would be capturing them with great delight."

Such was the disadvantage of the magic schools, where there was no place for ghost stories. Things were different in the generic schools. For example, after a girl hanged herself in a laboratory, the other students often found that their experiment materials would go missing, or that the materials they badly in need of would appear right next to their hands when they worked alone in the place at night.

Of course, there were other stories in magic schools. For example, rumors had it that the grim old sorcerer who watched over the autopsy room often dissected living people for studies, and it was why he barely came out and always refused everyone who approached his room.

Sammy yawned. "In that case, why were you screaming so miserably? You are a top twenty apprentice of our grade."

The ghost hands behind him suddenly stretched like it was made of elastic material. Then, they grabbed the kettle and the cup, poured water, and fed it to Sammy's mouth.

"Even the best apprentices would feel that their brains are exploding when they are faced with all those equations, conceptions, mechanisms, and magic models, even though we're only working on the basics," Donnie rubbed his temples and complained. It was particularly so when so many theories and equations had Lucien or Evans in them. He only hoped that somebody could travel back in time and kill that guy so that those torturing things wouldn't have been invented.

Thinking about that, Donnie sighed. "Also, I do not have a Lucidity Necklace or a Stamina Ring. I'm not like you. You have a natural-born Back Spirit, and you have been admitted by the Heidler Magic College in advance for your excellent necromancy skills. For me, I can only count myself, and I cannot fail. It's only natural that I get exhausted and anxious as time goes on."

He knew his mental status rather well.

Sammy drank a mouthful of water and yawned again. "Your psychoanalysis is pretty good. It will be better after you unleash your depression."

Then, he lay on his bed lazily and closed his eyes. "The Back Spirit can be quite tricky. It absorbs your vitality, affects your status, and... prevents girls from getting close to you. I would've been burnt if I were born during the reign of the Saint Truth..."

As he spoke, he fell asleep, and his breath was barely audible. His Back Spirit lay below him and hugged him tightly.

Donnie looked at his roommate and sighed. What you despise is what I envy and cannot get. After all, if he could become an official sorcerer, none of the female sorcerers would be scared of his Back Spirit.

Sammy mentioned it before that he had a twin brother. However, since his mother's body was damaged near a gap of the World of Souls, one of her babies was already dead before being born.

Calming himself down, Donnie threw aside “Introduction to Arcana” and “History of Arcana and Magic” and focused on the exercises to analyze magic models.

Tomorrow, I will have my own Lucidity Necklace!

...

As the intricate and weird spell echoed and the clusters of cold powder slid off, a transparent ray mixed with freezing air was shot out, resulting in thick frost on the throat of the target.

Donnie looked at his work in satisfaction and appreciated Mr. Evans in his heart. After he basically figured out the essence of magic, the functions of many spells had been analyzed and simplified. Otherwise, it would’ve been impossible for him to shoot out a freezing ray so easily.

“Alright, that’s all for today’s magic exercise.” The teacher responsible for real-battle magic guidance clapped his hands and dismissed the students.

Donnie hurried to stop and pack his materials. After saying goodbye to Sammy who seemed to be half asleep all the time, he hurried to go to the station outside of the school.

Today was Sunday. There were no classes in the afternoon.

After forty minutes, Bus No. 36 reached Triumph Avenue, and Donnie walked into the Knowledge Bookstore quickly.

“Good afternoon, sir.” Donnie greeted and was too shy to say anything else.

The boss, who had a pair of owl eyes and a deep yellow beard, laughed. “Good afternoon. You’re right on time. I’ve already had the Lucidity Necklace and the contract prepared.”

As he spoke, he brought out a bright gold necklace. On the necklace were five bright blue gems the size of grit. They emitted vague coolness as if a spring was hidden in them. Together, they constituted a strangely-shaped star.

“It’s a ‘Lucidity Necklace’ that is in the level of official magic items...” Donnie had taken basic appraisal classes in school, so he could tell the real level of the necklace easily from the obvious wave features. He was both excited and confused. As Mr. Evans said before, inexplicable gifts often contained schemes, no matter the schemes were good or bad.

The boss touched his beard and smiled. “It’s rented to you, not given to you.

“Actually, I am a very materialistic man. I do things for returns. Although I’m renting it to you very cheaply, will you turn down my request for help after you become an official sorcerer? This is essentially a long-term investment that does not jeopardize my own interests at all.”

As the infrastructure such as roads and rails was perfected, and after the magic cars, magic steam trains, steamships, aircraft, and other vehicles were popularized, the communication among places was more and more convenient. The banking industry had made a lot of innovations too.

Donnie was more relaxed after hearing the boss’ answer. Although he was still puzzled why the guy had high hopes in him, he was not too bothered by it. After all, it was his investment. So, Donnie picked up the contract and read it carefully.

Donnie reviewed every clause on the contract according to what he learned in school. The contract was very simple and did not have any ambiguities. So, Donnie reached a conclusion very quickly. Gritting his teeth, he signed his real name with his quill.

A bright fire popped up, burning up the contract and yielding two copies at the same time.

“The contract is now in effect. You can take away the necklace now.” The boss gave the necklace back to Donnie.

After seizing the necklace according to the standard procedure, Donnie put it on his neck and immediately sensed coolness circulating in his body. His days of anxiety and depression were gone. He was never more refreshed and comfortable.

“Donnie.” The boss suddenly asked, “Which school are you going to apply for in the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic? Holt? The Tower? Heidler? Or any others?”

There were nine advanced magic colleges in the Congress of Magic today. Among them, the Holt Magic College was best at the microscopic domain and elements, the Tower College was best at astrology and cosmology, and the Heidler College was best at necromancy, genes, and medics. Every college had additional tests for the applicants. Therefore, a month before the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic, each student would choose the college of their choice.

Subconsciously, Donnie was about to say Holt Magic College, because it was the first college of the Congress. The faculty was strong and knowledgeable, and they were best at the microscopic domain that involved the nature of the world and magic. Who wouldn't be attracted by that?

However, when he saw the boss' owl eyes, he suddenly remembered the pain from last night. The equations and formulas whose rough interpretations were already complicated enough, the dizzying math models, and the “curses” that had Lucien or Evans as the prefix made him feel agitated from the bottom of his heart.

The moment he thought that he would step deeper into the Evans domain, he felt that his life was dark and sunless.

“I... I haven't made up my mind yet. I was thinking of applying for the Holt Magic College, but the other colleges seem quite good too. I'm good at most of my classes,” Donnie said ambiguously.

The boss smiled and then sighed. “Actually, I am a sorcerer, and I entered the world of magic under the influence of the Herald of Arcana and Magic.

“I once had the ambition to make huge achievements that I could be proud of in the microscopic domain. After all, Mr. Evans only established the framework, and many details and foundations still required studying. Alas, after deeper studies, I realized that only the real talented arcanists could press forward in this domain and that a mediocre man like me could barely keep up with them.

“To make things worse, to dedicate myself to theoretical studies, I completely ignored the magic application, which led to the stagnation of my capabilities. I was left out from the team that was aiming for the tip of the pyramid. I could only kill my time by opening such a bookstore.”

Donnie was stunned. “Sir, why didn’t you try to switch to a different field of studies?”

“I am trying to study necromancy, but my foundations are not good and my mind is already shaped. Everything is difficult.” The boss did not say anything more and simply hinted Donnie to leave.

Donnie walked on the street ignorantly. His head was filled with the boss’ words and his previous thoughts. Gradually, they gathered into the same idea. I will not be covered in Mr. Evans’ halo. I will not be haunted by the complicated equations and formulas for the rest of my life. I will not talk about Lucien blah blah blah and Evans blah blah blah in my dream every night...

But... which field did not have the shadow of Mr. Evans?

Chapter 826: Reach

When Donnie returned to school, there was still a long time to go before the evening class. So, he hobbled back to his dormitory, trying to think about the problem more carefully.

“Where did you go?” Sammy was watching the home TV that was embedded on the wall on his bed with a fried chicken in his hands. Amused by the shows, he was unusually enlivened. The ghost behind him, on the other hand, crouched lazily, unwilling to move at all.

Donnie replied casually, “Didn’t I tell you? I went to the Triumph Square to get the Lucidity Necklace.”

Sammy scratched his messy hair and said, unbothered, “The sun at noon is too strong for me to keep myself awake. How could I remember what you said?”

As he spoke, the young man suddenly turned around and looked at Donnie. “Wait, did you say ‘Lucidity Necklace’? Have you saved enough money for a Lucidity Necklace?”

He finally noticed the key point.

Donnie said in a self-mocking smile, “How can I save enough money? There are few subsidies for apprentices and intern arcanists. We do not have many scholarships either. I only ran into a kindhearted bookstore owner this time...”

He told his friend what happened.

Sammy nodded and did not have any questions for Donnie’s experience. He barely considered anything deeply except arcana and magic.

After talking with Donnie, Sammy turned around and kept watching the TV. At this moment, the show was already over and replaced by a commercial, where a beautiful girl was displaying the convenient and beautiful clothes on her. Because of the increase of alchemical workshops and the change of social structure centered at the alchemy center Rentato, the fashion of clothes had greatly changed. They either became more simple and convenient for daily life or more complicated and exotic.

Being no stranger to Sammy's state, Donnie stood up, sat down, and lay on the bed, and repeated the process again and again anxiously, as he thought about his choice.

Donnie hadn't made up his mind after a long time. So, he coughed and said, "Sammy, there's something that I would like to ask you."

Sammy turned around again, and there was already tiredness on his face. "What is it?"

"I'm considering which magic college I should choose," Donnie said in a low voice.

Sammy frowned in confusion. "Haven't you decided to go to Holt a long time ago? You are not going to study the marvelous and profound microworld anymore?"

"I... probably won't. In the microscopic domain, almost half of the equations and formulas are prefixed with Evans or Lucien. They are so complicated that I am physically repulsed every time I see them..." Donnie said his thoughts frankly. In the end, he said, "I want to study something simpler, with fewer equations and formulas. I do not want to live in a nightmare called 'Lucien Evans' forever... What do you suggest?"

Sammy took a bite of the fried chicken. Not offering any comment on Donnie's idea of escaping from Lucien Evans, he simply said, "The microscopic domain today includes elements, electromagnetism, alchemy, light-darkness, and force fields. That's Mr. Evans' main battlefield. If you don't want to study it, I think you can only study macroscopic astrology..."

When he spoke "astrology", he turned his eyes to the bookshelf in a corner of their dormitory, where the books that they borrowed from the library and their textbooks in the past five years were piled.

“A Brief Review of the Special and the General Theories of Relativity”, “Evans Analysis of the Starry Sky of Destiny”, “Divinity and Evans Essence Model”, “Lucien Astrology”... The names of those books jumped into Sammy’s eyes and choked him. “Not the school of astrology... It’s also Mr. Evans’ territory. Although it’s not as bad as the microscopic domain, I’m told that the Evans field equation alone has driven many astrologers mad.”

“Yes. The school of thermodynamics is similar...” Donnie rubbed his forehead in pain. “Now, necromancy, illusion, transformation, and summoning are the only fields that Mr. Evans hasn’t really influenced. Since I’m not a fan of summoning, I think I can only choose from necromancy, illusion, and transformation.”

Sammy’s eyes glittered. He stopped sending the fried chicken into his mouth and said, “Aren’t you very good at psychoanalysis in the field of illusion? Apply for the Tower of Wizards.”

“Psychoanalysis...” Donnie was delighted at first. Then, as if he remembered something, he turned to the bookshelf.

Interpretation of Dreams, by Lannister Stanis and Lucien Evans...

Behavioral Psychology, by Lucien Evans, Erica Lavinie, Isabella...

Sixteen Countermeasures to Deal with Personality Deficiencies, Psychological Shadows, and Real Illusions, by Lucien Evans...

Application of Lucien’s Personality Analysis in Illusion...

...

Donnie moved his eyes back and patted the bed hard, before he lowered his head in frustration. “It doesn’t work either. Although there aren’t so many equations and formulas, Lucien and Evans are still everywhere. Many definitions in this domain have been completed by Mr. Evans...”

Why is he everywhere?

Although it was much better than the microscopic and macroscopic domains, Donnie, who was subconsciously running away from it, was still too astounded to look at them again.

The ghost behind Sammy grew active, picking up and playing with the gadgets around him. Sammy, on the other hand, turned lackluster and said, "Then, only the schools of necromancy and transformation are left. Mr. Evans barely has any achievements in those two categories, except for the soul nature theory that does not have details and the life origin experiment that is more inclined to the school of elements.

"Also, necromancy and illusion require a profound understanding of the body structures of different creatures. So, apply for the Heidler College. The anatomy and biology here are the best in the Congress of Magic. Sometimes, Mr. Felipe would even come to teach in person. Besides, we will still be classmates."

He was already drowsy, but his eyes were full of passion when he said that. Because of the Back Spirit, he had been feared and hated by most people. The four-man dormitory now had only Donnie left. So, he cherished his rare friend.

"Necromancy... Transformation... Anatomy... Biology..." Donnie repeated the words and suddenly beamed with interest. "Although we have basically learned the truth of magic and the world, we actually do not know much about it yet. Even our own body structure and inheritance factors haven't been figured out yet. This is a field full of hope and passion!"

He grew excited.

Sammy smiled with obvious sleepiness. "Then, just apply for the Heidler College. There are dozens of founders and authorities of the field of anatomy and genetics, including Felipe, who will come to guide us from time to time."

Pausing for a moment, he said, "Also, since Mr. Felipe won an Evans Prize in Arcana and the Prize of Immortal Throne for the discovery of chromosomes a decade ago, there haven't been any groundbreaking achievements in this domain. So, it's getting less and less popular each year. With fewer applicants, the competition will be less intense."

Donnie nodded his head as he listened, growing more and more excited, as if he had found a path that he would stick to for the rest of his life.

He stood up and paced back and forth. Now and then, he clenched his fist and waved it, with his face sometimes delighted and sometimes twisted. It was not until a long time later that he finally took a deep breath and said with a shivering but firm voice, “Sammy, I’ve decided to apply for the Heidler College and study body structure and genetics factors in the school of necromancy!”

He felt that he no longer had any hesitation after saying that. The gloomy mist before him was cleared. He turned around to Sammy, only to discover that he had fallen asleep with his eyes closed. The ghost behind his back, on the other hand, was waving its arms, as if it was cheering for Donnie’s decision.

...

A week later, Mr. Slington gave everybody a form that was cast with magic power. He looked at all the students and said solemnly, “Please write the college and the fields that you are interested in for the additional tests. You must think carefully before you write anything down! You can ask for another form if you misspell a word, but after you finish it, the contract will be in effect, and there will be no regretting it unless you are willing to wait and take part in the College Entrance Exam next year.”

Donnie, who had figured everything out, took over the form calmly and looked around at his classmates. He saw that the beautiful elves with two pointy ears, the werewolves who were brawny and densely-haired, and the regular humans were all deep in thought. It was obvious that they hadn’t made up their mind yet.

Smiling, he picked up the special quill, dipped it in the ink, and wrote down the college and field he was interested in.

Seeing that Donnie wrote quickly and filled in the form so soon, Slington grew curious and stopped next to him to read his form.

“The Heidler College, school of necromancy, and body structure and genetics factors...” Slington scratched his beard and asked in confusion, “Donnie, have you learned something? Didn’t you prefer the microscopic domain? Why have you suddenly changed to the school of necromancy?”

“What have I learned...?” Donnie shook his head in confusion.

Slington chuckled. “Over the past year, a manuscript has raised extensive and heated discussions in Allyn, making many arcanists in the microscopic domain interested in genetics in the school of necromancy. I thought that it would take a year before the trend spread to magic schools and ordinary people.”

Thanks to the social development and the soaring radio stations, TV channels, and newspapers, entertainment shows and programs had completely dominated people’s life, and the contents that introduced arcana knowledge and current research trends were getting lesser and lesser. For most people, they did not need to learn the sophisticated arcana knowledge at all until it was transformed into the corresponding alchemical products that they could use.

The nobles and part of the sorcerers were quite satisfied with the situation, and they even secretly boosted it. After all, it was a good thing to reduce competitors, particularly when interstellar travels were still only limited to legends.

“Mr. Slington, what manuscript?” Donnie was still at a loss.

Slington smiled while holding his white beard. “It’s a manuscript that analyzes the body and genetics by an authority of the microscopic domain. It has abandoned the traditional methodology of the school of necromancy and regards the whole body and the genes as a whole arcana system. Then, based on the theories in the microscopic domain, many bold and genius speculations have been proposed, like the quantum explanation of genetics and the code of genetics. It raises the arcanists’ interest in the body structure on the microscopic level.”

Authority... An authority of the microscopic domain... Donnie suddenly felt that the magic lamp was dimmed, and an enormous shadow was rising from his back. He asked uneasily, “Master, what is the name of the manuscript? Who wrote it?"

"The name of the manuscript is 'What Is Life?'. " Slington smiled.
"As for its author, it's naturally Mr. Evans."

Boom.

Donnie's head hummed as if it had just been smacked by a hammer.

Why? Why is this field now within his reach too?

Chapter 827: Test Field

The cold wind of the night chilled the heart. Under the bright moon, Sammy felt that his head was much clearer than during the day when the sun was high.

However... He yawned again. He thought to himself that such a beautiful night should be left for sleeping, which was the greatest entertainment of life.

The ghost behind him extended its right hand. Before he reached the door, it had already been opened.

“Donnie, have you filled the form?” Sammy walked into the dormitory and asked casually, but he already knew the answer. Donnie would never have cold feet as long as he had made up his mind.

“Yes.” A depressed, lost, and lethargic voice came from a corner. Sammy could tell that something was not right despite his drowsiness. So, he looked over in surprise, only to discover that the light of the dormitory was still off. The bright moon shined through the glass window on the desk and the bookshelf, covering them in silver brilliance. Donnie, on the other hand, sat on his bed, with half of his face basked in the moonlight and the other half hidden in the deep darkness. He couldn’t have looked more depressive.

“What happened?” Sammy asked in surprise. Countless thoughts turned over in his head, only to be ruled out by him one after another.

In a low voice, Donnie said, “Mr. Evans has introduced quantum theory into body structure and genetics by regarding life as a whole arcana system. He believes that there is a most fundamental genetic unit that passes the information on to the next generation through duplication...”

His description was slow and stunned, as if it were his dream talk.

“Well...” As a talent of the school of necromancy, Sammy keenly sensed exciting content from the brief and inaccurate narration. That was an innovative and groundbreaking hypothesis. Arcanists would be filled with the passion to study life. After his excitement, he also frowned and said, “Does it mean that we have to study quantum theory as well as the formulas and equations?”

Was it still the school of necromancy that played with... no, studied the body and the soul?

Donnie seemed to be crying. “What you said will undoubtedly become a reality.”

“That explains why you...” Greatly enlightened, Sammy looked at Donnie sympathetically. “You must’ve learned it after you filled out the form, right?”

Donnie heaved a sigh. “Yes.”

If he wanted to make another choice, he would have to wait for the application next year, and his family conditions obviously did not allow him to do so.

“As a matter of fact, you can think from an alternative perspective. Since even Mr. Evans has started paying attention to the realm, it means that the realm boasts extremely high exploration and research value. With Mr. Evans’ guidance, there are bound to be plenty of creative and groundbreaking achievements. If we join the realm at such a time, we will earn copious returns. It’s just like the Atom Institution. Thanks to the crazy development of the microscopic domain, of the few major arcanists, two have become archmages, and the rest of them are all senior-rank sorcerers above the seventh circle.” Sammy comforted Donnie.

Donnie’s face was rather gloomy, and he opened his mouth many times only to come up with nothing. In the end, he could only smile bitterly.

“Hehe.”

.....

The sunlight in June was as enthusiastic as fire, and the test field of the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic was even hotter, like boiling oil.

Although apprentices who were admitted by the preliminary magic schools and successfully reached the fifth grade were considered elites decades ago, thanks to the development of arcana and magic, the ratio of such elites was getting higher and higher. If they went to study in magic colleges, the odds that they became official sorcerers were above fifty percent. They would turn from ordinary people into someone of the upper class with knowledge and power. Therefore, not only had the apprentices come to the test field in advance, but their parents, relatives, and friends had also gathered outside of the test field to cheer for them.

Since only a limited number of test fields had been set up, the place was jam-packed with people.

“For me, such an environment is like a grave.” Sammy looked around lethargically. This place was the Mills Noble School. It was one of the test fields for the College Entrance Exam.

Donnie intended to smile, only to discover that his facial muscles were rigid. “No, for you, graves are great places. They’re cold, quiet, and undisturbed. This place can hardly compare to that.”

“You seem a bit nervous?” Sammy raised his bloated eyes and looked at Donnie. He had been admitted by the Heidler College and therefore was not worried about the exam that was only part of the formalities. Of course, he could not give too bad a performance either, or his application wouldn’t pass the Committee of Arcana and Magic Education, which was a new committee established twenty years ago and led by both the Affair Committee and the Magic Research Board.

Donnie licked his dry lips and said, “Now that I’ve made a choice, I’ll have to do my best. Since it is unavoidable, I have to face the shadow bravely...”

He did not answer the question. Suddenly, the sunlight became dim, and the obstreperous crowd fell silent.

“What’s that?” Donnie raised his head subconsciously, only to see a silver aircraft floating in midair. It was as huge as dozens of common aircraft, blocking the sun and emitting a cold and dreamy sheen. Long and graceful, it slowly descended without any shaking.

“Such a huge aircraft? Also, it completely ignores the restraints of floating and flight skills. Its engine system must be a minimized fission device!” Sammy’s eyes bulged as he observed the aircraft with great interest, making a “professional” judgment.

For the children who grew up after the beginning of the arcana calendar, which was 830 of the divine calendar as well as the year of Viken’s demise, it was their common wish to have their own aircraft. The alchemical cars that ran on the ground were simply too crude and hideous!

Therefore, the journal “Aircraft” had always been a bestseller.

Donnie shared his passion for aircraft. With his anxiety soothed, he looked at the sky and said in amazement, “It must be a minimal fission device. At the very least, there’s no news about the success of controllable fusion devices yet... Mr. President, Mr. Evans, Mr. Fernando, Ms. Hathaway, Mr. Raventi, and Mr. Morris haven’t broken the obstacle yet...”

“Those who can afford the minimized fission devices can’t be general nobles. Even the common grand nobles can’t think about it either...” Sammy squinted under the sunlight. “Huh. Why is there no sigil? Is it blocked on purpose?”

Donnie looked carefully. “Indeed, there isn’t any, but a big shot must be inside nonetheless.”

The aircraft moved forward slowly and lowered its altitude, until it was parked on the unmanned square behind the teaching building, leaving everyone’s sight.

“Which sir has come to inspect the exam? Or has a big shot of extraordinary background come to take the exam?” Sammy moved his eyes back and became as pale as before. The ghost behind him, on the other hand, seemed to have melted into his body. It could barely be seen now.

Donnie was about to say that he did not know when the crowd was separated and a team of knights in silver armor, carrying weird black backpacks and cylindrical metal guns, walked by neatly. They were expressionless and intimidating. The people were so scared that none of them made any sound.

“It’s the Sword of Truth’s Knights!” Donnie noticed that the knights all had red and purple emblems on their chests. It was a crown made of cloud-like lines, next to a scepter that represented the ultimate power and a cold longsword. That was the badge of the Hoffenberg family.

Even more surprised, Sammy said, “It’s the Guardian Squad! They’re carrying the super-mini fission devices!”

The crowd was even quieter after they heard his words. The Guardian Squad was an elite team of the Sword of Truth’s Knights. They were dedicated to protection missions. Although not all the members were radiant knights, they were all equipped with super-mini fission backpacks and Gauss Rifles. The former could provide abundant electricity and triggering medium for the latter, thereby significantly lowering the demand to use a senior-rank item like the Gauss Rifle. So, in the Guardian Squad, even a level-four grand knight could use the Gauss Rifle many times.

“It seems that a certain big shot with a terrifying background has indeed come to participate in the College Entrance Exam...” Donnie said with complicated feelings.

The students here had all applied for the Heidler College. After the regular subjects were finished in the first three days, the additional tests on necromancy would be held here.

Clang!

A bell rang, urging the apprentices to enter the classrooms.

Donnie took a deep breath and looked at Sammy before he slowly walked into another teaching building.

.....

Inside a library where the sun was shining brightly...

A young man in a magic robe turned on the strange alchemical device the size of a desk with a smile. On the screen that looked like a water beam, the words "You're welcome to use artificial intelligence" appeared. Then, another interface was displayed, with many icons that were marked with different words.

The young man picked up a pair of metal plates that were connected to the artificial intelligence device and stuck them to his forehead before he clicked on the icon that read "Virtual Adventure".

Then, the young man felt that the bookshelf, the desk, and the sunlight around him faded off and was replaced by a green and refreshing grassland, on which there were plenty of bizarre-looking magic creatures.

"Developing games by combining illusion with artificial intelligence is the most thrilling achievement in the past five years!" The young man complimented again, "It's a pity that the network hasn't been established, and the artificial intelligence device is too expensive. There are too few players in the game. Otherwise, it would be exponentially more interesting."

The moment he finished his remark, he suddenly felt enormous pressure. He saw that a giant dragon whose whole body was in red flew by and glimpsed at him with its gold eyes as if he were an ant. Both his mind and his legs were trembling.

"Is... Is this the might of dragons?" The young man felt that his heart was beating particularly fast. He was very excited. That was how the might of dragons felt!

Right when his body was still frozen, a bull-like monster full of thorns passed by and looked at him greedily. Then, its body shook and launched dozens of sharp black thorns.

"Crap. I'm ambushed by the Anarchi Bull. My level is going to be lowered again..." the young man cried before he was hit in the heart by the thorns.

Unimaginable pain came over, making him think subconsciously, "The pain of the illusion is so real. It hurts!"

He suddenly felt that his body was cold and paralyzed. His heart seemed to have stopped beating. His head was in a mess, and he could see nothing but darkness.

Chapter 828: A Small Accident

Chapter 828: A Small Accident

After the examinations, which were held over three days in a row, the sky started getting cloudy, and now, it was drizzling, bringing a slightly cold feeling to the students.

“Donnie, how were the tests?” asked Sammy on the square of Mills Noble School. They were waiting for the sorcerers. In the past several days, Sammy finished all his tests, including for Magic Structure and Arcana Basics, in about half the given time, as he was always determined to go back to get more sleep.

Donnie looked at the busts on the square—they were the busts of all the most outstanding graduates from this school. He answered while pretending to be in a peace of mind, “I did okay. I checked with other students, and I think I should be qualified for Heidler Magic Academy. I’ll see how well I can do with this additional exam on Necromancy. You?”

In the early morning, Sammy was in a relatively good spirit. He yawned and stretched a bit. “No major mistakes. Not bad for me.”

He didn’t ask Donnie more about the exam, because when they were in school, even in Necromancy, Donnie was always more competitive than him in terms of magic theories and spell analysis. He only had the edge over Donnie in terms of casting speed, the power of casting, skipping-level casting, and some special abilities, and that was because of the specter behind his back.

In the drizzle, none of the apprentices left for the building to keep themselves warm and dry. In their minds, necromancers were known for their gloomy and unpredictable tempers as depicted by television channels, radio, and newspapers. It did not matter if they studied how to cure diseases or anatomy, they would still be the same. They were mysterious, and they also made people stand in awe of them.

“Jane Heinrich Hunt, countess, famous mathematician, astrologer...” Sammy read the words inscribed below one of the busts. “Nothing about this lady’s arcana or magic level. Maybe she’s below middle-rank. Maybe she’s a pure mathematician.”

“Nothing special. Mr. Longman just became a sorcerer the year before last, but he’s now already in the top twenty as a mathematician as he has solved a couple of mathematical problems put forward by His Excellency Mr. Evans,” said Donnie in great respect. “Although Mr. Longman isn’t very talented in magic, his great contribution to math is important. And now, he has lots of support and resources, and he’s catching up. We’re more gifted than him, so we should never easily give up. I think the lady is similar to Mr. Longman, and it looks like she’s a noble, a big one, from Heinrich family...”

Sammy nodded. “Also, with the development of ‘artificial intelligence’, many mathematicians who lack magic talent are already catching up because of their powerful calculation abilities.”

“I wish I also had one, to avoid those trivial and time-consuming math questions...” Donnie sighed.

“Wait, the surname, Hunt...” Donnie suddenly recalled something.

His tone suddenly rose a bit as he said, “Yes, that lady should be Mr. Ali Hunt’s wife.”

Ali Hunt, an encouraging name for both the ordinary and magic apprentices, was so far only a level one arcanist and a second-circle sorcerer.

However, when artificial intelligence first developed, he dug his first bucket of gold because of his sharp instinct. Later on, he even won the support of some werewolves and became their spokesperson. His original small company had now grown into a business empire, under which the subsidiary companies had covered magic communication, telephone communication, radio, satellite application, werewolf guards, and even mercenary hiring. Now, he was already one of the leading tycoons in Holm.

What made people even more jealous of him was the fact that he had married Jane from the Heinrich family. Since then, he was no longer just a lucky upstart but had won the support of the major noble family plus the werewolves.

For many ordinary people, it was like the most beautiful dream they could have. Although Mr. Evans' experience was, of course, more fascinating, it was too far away from them! However, in comparison, Ali's story seemed more likely to be copied, as he got all he had today because he caught the opportunity of this era. That could happen to anyone!

Then, with enough money, they could also learn magic!

"I see. No wonder..." Sammy commented with a sigh, and he took a glance at the clock on the magic tower and said in confusion, "It's almost eight. Why are we still waiting?"

Donnie also felt that it was a bit strange. The examinations for entering senior magic schools were under the supervision of the royal family of Holm, the cabinet, and the Committee of Arcana and Magic Education. So it was a pretty big deal.

At this time, several gloomy-looking sorcerers flew out of the building. Some of them were wearing Holm-style suits while others were wearing long, magic robes.

"Here they are." Donnie felt a bit more relaxed.

The leading sorcerer in a long, black suit said to them in a voice that was loud and clear enough for everyone to hear, "Those whose candidate numbers are of even numbers, please follow the sorcerer on the left to take the additional subject on specters, ghouls, and souls, and the rest of you follow your examiner on the right to take the exam on body structure, corpse combination, and summoning specters. And you'll switch in the afternoon. Don't even try to exchange information, as the tests will be different."

Donnie patted Sammy's shoulder. "I'll see you around."

He knew that they were in different groups.

"You're gonna nail it!" There was finally a big smile on Sammy's sleepy face as he wielded his right fist.

Donnie also grinned and responded with an encouraging gesture.

After walking past the first building, the apprentices started leaving the queue while following different sorcerers. In the end, Donnie started feeling the surroundings to be very quiet, and he could even hear the little birds chirping in the trees.

At this time, he saw the magic tower in front of them surrounded by a group of people in black uniform coats. They were blocking this place using alchemy barriers.

Cops on Granlin Street? Donnie's heart missed a beat. Did anything really happen?

Granlin Street was where the headquarters of the Holm Empire Police was located.

Then he saw two middle-aged men wearing the special badge walking out. On the badge, there was a black staff.

Donnie recognized them. They were sorcerers from the Punishment Department. He started getting a bit nervous, as sorcerers from this department were known for their investigation skills.

The necromancer walking in the front asked the apprentices to make way for the two sorcerers from the Punishment Department.

“... Asystole is the cause of death. The person who died had heart disease, pretty bad...” The sorcerer with brown hair was talking to his colleague as they were walking past the apprentices.

The other sorcerers nodded slightly. “He was off the leash playing virtual adventure and the illusion had triggered the dangerous amount of adrenaline secretion. Never saw people die like this before Ms. Heidi's artificial intelligence joined illusion. I guess Affair Committee and Magic Research Board now have a good excuse to pause such projects...”

“Having no idea about his own health condition... He had no one else to blame...” said the brown hair.

Donnie basically figured out what happened. He was quite surprised that a game based on artificial intelligence could kill a sorcerer.

But was there a conspiracy behind?

As a big fan of adventure and crime shows, Donnie was a typical conspiracist.

But this little accident did not bug Donnie for long, as he was facing this very important exam, and he should give the top priority to it.

They then walked in a cold, gloomy magic tower. At this time, a black-haired teenage girl walked in from the side door.

She was absolutely gorgeous. Although Donnie was worried about the exam, his attention was still caught by the girl's beauty. Although she had short hair, her face looked stunning, and her manner was also beyond elegant.

At this time, the girl's gentle silver-purple eyes suddenly became very sharp. The apprentices all looked down to avoid her eyes.

Donnie finally realized that the girl was wearing a simple black suit and a pair of trousers, as well as a black bow.

Wait, why was she dressed like this? And why did she have an Adam's apple?!

Boom!

Donnie felt his head buzzing. The "girl", who was much more beautiful than all the ladies he had ever seen, was a male!

Someone coughed, and there was more coughing that followed that. Donnie knew that he was not the only one who got shocked.

"Go into your test room following your own candidate number," said the necromancer with gray hair. "You'll have to identify the materials and which part it is. Then, you'll design and make a stitched body. You may leave spare materials if you don't need them, but don't take them with you."

Donnie sobered up as a sudden chill ran over him. He quickly found his room, and the teenage boy was right in the room beside his.

Chapter 829: Dangerous Exam

Chapter 829: Dangerous Exam

The magic crystal lights hung down from the ceiling and made this gloomy room look even paler. A chill ran over Donnie's body, and he felt that he had entered some haunted old castle.

But this also helped him stay concentrated and forget about the teenage boy he just saw. Donnie started looking around.

To the left side of this room, there was a long table that was loaded with all kinds of materials. Some were in magic containers, some were in vacuum magic circles, and some were wrapped in green leaves. However, there was nothing to the right side, not even a carpet.

"Mercury, low-rank Repose Stone powder..." Donnie gently closed the door and walked to the table. He instantly recognized the basic materials for building a magic circle.

He sprinkled sunflower powder over the silver candlestick and lit the candles up carefully. In the same great caution, he picked up a glass bottle full of black liquid and put it closer to the candlelight.

Lit by the candle, the patterns on the surface of the glass bottle appeared, and in the black liquid, a creepy eyeball without a pupil emerged.

After carefully looking at the shape of the eyeball and the magic patterns on the glass bottle, he picked up the quill-pen and wrote down.

"A mutant ghoul's eyeball..."

Putting down this glass bottle, Donnie turned to look at the vacuum magic circle and saw an arm wrapped in greasy, light brown bandages.

Donnie's eyes slightly lit up as a mummy's arm was very precious.

Heidler Magic Academy was indeed very well-off. To make a mummy, there should be a mysterious burying ritual that had been passed down since the Age of Mythology. Therefore, a mummy was often very strong among all undead creatures in terms of magic resistance and defense. Even a real sorcerer rarely had the chance to have a mummy to be his specter servant.

Donnie wrote down the answer, but he couldn't help but stare at the mummy arm. It was his first time seeing a real one.

From the bandages and exposed skin, the mummy didn't look like a very powerful one, but it was still a mummy! Also, the materials for producing a stitched body could be recycled... Maybe that was why the academy was being this generous.

Like this, Donnie identified the parts of different magical creatures one by one,

“Stinky murloc lymph...”

“The front claw of a werewolf...”

“The skull of a goblin...”

“The back hoof of a demonized goat...”

It took Donnie half an hour to finish the work and then he started working on his own stitched body following the instructions.

He kept changing the design, so it took him a long time to finish the stitching. Swallowing, he took a glance at the clock on the wall. He knew that he had to hurry up, or he wouldn't have any spare time for correcting the design if anything went wrong...

He started drawing the magic circle using mercury.

As an apprentice, his spiritual power was not enough to complete this magic circle from the very beginning all the way toward the end, and the exam would not allow them to take potions. He had to do this part by part.

After an hour, Donnie was gasping hard on the floor, waiting for his spiritual power to recover again after over a dozen times of exhaustion. He then stood up and put the materials he picked in the magic circle in the right spots. He picked the mummy arm, the mutant ghoul's eyeball, a little demon's wings, and specter dust.

Donnie checked multiple times before activating the magic circle, in case he made any mistakes.

This was the key moment of his life. If he did it, he would enter Heidler Academy, the most authoritative magic school for necromancy, and his future would be beyond promising. However, if he failed, he could end up becoming one of those countless common magic apprentices who would become a consultant for a businessman or the police force. Indeed, those weren't bad jobs, but they wouldn't be able to provide him with high social status.

He was only seventeen, and he did not want a plain life.

Great desire seized Donnie's heart like fire. He had all those desires for knowledge, for life, and for a better future.

And it all depended on this exam!

He knelt down in front of the magic circle and pressed his hands against the core section. His blue eyes lit up slightly from using all of his spiritual power.

The magic circle lit up, and the black magic symbols started sucking in the Repose Stone powder like crazy. The magic circle was then overwhelmed by the pale light, and the magic gems cracked one by one.

He felt great pain after activating the magic circle in his brain, and he was pushed away by the power. However, he did not care, and his eyes kept staring at the magic circle.

The pale light slowly faded away, and in the middle of the magic circle, there was an intimidating monster with wings. It had a lion head, and its left arm was wrapped with greasy, light brown bandages. Its body consisted of chunks of flesh stitched together.

The monster stood up, although it had not found its full balance. Its pupil-less eyeball took a glance at Donnie, which immediately took all his strength away.

Fortunately, the monster then lowered its head and just stood there in great respect.

Yes! Donnie wielded his arm, and his heart was full of wild joy.

However, he suddenly sensed the air of death. A chill ran over his body.

Out of his consciousness, Donnie dodged to the side and commanded his stitched body to go in front of him.

Bang!

The wall was collapsed by a fierce punch, and he felt the blood and flesh everywhere.

He was so stunned that his eyes opened wide. In the flying dust, a monster about two to three meters tall ran in and had punched his stitched body into pieces.

The body from next door was not even like a proper stitched body. All the parts were just put together without any order. Eyes were on its arms, and head in the belly. The monster had thick black miasma surrounding it.

Meanwhile, its intimidating, horrible air made Donnie's stitched body keep trembling even though it could not think and had no intelligence.

Donnie felt that he was in an ice hole. He tried to defend himself using spells, but he did not have any spare spiritual power after making the stitched body.

What was going on?

What did she, no, he, make?! That was dreadful!

He had to depend on himself until an examiner came.

Although he knew it, knowing it did not do much help. Facing the intimidating air, Donnie could not even move his single finger. His heart sank, as it was full of desperation.

He once met a level two knight, but even the knight's power was nowhere close to the monster's power.

It took him lots of work to make this stitched body, and he was this close to entering the magic school. And now, he was going to die here!

Donnie could smell the stink from the monster's mouth.

At this time, an arm wrapped in light brown bandages came between them and stuck into the mouth in the monster's belly.

Donnie was a bit touched by what his stitched body did. He then seized the chance and dodged aside. He took a deep breath and tried his very best.

“Help!!!”

Yes, that was all he could do; a bitter cry at the top of his lungs to catch the attention of the examiner.

He saw the monster's mouth chewing the mummy arm.

Donnie's mouth was wide open due to great shock. The monster could even chew a mummy arm!

When the eyes on the monster's arm opened again, Donnie saw the dark red pupils. He felt totally numb in his body, and he couldn't even talk now.

This is the end of me, Donnie thought to himself.

At this time, a beautiful face popped out in front of him,

“Sorry, my experiments always go wrong somehow. My father said that it's because of my talent and also because I'm not able to control it yet...”

It was a charming, male voice; a standard male voice.

That was Donnie's first thought when faced with this great danger. He believed there was something wrong with this world.

"I tried to make it fly, you know. But who knows... Ha..." The teenage boy scratched his head with a big smile on his face as he said, "But this is actually not a big deal. You know last time when I..."

Donnie's brain was in a total mess. With great effort, Donnie stammered, "Be... care... ful..."

At this time, the monster in black miasma had come behind the teenager!

Donnie could not imagine why this guy could just talk so much when faced with such danger!

"I know, I know... I'll be more careful next time with my experiment. Thank you very much. I promise I'll be more careful in the future. I'm very sorry for putting you into this. By the way, I haven't introduced myself..." The beautiful teenage boy wouldn't stop talking.

Donnie stammered again; his tongue was already out of his control. "Mon... monster..."

The teenage boy's sleepy silver-purple eyes suddenly looked rather sharp. Turning around, he faced the monster right in its face. He then suddenly dropped down his shoulders and hit the monster with his own body violently.

A light somehow burst out. The monster took a few steps backward, and all its parts started falling onto the ground and rotted away into a pile of mud.

What... Donnie's mouth dropped open again. He wondered why this guy did not choose to be a knight.

"Problem solved." The teenager turned around and said in embarrassment, "I'm sorry to put you through this. My name's Brades. My father gave me the name with the hope that I can be happy, but I prefer people to call me 'Karl', which means a real man...

"I've also got a brother whose name's Barzel. He looks nice, but he's full of mischievous ideas. Other people say that that's because he resembles my father, but I don't think so..."

Donnie wished that Karl could first help pull him up from the floor before making such a long introduction.

Chapter 830: Karl

Chapter 830: “Karl”

While Donnie was still struggling to stand up, the sudden knock interrupted them, and they both turned to look at the door.

The door was half open, as half of the wall it was in had collapsed. The examiner wearing the ancient magic robe was looking at them with an expressionless face.

Donnie’s face also felt numb, but he really wanted to ask him what took him so long to arrive, just like what often happened in those TV series that cops and knights always came so late after all the problems had been solved.

The gray-haired necromancer held a black notebook in his hand, and the way he looked at them was rather cold. He started writing on his notebook as he said, “Mutant stitched body, made from mostly low-rank materials... Power close to grand knight level. Best among these years. But the body was out of control, so some scores should be taken away...

“Common stitched body, fully used the mummy arm... Power equivalent to a knight... Stopped the mutant stitched body twice. Very good for an apprentice, and the body was under the absolute control of the maker...”

Donnie was shocked. So the examiner was just looking? Why didn’t he help? Did he trust Karl that much? Or was it also a test?

“So, that means we passed?” Brades, who preferred to be called Karl, asked in surprise, “In fact, I tried out ‘the Original Body’ when I was making it, to make it fly, but it turned out...”

He kept talking and talking, which made Donnie feel totally speechless. Basically, he admitted that he did not plan on making a mutant stitched body and that this whole thing was just an accident. It turned out that the thing was a twisted, weird dead body with unusual strength! How could he confess that?

The necromancer had amber-colored eyes, and they looked a bit muddy. He looked down at his notes and said in a rather peaceful tone, “You two could make them, which means both of you know the materials well.”

Donnie finally realized that his answer paper had been destroyed by the miasma of the monster, but fortunately, the examiner could tell it.

“The result will be available with the rest of the subjects. Check them on your own later,” said the necromancer who had put away his notebook as he had zero interest in sharing Karl’s fascination.

After the necromancer turned around, he paused and said, “It does work better shouting out ‘help’ than relying on yourself...”

Donnie’s face flushed instantly. His cries were so anguished that they were much worse than the cries of those girls who saw ghosts in school. And he had always considered himself fairly calm most of the time.

But it also relaxed his body. He could finally stand up.

“Sorry I didn’t help you there. I was so caught up in my self-introduction. How do you feel? Move your arms and legs. See if there’s anything wrong,” said Karl.

His silver-purple eyes looked gentle again, and they were like two shining ponds in the sunlight. Donnie had to look away. The world had been confusing to him.

“It seems that you’re mentally traumatized. It shouldn’t be like this... A mutant stitched body shouldn’t be able to hurt you mentally, apart from the deterrence of death... Did I miss anything?” Karl murmured.

But he soon grinned and said, “I know. You’re just startled. Sorry. The examiner just interrupted my self-introduction. I’m Brades, and my father gave me the name, which means ‘a happy person’ in the common tongue, but I actually prefer...”

Donnie hurriedly cut him off, “‘Karl’. You prefer people to call you

Karl. I know.”

“Very good! You’re the first one who remembers my name so fast!” Karl smiled, and his eyes were like two crescents. “So, my biggest target right now is to become a real man. I don’t know your name yet, but I suppose you’re a student from Nature’s Heart, right? Look at the magic robe on you. Are there many elves in your school? Last time, when I visited Stroop Forest, the Elder told me that more and more elves started to accept human beings and that they were willing to seek a sustainable way of living with human beings...”

“I’m Donnie,” Donnie answered straightaway. Karl’s face and his charming male voice bugged him. He wished that Karl could just stand there and remain silent.

“We should go now. The exam has ended,” said Donnie.

Karl clapped his hands and nodded. “You’re right. We can talk on our way. Your stitched body was good, but you can use some theories at a higher level, say, the Original Body. I used it.”

“What is it?” Donnie asked out of curiosity.

“The Original Body came from the rite called ‘Life Traceback’ and the concept of ‘Origin’ in the ancient Meshkate Empire. They believed that...” Karl went on and on and still had not finished when they walked out of the magic tower. “His Excellency Thanatos became a top legendary because of his success in making ‘the Original Body’...”

That wasn’t something that Donnie could get to know from the radio, Tv programs, or even his teachers. Although the many concepts made his head dizzy, he was still showing great interest. The only thing he wished was that Karl could be briefer.

At this time, he suddenly realized that this wasn’t some kind of information that an apprentice should know. Was Karl someone important? Were there knights or guards secretly protecting him nearby?

He looked around, as if those guards were staring at him behind the trees along the street and that they were pointing their Gauss rifles toward him.

Fine beads of sweat began to form on his forehead, and he felt a bit cold in his back.

“Donnie, you got it?” Karl asked him.

Donnie stammered, “What... What?”

“You didn’t get it? Fine. I’ll start all over, no worries.” Karl looked even more excited now.

Donnie’s head buzzed. “I think I’ve got a general picture.”

“I see.” Karl stopped himself, feeling a bit disappointed. When he was not happy, he looked much more serious and dignified.

Donnie was even more nervous now. He wondered if the guards would pull their triggers anytime. Would he be left with a complete body?

“You know... Actually, I think you’re more like a knight. I think your strength can compete with that of a grand knight.” Donnie tried to switch the topic. In his mind, he believed that Karl was as strong as a dragon.

Karl looked a bit shy. “I’m okay.”

He then wielded his right hand and casually hit a tree beside them.

Bang!

The tree snapped right in the middle and collapsed to the ground.

Donnie almost dropped his chin.

“That’s my best, you see? Only a tree.” Karl laughed and patted Donnie’s shoulder.

Donnie felt that his guts almost came out.

Karl looked more serious now as he said, “A knight always has to face the ultimate problem sooner or later, which is to face himself and explore himself. Therefore, arcana and magic are the most important. Also, what makes me want to go to the Heidler Magic Academy is that I'm trying to change my look by modifying my 'genes'. Well, you know 'gene', right? It's a concept put forward in the manuscript called 'What Is Life'. Have you ever read it? It's a masterpiece in the microscopic domain as..."

The muscles in Donnie's face twitched slightly when Karl did not leave him a chance to answer anger. He hurriedly asked before Karl went even further, "Change your look? I know many magic potions that can do this. I think you can afford these kinds of potions. They're permanent."

"Well, don't you think I'm actually quite good-looking?" Karl smiled.

The smile made Karl's face look even more gorgeous. Donnie could only nod, feeling stunned.

Karl continued, "Those kinds of magic potions will do too much to my perfect face. What I'm trying to do is to make myself look more like a man, but not doing any fundamental changes! Then I'll be a very good-looking man! I've always had this wish. My mother wished that she would have a daughter when she was pregnant..."

"What does that have to do with your mom?" Donnie was feeling less nervous now that he realized he basically didn't have to do anything as long as he was willing to listen. Karl was willing to share everything, and in this perspective, he was very easy-going.

Karl looked at Donnie and said, "Like spiritual power, willpower can also change matters, and thus, change genes..."

He was about to give a lecture again.

"That's quite a powerful and horrible willpower..." Donnie blurted out.

Karl chuckled dryly and said, "I gotta leave now. I'll see you at the Heidler Magic Academy. I'm sure you'll get in because of your stitched body...”

Karl walked away, leaving Donnie there alone.

Donnie felt that Karl was in fact very easy to get along with.

At this time, Donnie suddenly recalled something. Karl told him that a mutant stitched body shouldn't be able to hurt him mentally, apart from the deterrence of death... But how did Karl get to know that?

Donnie was totally lost.

Behind one of the biggest trees along the street, a knight had put away his rifle and said in low voice to someone else via an alchemical item, “Find his information. Don't miss anything. We gotta be cautious.”

Chapter 831: Casually Confessed Secret

Chapter 831: Casually Confessed Secret

The cool rain drizzled on Donnie's face, making him gradually come back to himself. He shook his head. "It can't be what I thought. His behavior showed anomalies. Such a gentle and friendly man can't be..."

Donnie slowly turned around and walked out of the Mills Noble School. He intended to take a good rest in the dormitory to get himself prepared for the additional tests on ghosts, spirits, and souls in the afternoon.

He did not wait for Sammy because he knew very well that Sammy must've left an hour ago after he finished the exam. This was the field that Sammy was best at, and it was also the most mentally exhausting one. He wouldn't be able to control his desire for sleep.

As he expected, after Donnie returned to his dormitory, he found Sammy snoring on the bed. The ghost on his back was also rather lazy and unenergetic since it was noon.

Donnie couldn't help but smile at the familiar Sammy. His anxiety and concerns were greatly soothed. Pouring himself a glass of water and drinking it up, he lay on his own bed and stared at the ceiling. "He rode on an aircraft that was equipped with minor fission devices, and he was protected by the Guardian Squad of the Sword of Truth's Knights. Karl definitely has a special identity. Is he the heir of a certain grand noble? No. He has a brother..."

"Thanks to Karl, the stitched body I crafted today was highly praised by the teacher. As long as my performance isn't too bad in the afternoon, I will probably be admitted by the Heidler Magic College. With Karl's background, he will probably be admitted by the college..."

Donnie sighed in the middle of his fantasies. "If he were a girl, everything would be perfect. None of the commercial girls between TV programs can compare to him..."

The world was truly malicious!

He took a deep breath and eliminated his messy thoughts, allowing him to enter a deep-level sleep with meditation tricks so that he could be revitalized for the afternoon tests.

In the afternoon, Donnie came to the Mills Noble School on the special bus again. Led by the gray-haired necromancer in the morning, he entered a graveyard nearby.

He looked around, hoping to find Karl. However, many students were taking the exam, and they were scattered in the spacious graveyard and blocked by tombstones and trees. It was barely possible to locate a specific person. However, when he summoned and drove ghosts, Donnie suddenly heard a distant and scary scream that sounded like it came from a terrifying wrath. Together with the scream were cries for help.

Hehe. Karl is here for the exam after all. Who's so unlucky? However, since the teacher is here, there shouldn't be any problem, Donnie thought with a gloating smile on his face. Not to mention that there are still Karl's "Guardians"...

As he expected, the terrifying scream of spirits soon died down.

Since souls and spirits were not Donnie's best field, he calmed himself down and was devoted to his own tests. He modified, commanded, and adjusted the ghosts prudently until he felt that it was perfect before asking the necromancer to review his works. As a result, by the time he left the cemetery, Karl was long gone, which slightly upset him. Although Karl was a man, it was always a pleasant experience to see him.

"Donnie, how is your work?" The moment Donnie returned to the Mills Noble School from the cemetery, he heard Sammy calling him. The evening of a gloomy day was particularly dim, so Sammy was in high spirits. His ghost no longer hid in the shadows anymore. It was waving its fuzzy arms and creaking.

Donnie smiled. "I'm 90% confident."

He was talking about his confidence to be admitted by the Heidler Magic College.

Sammy rubbed his messy hair and chuckled. "I am 100%. Right, Donnie, now that the exam is over, our dormitory will be reclaimed. I will return to Wolfburg. What about you? Are you going home or staying in Rentato for now to wait for the final result?"

He was a native of Wolfburg, a southern city.

Hearing Sammy's words, Donnie immediately thought of his parents and his sister. He couldn't have missed them more, but he quickly shook his head and pointed at his neck where there were no accessories with a bitter smile. "I have to work in Rentato for two months to pay for the Lucidity Necklace that I borrowed."

He signed a contract with the bookstore owner.

"Is that so?" Sammy asked in surprise. He had obviously forgotten what Donnie told him earlier. However, he quickly dropped it and went on, "I'm here to tell you that you can apply for a dormitory, as long as you move out before September so that the new apprentices can move in."

"Really?" Donnie had been wondering where he could find a cheap residence. He was both surprised and delighted, and his sorrow was gone.

"So, you've saved a great amount of money. You have to buy me dinner!" Sammy said jokingly.

He did not feel that sad that they were graduating and departing from each other because he believed that he would see Donnie again in the Heidler Magic College.

.....

The next morning, Donnie went to the office of his school to apply for a dormitory. After he listed his poor conditions and his excellent study performance, the sympathetic elf teacher quickly granted his request. Then, without any rest, he went to the Triumph Square and entered the Knowledge Bookstore.

Dollos, the owner of the bookstore who had owl eyes, glanced at Donnie. “I thought you were going to break the contract.”

“I was delayed by something in school. Here is your Lucidity Necklace.” Donnie handed the Lucidity Necklace back to the boss. Without the Lucidity Necklace, his review and consolidation in the last three months couldn’t have been so effective.

Dollos nodded. “You will wipe all the bookshelves and spines today.”

After that, he hurried to greet a new guest who just came in.

Donnie was not a spoiled child. He found a piece of cloth in a corner and began to work.

As he wiped, he read the titles of the books. Reading was his greatest hobby.

“‘Evans Instructions’, ‘Lucien’s Guidance’, ‘Detailed Explanations of the Questions in the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic by Lucien Evans’...” Looking at the row of books, Donnie felt that the veins on his forehead were suddenly bulging. He was so agitated and nauseated that he almost burned them up.

Donnie had the same feelings when he saw the tests on his own bookshelf in his dormitory. Had it not been for the fact that he could earn a lot by selling those books as well as his solutions, he would’ve set them on fire.

“Why is the nightmare still haunting me here?”

Thankfully, the Knowledge Bookstore only had one row that was about tests, or Donnie suspected that he would go crazy.

It was already noon after he cleaned half of the bookshelves. Dollos turned on the home TV embedded on the wall and watched “Noon of the Empire”, a news program.

“Considering the two cases of sudden death when the sorcerer was playing virtual adventure games, Master Karu, most famous for his fraternity, has filed an application to the Affair Committee and the Magic Research Board, asking them to abort the funding for the project of ‘Virtual Magic Exercise’. He believes that the project has serious safety problems and that the combination of artificial intelligence, alchemical life, and illusion will definitely go wrong. The project should not be activated until the arcanists behind the project propose practical precautions.”

The anchor was a black-haired and blue-eyed Holmish lady, pretty with a pleasant voice.

“Ms. Heidi, the arcanist who is responsible for the ‘Virtual Magic Exercise’ project publicly states that the two sudden death cases do not contradict the principle of ‘virtual reality’, and what is needed is a body examination before the stimulation with illusion. She believes that Master Karu’s attack is absurd and illogical. It’s like when somebody drives off a cliff in an alchemical car after getting drunk, he is calling for a total ban on alchemical cars instead of forbidding drunk driving.

“The arcanists have been debating fiercely on the matter. Right now, the Affair Committee is more inclined to control the promotion of the ‘Virtual Magic Exercise...”

Donnie heard the news in the middle of his work. Finding it odd, he blurted out, “How is this happening?”

Under normal circumstances, as Mr. Evans’ student, Ms. Heidi’s project shouldn’t have been attacked so hard.

As if he guessed Donnie’s confusion, the boss chuckled. “After writing ‘What Is Life?’, it is said that Mr. Evans left our world with the empress and went to another universe for adventure to seek the path of immortality. Right now, the prince is the regent of the country. After certain things are figured out in the adventure, it is possible that the empress will return and give away the throne.”

In the first year of the arcana calendar, the Kingdom of Holm obtained the Holy City as well as all the papal states. So, “empress” was added to Natasha’s titles.

“Wow... We can go to a parallel universe for adventures now?”

Donnie asked in confusion and shock.

“What do you think Mr. Evans has been working on in the past twenty years besides quantum field theory?” Dollos seemed to be rather informed.

Donnie was suddenly reinvigorated. “Are they going to the universe that intersects with ours?”

“How is it possible? When we go to that universe, the ocean of energy we count on will be no longer usable because of the quick fluctuations. Other than the demigods who partly grasp the secrets of high dimensions, the other demigods wouldn’t have much strength left after they go there.” The boss chuckled. “However, even if they go to other parallel universes, their strength will also be greatly reduced. I wonder if Mr. Evans has solved the problem in his research. After all, I’m told that only the top legends can be taken away by the demigods.”

“Alright...” Donnie suddenly felt that his horizon was broadened. This world included not just the Rentato he lived in, but also the vast cosmos and the countless parallel universes. There were too many places he could explore.

So, there was no telling when Mr. Evans or Her Majesty would return from their exploration? That could explain the situation. For the grand arcanists, it was very common for them to be engaged in field research. They wouldn’t tell anyone on purpose, and naturally, the TV channels, radio stations, and newspapers did not know anything about it.

Shaking his head, Donnie went on wiping, and he reached a corner, where a row of books on the theories of the school of necromancy was placed.

“It’s a shame that none of the books are about specific applications. Otherwise, I can try to analyze them right now.” Donnie sighed regretfully. Under the government of the Congress of Magic, arcana theories were not confidential, and everybody was welcome to study and discuss them. However, the specific magic application and alchemical tricks could only be exchanged when they had clearances, like when they became students of a certain magic college.

As he wiped, Donnie suddenly saw a book with a black spine. On the cover of the book, written in the language of the ancient Magic Empire was...

Parchment of Death.

This is... Donnie's heart beat fast. It seemed to be a magic book about an application?

Chapter 832: A Dense Net

A magic book on an application?

How could it be publicly sold in a bookstore?

Donnie seemed able to hear his own heart beating intensely and crazily. As per the regulations of the Congress of Magic, other than exchanging for such knowledge in magic colleges and arcana libraries, there were only two ways to obtain the applications that exceeded their own levels—to gain it from adventures or family heritage, or to become a personal student of a certain sorcerer. There had never been a common bookstore that publicly sold magic books!

It was the Congress' control measure on magic to maintain the social order, which was greatly supported by the nobles.

“If... If I can analyze a first-circle spell in advance or become an official sorcerer, my future in the Heidler Magic College will be even brighter...” Donnie felt that his heart was jumping out of his chest.

He was not born in a magic family, and he did not go through any fortuitous incidents. He had reached where he was purely with his hard work. He did not have as many resources as his classmates did, but he believed that it wouldn't be difficult for him to analyze the official spells with his talents.

Donnie quietly looked at the counter, only to discover that Dollos was fixated on the TV. So, his heart beat even faster.

“With my ability in memorizing, I can remember a complete model in one minute...” Donnie touched the back of the book.

The cover of the magic book was made of special materials, giving a cold and paralyzing feeling as if it were a bolt of frozen lightning.

The itchy feeling stunned Donnie. Then, he breathed heavily.

After that, he opened his mouth and breathed hard, moving his hand back as if his arm was being cut off.

In another three months, I'll be learning the first-circle spells and the applications legitimately in the Heidler Magic College. Why do I have to read the book stealthily and cowardly right now?

If I am caught, I will be thrown into a prison, and my future will be ruined.

The returns are absolutely disproportionate to the risks. Is there any need to hesitate?

The more Donnie thought, the more he felt that he was overwhelmed by a desire just now. This Parchment of Death was perhaps an ancient book that was only of reference value in the Congress today!

After all, magic had been soaring since the establishment of the Congress, and particularly during the past fifty years. Most of the achievements in the Magic Empire had already become antiques. It was barely possible for anyone to pick up an ancient classic and beat the contemporary sorcerers with the knowledge in the book as his trump card.

Getting rid of his desire, Donnie subconsciously wiped his forehead, only to feel coldness. He raised his head in shock, only to discover that he still had the piece of cloth, which was used to wipe bookshelves, in his hand.

“It’s like somebody cast Chaos on me...” Donnie shook his head in self-mockery. Then, he looked at the Parchment of Death, hesitating. Selling an applied magic book seemed to be a violation of the rules of the Congress and the law of the empire. What should he do?

Report it to the Punishment Department or the police department?

What if it wasn’t an applied magic book?

Donnie hesitated for a long time and gnashed his teeth. He then walked to his boss, Dollos. From the corner of his eye, he glimpsed at the few guests in the bookstore, ready to stop anyone who would approach the bookshelf where the Parchment of Death was placed. If somebody else reported it, he would be in trouble. Thankfully, the few guests all turned a blind eye to the row. Donnie was greatly relieved.

“Boss,” Donnie said next to Dollos in a low voice.

Dollos turned around expressionlessly. “What’s up?”

“There’s a ‘Parchment of Death’ on that bookshelf. Did you forget to bring it away?” Donnie had practiced saying it many times in his heart, but it still sounded dry and dumb when he actually said it.

Dollos’ face suddenly became enlivened. He said in a feigned smile, “Yes. That’s my trophy from one of my adventures. I forgot to take it away when I rearranged the bookshelves last night. Donnie, thank you for your reminder. I’ll take it back right now.”

Donnie was greatly relieved that Dollos solved the matter with the excuse he offered instead of denying it and describing the Parchment of Death as a history book. In such a case, the boss wouldn’t need to kill him to keep his mouth shut because he knew too much. He had to be cautious because there were many similar plots in the TV dramas.

Dollos slowly rose, took out the Parchment of Death, and put it on the counter, before he smiled gently and said, “It’s noon. Go take care of your lunch. I will not offer you free food and accommodation, but of course, your reminder is worth additional reward at the end of the month.”

“It’s my responsibility. That... that is unnecessary!” Donnie hurried to wave his hands, but Dollos did not say anything more. He could only walk out of the bookstore as he searched for the cheapest food in the alleys near the Triumph Square.

Watching him disappear in the crowd in the square, Dollos touched the Parchment of Death and put on an interesting smile.

Under Dollos’ touch, the Parchment of Death suddenly emitted a cold and evil flash.

One of the guests in the Knowledge Bookstore pressed his soft hat and glanced at Dollos before he walked out.

...

It was not evening yet, but Donnie asked to get off work early from the Knowledge Bookstore because he intended to send a letter to his family in the post office.

Although wired phones and telegrams had been popularized in major cities, Donnie's family was in a small town and wasn't rich enough. So, they still had to count on the postal services that were cheaper.

Considering that his family did not know too many words—most of which had been taught by himself—Donnie's letter was very simple. He told them how his exam went, the magic college he chose, the arrangements for the coming months, and asked about the situation in the family. So, when he gave the letter to the staff in the post office, he did not need extra stamps.

"How many days will it take before the letter arrives? When can I get a letter back?" Donnie had sent a few letters during the past years, and he had sent letters at different times every time. So, he had to ask about the information.

The staff looked at the address on the envelope without a smile. "Normally, it will take five days. As for when you can get a letter back, that is not something we can control."

Although it was sarcasm, Donnie was still amused. It was rare for him to encounter such a humorous clerk. This bald man was much more fun than he appeared.

After Donnie left, the bald man suddenly picked up Donnie's letter and walked backward. Soon after he left, a middle-aged man came back, rubbing his belly and complaining, "Why is my stomach so funny today? Aya, no, I need to go to the toilet again! Somebody fill in my place!"

In the storage room behind the post office, the bald man wiped the envelope with his right hand, and the sealed envelope was opened, revealing the letter inside.

“Nothing special...” The bald man unfolded the letter as he muttered to himself. He then wrote something down on a notebook quickly.

After recording it, he folded the letter again and put it back into the envelope flawlessly. Then, he took out a seal and sealed the envelope casually.

...

In a town near the Stroop Forest...

Dum, dum, dum.

Somebody knocked on the door.

“Who is it?” A girl with flaxen hair was busy preparing the dinner.

“Postman. There’s a letter addressed to your family.” A strange male voice came over.

The girl was briefly stunned. She looked out of the window, and since it was dusk, there were still plenty of people on the street. So, she opened the gate without concerns. “A letter addressed to my family? From where?”

“Rentato.” The postman was a plain-looking man whose face would be easily forgotten.

“Rentato? It’s from my brother!” Refreshed, the girl immediately opened the letter after she took it over.

The postman did not stop her but secretly observed the room. A beetle crawled out of his pants into a gap on the wood floor.

...

At the mayor’s house...

A stranger looked at the old man on his opposite side solemnly and said, "I need to check the files of everybody in this town."

"Yes, sir." The old mayor did not know what was going on, but he recognized the identification and the sigil.

...

In the city hall of Rentato...

A few clerks were standing before a renowned big shot respectfully.

"I need the files of all the bookstores in Rentato," the big shot, who headed an important department in the empire, said seriously.

"Yes, my lord," the clerks answered at the same time.

...

In the Allyn magic tower in the City in the Sky...

"Good afternoon, mister." The arcanist who supervised the library of sorcerers' files rose and bowed in respect. The visitor was a member of the Affair Committee with an emblem of black fire on his chest.

"I'm here to retrieve Dollos' files that are available according to my permissions..." the member said casually.

"Yes, of course."

...

Inside a palace with dim lights...

"Your Highness, this is Donnie's letter..."

"Your Highness, these are the files from Pico Town..."

"Your Highness, these are the register files of the Knowledge Bookstore in the city hall..."

"Your Highness, these are Dollos' files..."

Many documents were placed on the desk made of red wood. Five long, narrow, fair, but manly fingers tapped on them softly and gracefully, as if they were playing music.

“He’s born in a poor family with mediocre talents, but he is determined and hardworking. Also, he is a man of integrity and is not tempted by Dollos’ ‘Parchment of Death’...” As he tapped his fingers, a low and magnetic male voice echoed, with strange gentleness and peacefulness in it.

“There’s nothing wrong with his family background. His father is the owner of a grocery store, and his mother helps with the business. His sister is not in a school... None of their relatives, neighbors, or friends have anything wrong either...”

“Dollos, don’t presume that I do not know who is behind you. I don’t bother you about other things, but if you surpass the limits and are captivated by greed...” The five fingers clenched into a fist and bashed the documents.

In the palace, the ticking sounds of a strange second hand echoed. Behind the desk of red wood was a chair that had been moved sideways. A black-haired man was sitting on the chair, with his left hand scratching his chin.

His face was obviously chiseled despite the dim light. His eyebrow was thick and long, reaching his temples and making his black pupils sharp and deep. In the meantime, his long legs stretched forward lazily. Even though he did not stand up, it was not hard to imagine his height.

He pushed the files aside and pulled a drawer. Looking at the letter inside, he immediately looked upset.

On the letter, it wrote,

[Lu Xiaoen, protect Lu Xiaoxi. Your loving father and mother.]

“Why is my gentle and graceful father always fond of giving us such weird nicknames and calling us that all the time?!” the young man complained incessantly, and his previous casualness and peacefulness were gone.

Chapter 833: Enrollment

In the morning, the brilliant yet not scorching sun illuminated Donnie's dormitory through the window, covering everything with gold.

Donnie was pacing back and forth with a pair of panda eyes. It seemed that he did not sleep at all last night.

Today was the day that the result of the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic would be announced. Even though he was quite confident about his performance, he was still ill at ease and could not go to sleep because there would be no way out for him if he failed.

"It's alright. I've done the theoretical tests, the practical tests, and the additional tests well, unless all the distinguished apprentices applied for the Heidler Magic College this year..." Donnie comforted himself in a low voice.

At this moment, the bell rang with a pleasant voice. Donnie came to an abrupt halt and hurried to turn on the home TV embedded on the wall. He saw that the snowflake-like spots spread out ripples on the screen. Gradually, a beautiful elf with pointy ears showed up.

"Welcome to 'Morning, Nature'. I believe you must be running out of patience. Hehe. I have in my hands the list of students admitted by the major magic colleges." The elf on the TV waved the paper before her. It was covered in a red band with a magic seal.

It was the school channel of "Nature's Heart School". There was a one-hour program in the morning, in the afternoon, and in the evening. They mostly reported the major events in school or "shared" the bad or hilarious mistakes that the apprentices made.

Looking at the paper that was unbelievably thick, Donnie felt that his heart was beating faster and faster. Even though he was holding his breath, he could still sense its pounding.

The elf dropped the paper and smiled. "Our apprentices have performed well this year. The ratio of admittance is higher than before. But of course, somebody must be very close to success too. However, those people need not be upset. You can choose to go to the Stroop Forest and learn after the druids. After the arcanists' years of work, the magic apprentices can be transformed into 'Nature's Guards' or druid apprentices easily..."

Donnie felt that his veins were bulging. The most important thing right now was to announce the list. Why was she talking so much? To make everybody more anxious and uneasy?

Thankfully, the elven lady quickly removed the seal without further ado. She broke the band and unfolded the paper. "Now, I will announce the students admitted by the Holt Magic College. The apprentices whose names are on the list should go to the president's office after nine to get your notice of enrollment and your rewards."

Right now, there were only nine magic colleges, but there were almost four hundred magic schools worldwide. It was a glorious thing for both the apprentice and the school to be admitted. That was why the president of the magic school was giving the notices of enrollment in person. As long as the apprentices who were admitted by the magic colleges did not slack off and give up, they all had good chances to become official sorcerers.

"The Holt Magic College..." The more Donnie listened, the more anxious he became. The names that he was very familiar with made him feel even worse. As it happened, the elven anchor did not announce the list of the students admitted by the Heidler Magic College until the end.

Donnie held his breath and put his right hand on his left chest again, sensing the intense fluctuations that almost broke out of his chest.

"Gordian... Caroline... David..." The elven anchor read the names that Donnie was very familiar with. Right when he almost couldn't handle his heartbeat and the terrible pressure anymore, the word "Donnie" finally came out of the loudspeaker of the home TV. It was so pleasant!

As if struck by lightning, Donnie felt numb and rigid. Then, he waved his arms hard, but his body collapsed without any strength.

He finally made it!

His life, as well as the lives of his family members, would be changed from today!

.....

Inside the Knowledge Bookstore, Dollos looked at Donnie who had come late and observed the lingering excitement on his face. He smiled. "You've been admitted?"

"Yes, by the Heidler Magic College, on the studies of body structure and genetics." Donnie smiled brilliantly at whomever he met today.

As the studies in the microscopic domain went deeper and more detailed, as the models on the nature of the world and magic were basically established, and as the influences spread out to all the major fields, the arcanists had discovered that the knowledge was too enormous for them to learn. They could not study the basics of every school before they chose their favorite field like before. They had to specify the direction that they would like to work on in order to build the foundation well. Those who were not geniuses could hardly learn anything more than the fundamental knowledge of their own fields.

Of course, after they became middle-rank or senior-rank sorcerers and their longevity was extended, the arcanists still had to go back and study the basics of astrology, elements, and necromancy because astrology involved prophecy and fate, and the microscopic domain in the school of elements reflected the essence of the world. If they did not know it at all, their future studies might be greatly affected.

The school of necromancy, on the other hand, was a necessity for life extension. They did not have to learn it well, but they had to grasp the basics.

Dollos nodded his head and closed the book before him.

“Congratulations, Donnie. I hope that you will make remarkable achievements in the school of necromancy.”

“Thank you, Mr. Dollos,” Dollos replied with a smile.

Dollos looked around, and seeing that there was no guest at this moment, he said, “Donnie, the three greatest problems in necromancy that need addressing are the model of the soul structure, the model of genetic factors, and the real mechanism of the ‘Original Body’. If you can unveil the mysteries of genetics, you will definitely win an Evans Prize in Arcana and the Prize of Immortal Throne, and you may become a grand arcanist and a legendary sorcerer in the future. That’s what you should work on.”

Donnie scratched his head and felt rather embarrassed upon hearing Dollos’ encouragement. “They are not something that I can take care of. I do not know the first thing about them. Well, are you aware of the Original Body?”

He keenly sensed the unusual term and asked rather curiously.

Dollos lowered his eyes and looked at the book before him. “Have you heard about the Original Body before? Even in the school of necromancy, there are few arcanists who understand it and study it. I only happen to know it because one of my old friends has been working on it.”

“I learned it from a fellow student during the College Entrance Exam...” Donnie suddenly felt that his question could be dangerous, but he had no choice except to answer it.

Dollos nodded and smiled. “Since you have heard it before, I can talk to you about the details. It’s from the ancient Meshkate Empire...”

He introduced the beginning and evolution of the Original Body. Donnie listened very attentively. Although Karl had introduced it to him before in a much more detailed way, he wasn’t in the mood to listen to it at all at that time.

“The Life Traceback ritual features slanted tombstones and coffins that only have clothes but not bodies... All the bodies are filled in the wood puppet buried at the center..." As he talked, Dollos suddenly sighed. "I'm told that the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep outside of the Heidler Magic College contains the secret. It's a shame that I'm not qualified to visit the most mysterious and unique magic college..."

Was the secret hidden right outside of the Heidler Magic College?

Donnie looked forward to his college life even more now. If he could find some files and cracked some of the mysteries from the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep, it was possible that his capabilities would soar.

Dollos coughed. Not talking about the Original Body anymore, he simply introduced the school of necromancy in general and asked Donnie to go to work.

.....

Wu!

Clang! Clang!

The long magic steam train stopped at a dark and gloomy station. Donnie got off the train eagerly with his old black suitcase.

"So, is this Heidler?" Donnie looked around excitedly and curiously. He saw that the sky was gray and lackluster as if it were frozen, and that a vague mist was everywhere. Far away, the high, spiky magic towers that were in pitch black indicated the city's style that was different from any other cities on the continent.

As expected of the camp of necromancy... Donnie was not intimidated. Having braced himself for this, he felt that only such an appearance befitted Heidler's fame.

It was the middle of August, and the sunlight was burning hot outside. However, there was nothing but paleness and heartfelt chill when the sunlight got into Heidler.

Donnie moved his eyes back and searched for the signs in the station. After he finished Dollos' contract, there was no time for him to go home. After all, Heidler was the college whose semester began earliest.

"The freshmen of the magic college will gather in 152, Ghoul Street..." Donnie soon found the announcement and read the content on it.

"How to reach Ghoul Street?" Donnie frowned at the map of Heidler that he bought from a small dealer on the train. It was full of zigzagging and dizzying twists and turns.

Looking around, Donnie picked up his suitcase and walked to a worker who was busy cleaning the station. "Hello, could I ask you the way? I am a freshman at the Heidler Magic College."

The cleaner suddenly raised his head, only to reveal his rotten face, dim bones, and the two deep black holes in his eye sockets. Donnie was so scared that he almost cried out loud.

Although he had dissected cadavers, summoned zombies, and crafted stitched bodies before, it was still a horrifying experience to run into a decayed corpse in the middle of a day without any warning.

The "cleaner" struggled to shake his head. He then lowered his head as he continued to clean the station.

So, this is Heidler... Donnie's tone had changed greatly.

"Donnie!" A familiar voice came from far away. Donnie turned around in surprise, only to discover that somebody was waving his arms at the entrance of the state. The ghost on his back was also waving its fuzzy hands. It was Sammy.

Chapter 834: The Silent College

The streets of Heidler City were not messy, filthy, or filled with rotten pieces of bodies everywhere, which was what Donnie expected to see. Instead, they were rather clean and broad, with a lot of passersby on them.

However, the crowded streets, which were supposed to be lively and obstreperous, were awfully quiet. Nobody talked loudly at all. They communicated with each other in the voice of mosquitoes. There seemed to be a strange force that forbade noises in this place.

With a closer look, Donnie finally realized that most of the passersby were actually undead creatures. Some were corpse dogs with weird redness beaming out of their eyes, some were skinned men whose flesh was exposed to the air, and some were the commonly seen ghosts, zombies, and skeletons.

Naturally, necromancers in black magic robes were among the undead creatures too. Most of them were not as grim and rigid as Donnie imagined. They talked and laughed with their friends, except that their voices were kept down.

“It’s a pity that there aren’t any liches...” Donnie remarked in a low voice.

Sammy seemed to be in great spirits after he came to Heidler City. Although he still seemed drowsy, at the very least, he was not yawning frequently. Rubbing his hair that was as messy as a bird nest, he smiled and said, “I don’t think liches are fond of walking on the street...”

I don’t think they are fond of anything... Donnie leaned aside to give the way to a three-headed hell hound. It was tall and strong, with burning fire drooling from its mouth, but it had a ring on its neck and was pulled by a petite female sorcerer, running ahead of her slowly.

“This hell hound is the size of a bull...” After the female sorcerer left, Donnie couldn’t help but observe. The difference in their sizes was too glaring.

Sammy chuckled. "I saw a lich walking his bone dragon in the sky yesterday. It's about the size of a hundred hellhounds."

He arrived in Heidler City yesterday and lived at 152, Ghoul Street. He was waiting for the students who were to come the next day so that they could go to the college together.

"That's great." Donnie looked at the sky in admiration. At this moment, they already reached Ghoul Street. The high-rising magic tower made it impossible for them to lose their way.

Suddenly, a pale skull drifted out, with two needle-like red lights in the eye sockets. The teeth of the skull clattered and let out a harsh voice as it said, "All freshmen will gather and go to the college. Those who come later will be shuttled the day after tomorrow."

The voice was so unpleasant, as if somebody were rubbing a bone with rusty iron. Donnie shivered and walked into the hall with Sammy.

"Give me your notice of enrollment and your identification mark inside." An expressionless man approached them before Donnie got steady. The stranger had an emaciated face, with the same needle-like redness in his eyes.

Donnie hurried to take out his notice of enrollment and a black beetle. "Yes, sir."

"Call me Mr. Robert." The man's voice was strangely gentle and comforting. When he looked at the black beetle, the bug seemed to be illuminated by the redness too. "Well, Donnie, there is no need to apply for accommodation. You will come to the college with us."

Then, he returned the notice of enrollment and the beetle back to Donnie. Pausing for a moment, he said, "As it happens, I am an instructor in the field of body structure and genetics. I hope that you can keep up your current performance."

After a moment, Sammy looked at Robert, who had walked to the other side of the hall, and said in a low voice, "It is said that Mr.

Robert is very close to the senior rank now. His body has been modified by him for so many times that nobody knows what special abilities it has.”

“Well, Mr. Robert gave me a lot of pressure...” Donnie had cold sweat while walking in the gloomy environment of Heidler City. He looked at Robert, only to discover that the man stopped before the stream screen in the hall and watched the amusing program on it, with what could almost be called a smile on his face.

“I didn’t know that a dead-looking man like Mr. Robert would like to watch TV...” Donnie said in shock.

Sammy looked at him confusedly. “Why can’t a dead man watch TV?”

“Well...” Donnie was rendered speechless by Sammy. He hurried to change the subject. “We’re about to go to the college. I’m told that it’s not in the city but in a mysterious place, isn’t it?”

Sammy nodded solemnly. “I’m told that it’s a great place for necromancy.”

Both of them were rather curious about that, and they tried to guess where their destination was. Could it be in an enormous tomb?

After a while, the pale lich flew back and continued with the nasty voice, “Follow me closely and don’t get lost. Once you are lost, I will assume that you are already dead, and I will not bother searching for you.”

Donnie’s heart was palpitating. Even a drowsy and inert man like Sammy suddenly widened his eyes too. The whole team became extremely silent.

Following the lich, Donnie and his fellows passed the Ghoul Street, the Soul Avenue, and the Square of Brains before reaching a building that seemed no different from any other magic towers.

“Is this our college?” Donnie looked at the magic tower before him in disappointment.

The lich stopped and floated before the gate of the magic tower while chanting coarse, intricate, and gruesome spells.

A shadow emerged from the rocks on the ground. Spreading and growing, it soon covered the gate, making it shiver softly in the darkness.

“Follow me,” the lich said coldly, and instead of opening the gate, the lich disappeared into the shadow.

Donnie and Sammy held their breath again because of the weirdness. They slowly moved forward with the apprentices before them, wondering where the shadow would lead.

It was a pity that, however slow they were, they still reached the shadow gate. Gritting his teeth, Donnie stepped in.

As if his body were in a lake, Donnie felt depressed and suffocated, exactly like when he was almost drowned when he was a little kid. Then, Donnie felt that his body was light again, and he got rid of the “water”. He was now facing a black, white, and gray environment.

It was a messy and corrupt city, without the slightest color except for the monotonous black, white, and gray. Even the wind had been frozen in the air, like a peaceful and weird portrait.

Donnie looked at the sky in shock. It was as pale and dime as that of Heidler City, but the sun was nowhere to be seen!

The basic knowledge about alternate dimensions popped up in Donnie’s head. He shouted at Sammy who was stunned next to him, “It’s the World of Souls!”

However, after he blurted out, Donnie did not hear any sound at all. Everything was so quiet as if they were in eternal sleep.

As expected of the World of Souls. Donnie took a breath, having the illusion that his body was decaying. This place was definitely the best place for the school of necromancy. However, he was told that this place was very dangerous for even the senior-rank sorcerers. After all, the unintelligent specters did not care for one’s background or whether or not they were rich. They only desired fresh flesh and blood.

“Follow me. Let me repeat myself. Don’t get lost.” With a spell that they did not know, the lich spoke into everyone’s heart.

Donnie patted Sammy, who was still in a daze, and followed the lich warily and attentively, fearing that he might be left out and faced with the tide of specters alone.

Passing through the silent city, the team walked into a desolate wilderness. There were wandering ghouls with rotten and hideous faces everywhere. They could almost smell the indescribable stench.

Further away, many fuzzy ghosts were floating in the sky, with black long robes on their body.

Such an environment and such a scene refreshed the ghost on Sammy’s back. It craned its head and let out soundless shrills, waving its hands back and forth hard.

Hehe. Donnie looked at the scene in amusement, while Sammy shook his head helplessly.

Suddenly, the gray sky became dark, as if it had been dyed black. No, the sky did not turn dark, but instead, the phenomenon was caused by ghosts that were gathering from all directions!

Also letting out soundless shrills, they flew toward Sammy overwhelmingly. The terrible pressure and scent of death almost made a lot of apprentices wet their pants. Had they run into a scourge of the undead?

His body shivering, Donnie pulled Sammy, hinting him to stop the ghost on his back.

At this moment, the lich before them sniffed, and a black curtain appeared out of nowhere, covering all of them.

After the black curtain disappeared, Donnie realized that they had already pressed deep into the wilderness and were far away from the army of ghosts.

“Get your ghost under control,” the lich said coldly.

“Yes, sir,” Sammy replied; his voice shaking. The ghost behind him, on the other hand, held its own legs like a scared kid who was crying soundlessly.

Donnie looked at the ghost in amusement. Are you terrified by the army of ghosts too? You almost turned us into ghouls.

Dragging Sammy, whose legs were too unsteady to support him, to move forward, Donnie suddenly saw a magnificent city in the frozen black, white, and gray world. There were black, silver, and white pointy magic towers in the city that displayed different colors. Among the magic towers were rarely-seen overpasses that connected different directions delicately.

Around the city was a quiet cemetery with tombs everywhere, which were packed densely. Slanted black tombstones were before them.

“Slanted tombstones...” Donnie was briefly stunned.

After passing the cemetery, Donnie and his fellows reached the edge of the city under the leadership of the lich. After they passed the city gate that was dozens of meters tall, the feeling of consolidation and depression was immediately gone. They heard the familiar sound of talking again, as if they had suddenly returned from the realm of the dead to that of the living.

“Everyone, as you have seen, there is no way that you can leave this place without the guidance of senior-rank mentors. Therefore, you have to work and study really hard, because those who slack off will not be able to go home. Alright, welcome to the Heidler Magic College. Please claim your school robe and badge with your identification mark and your notice of enrollment. Then, you can go to your dormitory with the mark on the badge.” The lich disappeared after giving the announcement.

Dragging Sammy, who had not fully recovered, and his ghost, Donnie got the black robe and the emblem of pale fire from a magic tower nearby. He asked the way and walked to his dormitory.

When they were near their dormitory, Sammy finally took a long breath and rubbed his hair. “The World of Souls is really horrible. I was so scared just now...”

As he spoke, he opened the door of the dormitory, only to be stunned. He blocked Donnie’s sight.

“I... I’m sorry. We... We’ve come to the wrong dormitory!” Sammy stammered and apologized.

Donnie looked at the door plate. “Room 202 of the Life Tower in the Origin Zone. It can’t be wrong.”

Chapter 835: Roommates

Sammy, in the lead, hurried to turn around, but his head seemed to be attracted by what was inside the room. Donnie, who was behind him, was busy reading the number on the door. As a result, the two of them bumped into each other.

“Wait. How do you know that you’re in the wrong dormitory when you haven’t seen the number yet? Have you already been to your dormitory, and you realize that you’re in the wrong one because of the different arrangements in the room? But you still have your luggage in your hands! Huh, you have a twin ghost on your back! That’s a very special spiritual phenomenon. It will be very helpful for us to unravel the specific structure of the soul...” A magnetic and pleasant male voice came from the room.

The familiar voice and the talking that never seemed to finish struck Donnie like a lightning. He was completely stunned.

Karl?

How is it possible?

The guy turned out to be his roommate!

A picture suddenly popped up in his head. He was surrounded by dozens of knights at gunpoint, and in the sky were the views of tides, suns, and bolts of lightning made by the radiant knights who could be elementized.

The horrible picture made Donnie’s body shiver. While Karl was warm and amiable, it did not mean that the knights who were protecting him were the same. Perhaps, his innocent mistake would lead to overreactions. Also, Karl might not be as simple-headed as he seemed!

“M... Miss, how can I not know I am in the wrong dormitory after I see you?” Sammy said, blushing. Because of the Back Spirit, few girls were ever interested in him. Whenever he faced his female classmates, he was either in dire need of sleep or he became extremely awkward and clumsy.

“Who’s a miss? I am, without any questions, a man, a knight who protects ladies, and an arcanist who pursues the truth. What makes you think I am a girl?” Karl sounded angry.

Fuzzy and anxious, Sammy blurted out, “What makes you think you are not a girl...”

Before he finished his sentence, his mouth had been stifled by Donnie, who feared that he would infuriate Karl and let them be fired upon by electromagnetic cannons.

With a flattering smile, Donnie moved his head aside and looked at Karl through the gap between Sammy and the door frame. “Karl, it’s been a long...”

His voice came to an abrupt halt, and he forgot to close his mouth. Staring at Karl inside, he looked like a statue.

Today, Karl was wearing the standard long robe of the Heidler Magic College, which further highlighted his fair skin. The sloppy clothes covered the body curve that he did not have. Together with his pretty face and his glittering silver eyes, he would make everyone think that he was a flawless and beautiful girl.

The greatest feature of the robe of the college in classic style was that it was genderless! The manly air that Karl added to himself with male clothes, bow-ties, etc. was gone, and he looked no different from any other female students. No wonder Sammy was in a hurry to apologize.

Suddenly, an idea occurred to him. If he spent a lot of time with Karl, would he find the other girls too ordinary when he hung around with them?

“You... You... You... You are Donnie?” Karl finally remembered Donnie’s name. He was briefly stunned. “You’re my roommate too?”

The slight blush on his fair face suddenly reddened, and his glittering eyes became sharp. The intimidating vibe made the ghost on Sammy’s back crouch again.

Donnie took half a step back and looked at Karl in shock, with messy ideas like “it’s dangerous”, “I should take cover”, and “why is he angry?” in his head. However, after looking around, Karl immediately lost the threatening gaze and said with a blooming smile, “We’re now roommates! How coincidental is that! Is this your friend? Is he our roommate too? I planned to buy you dinner to apologize after the exam is over, but I had to leave early because of a minor accident in the afternoon exam. I didn’t expect to meet you again on the first day of college. Are you majoring in body structure and genetics too? Then, we will probably be classmates...”

Karl’s eloquence woke Sammy up from his embarrassment. He looked around and read the sign on the door again. “You are really a guy?”

It was truly unbelievable!

“Of course, I am an authentic man!” Karl said proudly and waved his arms. “Do you want to try my strength? Donnie knows it. I am very strong. I can crush five people of your body size in one punch. Well, it’s just a joke. My strength is only mediocre...”

With a bitter face, Sammy said, “I believe you. I do.”

He already saw the Adam’s apple on Karl. Now that he was no longer in a panic, he also sensed the maliciousness of the world exactly as Donnie did.

“Come on in. As roommates, we need to help and encourage each other in the future in order to make progress together so that we can walk further in the journey to explore the mysteries of genetics and souls...” Karl bowed slightly and extended his left hand, like a graceful gentleman.

Why is he so talkative? Also, he is as formal as a news anchor... Donnie wiped his sweat and stopped looking at Karl’s face that could be compared to the most beautiful girl’s as he feared that his expectations would be raised too high.

The dormitory of the Heidler Magic College was not splendid, but it was clean and tidy. Four beds made of black metal had been placed next to the walls. Before the beds were everybody's desk.

The desk was made of bright yellow wood and divided into two floors. On the upper floor, there was a bookshelf. Behind the closet in the back, it was a door that seemed to lead to the balcony and the bathroom.

"There's a home TV by the door. Everybody has their own magic refrigerator on their nightstand. Right, the two pieces of metal on the bed are magic radios that you can stuff in your ears so that you will not affect other people when you listen to Arcana Voice at night. However, there are no magic air conditioners in this place because the whole Heidler Magic College is covered in magic circles and set at a permanent temperature that is neither too cold nor too hot. And such, magic air conditioners are not necessary..."

The moment Donnie dragged the suitcase to an empty bed, he heard Karl's magnetic voice. The guy introduced the items in the room thoroughly and enthusiastically.

Does he not have many chances to talk on other occasions? That's unlikely. Who can stop such a big shot like him from talking? A weird thought occurred to Donnie.

"It's a shame that there's no room for pianos, violins, or flutes here, and magic gramophones and players are forbidden too. As a matter of fact, there is a lot of music that I would like to share with you. I have created some works myself too..." Karl said in disappointment.

The magic players were the improved version of gramophones. They could store more music as well as more convenient to use.

"Behind that door is the balcony. On the left side of the balcony is the bathroom. There is no kitchen, no living room..."

At this moment, Sammy, whose bed was next to Donnie's, could not stand such a "pretty girl" making male voice anymore. So, he combed his messy hair and said, "Donnie, put on your magic robe. We have to pick our courses and mentor."

"Haha. I just did it yesterday," Karl interjected without any self-awareness. “How about it? Do you want me to introduce it to you?”

He seemed to be asking, but he immediately said without waiting, “The most distinguished mentor on body structure and genetics is naturally Mr. Felipe. However, he is also the director of the Laboratory of Heretics, and since he works on the cutting edge of necromancy, he does not have much time except for the occasional open classes. The other teachers each have their own specialties. For example...”

Donnie felt that his head had grown huge. “We came late, and we don’t want to miss the course selection today. Karl, how about we talk later while we are on the way?”

He was told that all the classes of the magic college were to be selected publicly. If they were late, the classes with great teachers would be full.

He couldn’t help but complain about the Heidler Magic College. It was said that the other colleges would ask the students to select the courses after they all arrived, but here, the students who came early got to select early. However, it did agree with the habit of coldness and indifference of the school of necromancy.

“Alright, I’ll tell you the details on the way. You must not select the teachers who are too busy doing their own research to teach classes or those who are not professionals themselves...” Karl said with a brilliant smile.

Donnie and Sammy looked at each other with a bitter smile, both felt that there was no way they could stop Karl from talking.

Putting down the suitcase, Sammy picked up the magic robe to distinguish the front side from the back. Then, he unbuttoned his clothes. However, he had a very uncomfortable feeling while unbuttoning his clothes, although the ghost on his back showed no reaction as if nothing was wrong.

He looked at Donnie, only to discover that Donnie was also stunned after he took off half of his old school uniform.

“Why have you stopped?” Karl said at the perfect moment.

Both Sammy and Donnie turned around, only to discover that Karl was looking at the two of them with his big, beautiful silver eyes.

Immediately, they understood why they felt uneasy. It was the same as taking off clothes in front of a girl!

“Well, Karl, do you mind turning around?” Donnie said awkwardly.

Karl was stunned. “Why? We are all guys.”

Donnie thought for a moment and replied with what he learned from the noble etiquette class, “Even guys should also respect each other’s privacy.”

Karl nodded and did not say anything else. He walked out of the dormitory.

Donnie and Sammy seized the moment to take off their old clothes and put on the magic robes and the corresponding shirts. In the end, they clipped the emblem of pale fire and their badges of apprentice and intern arcanist on their clothes.

“Let’s go.” Donnie was greatly relieved after he changed his clothes.

“Alright!” At this moment, a strange voice suddenly echoed, giving both of them a shock.

Looking at the source of the voice, they discovered a plain-looking, fat young man, who had black hair and blue eyes before another bed.

“When did you come in?” Sammy asked in confusion.

The young man replied with a smile, “I’ve been here all the time. I came to this dormitory earlier than you did, but you didn’t notice me.

“Hehe. My name is Jones. I am your roommate, and I will major in the soul.”

“How is it possible?” Donnie blurted out. He had carefully observed everything when he came in. Also, Sammy’s ghost had powerful instincts.

Jones opened his hands. “There’s nothing I can do about it. Wherever I stand, it seems that I am under the stealth skill. The guy who informed me to take part in the College Entrance Exam almost couldn’t find me.”

“Then... Let’s go select the courses together.” Donnie gritted his teeth, and seeing that it was getting late, sent a friendly invitation.

This was definitely a room of weirdos!

Chapter 836: Ubiquitous Shadow

The Heidler Magic College was at a magic tower with pointy tops. Walking among them, one would feel that they were walking in a strange forest. Man-made lights shined from the sky, creating a magnificent view.

“Mr. Robert is Mr. Felipe’s student. He has remarkable expertise in genetic factors, cell memories, and application of necromancy. Also, it is said that he had just exchanged for the files of blood power studies left by Natravos and modified his blood and body deeply based on that. For example, his left eye has been replaced with the Eye Demon’s, allowing him to cast certain ray-type spells quickly with a combat ability close to the senior-rank sorcerers. His right hand contains the tentacles of the Mind Stealer, allowing him to disrupt the mental skills and absorb the enemy’s brains and memories...”

“If you are interested in the few fields above, you may consider selecting Mr. Robert’s classes. He is definitely one of the most distinguished middle-rank mentors, and he is as good as the senior-rank mentors in knowledge and practice...”

Karl introduced the mentors excitedly, like a blooming tulip attracting the attention of the students and teachers passing by. However, they were immediately shocked by his voice, leaving a road of statues wherever he went.

Is it really okay to describe Mr. Robert’s special abilities just like that? Donnie’s lips twitched. He subconsciously imagined what Mr. Robert would be like. From the expressionless dead-looking face, a brown eyeball protruded from the left eye socket and was connected to the eye socket by clear veins. His right hand opened, and many scarlet tentacles crawled out to all directions...

“It’s the typical look of a monster... Necromancers are truly terrifying!”

“However, on second thought, they are also very cool and threatening, aren't they?"

Weird thoughts bubbled up in Donnie's heart and broke apart. Suddenly, he felt that his right sleeve was tightened, and he was refreshed, only to realize that Sammy was pulling it.

"Donnie, aren't Mr. Robert special abilities supposed to be a secret? Why is Karl talking as if everybody knows it?" Even a drowsy and fuzzy young man like Sammy realized that something was not right and asked Donnie in a low voice.

Seeing that Karl was still talking too excitedly to notice their anomaly, Donnie said also in a low voice, "Karl is the descendant of a big shot..."

It was his speculation. After all, if Karl was a big shot himself and had done something great, he must have seen it from the news before.

Sammy nodded his head and stopped asking, not wondering which big shot's son Karl was at all, because he was too sleepy at this moment to care about anything else. All he needed to know was that it was a big shot that he could not piss off. Also, Karl was introducing the mentors on body structure and genetic factors, not the field of souls and spirits, which he was interested in.

The ghost behind him, having been intimidated twice in a row, leaned to him wearily, as if it were also in need of sleep.

Listening to Karl and looking at Sammy's trance-like expression, Donnie thought to himself, A man who can compare to an elven princess and a Back Spirit guy who likes to sleep more than anything. How weird my roommates are...

Iristine, the elven princess, had once given a speech in his school.

"Yes. Only you are normal." An unexpected voice entered Donnie's ears. He subconsciously nodded his head. Yes. I am the only normal person in this dormitory. Wait, who's talking to me? How does he know what's on my mind?

He turned around abruptly, only to discover that Fatty Jones was looking at him with a smile. He asked in shock, “When... When did you come?”

“Didn’t you invite me to select the courses with you?” Jones answered peacefully without being infuriated at all.

“Yes.” Donnie scratched his head like Sammy. But I’ve completely forgotten that! He’s indeed another...

“Indeed another weirdo roommate,” Jones continued with a smile.

Donnie’s face was frozen. “You can read my mind?”

“No. The bridge we are walking on is named ‘Path of Serenity’. When your emotions are too intense, your thoughts will echo in the corridor. This is a way that the mentors remind the students of the importance of tranquility in the research of necromancy. Otherwise, you will hurt both other people and yourself. Did you not hear the voice in your heart?” Jones pointed at the black and white bridge.

The branches up ahead led to the teaching tower and the experiment tower respectively. There were no windows. Vague light emanated from the bricks on the wall and the floor, giving a cold and chilling feeling.

Donnie listened carefully. There was indeed a distant voice of “indeed another...” in the air. He looked at Karl and Sammy embarrassedly, only to discover that one of them was too busy talking and the other was simply nodding his head. Neither of them noticed anything else.

“Thank god they did not hear that...” Donnie was relieved.

“Are you not worried about me?” A plain but strange voice echoed again.

Taken aback, Donnie turned around and looked at Jones, realizing that he had forgotten the guy again!

“I... I’m sorry.” As an honest, normal young man with boundaries, Donnie hurried to apologize.

Jones waved his hands and smiled. "It's alright. I actually quite like my specialty. At the very least, even the enemies will forget about me when I am in danger. I once encountered the scorpion men when I traveled in the southern desert with my friends. After a fierce battle, both parties retreated, and I was forgotten and left at the center of the battlefield..."

"But as a result, I don't think any girls can remember you, can they? If you are married in the future, will your wife forget that she has a husband?" Donnie asked curiously.

Jones' face became rigid. He smiled bitterly. "Let's not talk about such a poignant subject..."

"That's why I chose necromancy. I hope to study blood powers and modify my body. I have to transform the special talent into an ability that I can control."

"Good luck," Donnie said sincerely. "By the way, what's your name?"

"Jones. I have introduced myself to you many times..." Jones' voice was as predictable as a ghost.

"Have you? Why do I only remember the time in the dormitory? But I only remember that you introduced yourself but cannot remember the specific content..." Donnie more and more felt that everybody in his dormitory was a freak except himself!

The four of them entered the teaching tower along the Path of Serenity and found the place where the courses were selected.

"Aya, the distance is too short. I've only introduced half of the mentors, and I haven't talked about any of the classes yet. That's not my fault. It's only because certain mentors have too many files..." Karl said regretfully.

That's because you rambled too much. You have told us everything about Mr. Robert's brother's neighbor's boss's wife... Donnie thought to himself. Then, his eyes glittered, and he found himself in a room that was full of strange devices. Such devices were the size of desks and covered in silver or black metal shells. Before them, two flickering lights were flashing. Above them was a metal plate similar to the stream screen.

“What is this?” Donnie looked at Karl. He must know the answer and would be glad to offer it!

Karl’s face was full of excitement again, making him as glowing and attractive as the sun. “This is an artificial intelligence that has mixed certain soul pieces. It is so much more fun than those which are being popularized...”

“Artificial intelligence?” Sammy’s body shivered. His eyes were wide open, and his sleepiness was gone.

Donnie was also excited. Was it the legendary artificial intelligence?

“How do I use it?” Donnie interrupted Karl’s interpretation.

Karl did not go mad. He stopped before one of the machines, took off the badge of pale fire on his chest, and placed it on a dent above the “artificial intelligence”.

Then, the red and green lights flashed much more intensely, and an unemotional voice echoed, “Welcome to use artificial intelligence. How can I help you, Mr. Karl?”

“Give me the menu.” Karl turned back and smiled at Donnie and Sammy, who were dazzled again.

“Alright.” This time, the metal plate similar to the stream screen unleashed colorful brilliant lights and gathered into a hologram in the air. There were many icons that were marked with different words on it.

“There are the course selection system, the game system, the test system, and many others in it. You can have a try yourself...” Karl said quickly while he extended his right hand to point at an icon in the air with his narrow, long forefinger. Immediately, the light and shadow on the hologram changed, and cubes in different colors and shapes fell from the top like toys.

Watching Karl move his fingers quickly on the hologram as if he were casting spells and hearing his uninterrupted introduction, Donnie somehow felt that he had been caught in an illusion.

“Is this the game of ‘artificial intelligence’? It seems rather interesting, isn’t it?” Sammy focused his eyes on the hologram.

Shaking his head, Donnie walked to another “artificial intelligence” and put the college badge in the slot like Karl did, asking the alchemical life to display the menu.

However, instead of playing the game, he went straight into the course selection system and found the field of “body structure and genetic factors”.

“Prerequisite courses?” Donnie clicked the option in confusion and saw a bunch of classes that he had to take.

“Electromagnetics, Magic Crystals, Application of X-Rays in the Observation of the Microworld, Basics of Quantum mechanics, Atoms, Molecules, and Cells: A Brief Introduction, Composition of Human Body, Dragons’ Body Structure...”

Reading the names of some of the classes, Donnie was so stunned that he could clearly sense the signature of Lucien Evans on them.

Why? Why did he have to learn those things even in the school of necromancy?

Chapter 837: Nightmare

Chapter 837: Nightmare

“Studies on genetics have dived deep into the microscopic domain and thus gone beyond the capability of traditional magic spells. Observation methods based on the knowledge of the microscopic domain shall take over here, say, the combination of X-ray and some magic crystals. Therefore, we also have to understand relevant arcana schools apart from necromancy. Of course, it’s pretty much a brand new area that just started a couple of years ago, so nothing major has been found yet.”

The male voice sounded both strange but somehow also familiar to Donnie. He hurriedly looked back and saw a chubby teenage boy with black hair also operating an “artificial intelligence”.

“Jones?” Donnie asked, “How did you know?”

Jones answered while still working on his project, “I noticed you were staring at the schedule. I know you don’t understand such an arrangement.”

“Besides observation methods, as our bodies also consist of atoms and molecules, we have to learn about the microscopic domain to understand life matters,” Karl responded while playing his game. “Also, there is mathematics. If you don’t know math, you’re going nowhere in arcana.

“As you’ve seen, there’s a course called Advanced Mathematics in necromancy, and it’s very systematic. The course comprises calculus, matrix, analytic geometry, complex variables functions, real analysis, and mathematical analysis, and it goes all the way through our next five-year study.” Karl added, “It’s as important as the rest of our compulsory courses like Genetics and Body Structure.”

As long as Karl started talking, very rarely would he be brief. He tended to be very specific, and his words were often very informative.

Hearing the terms, Donnie felt dizzy, and he even had the impulse to crack the “artificial intelligence” in front of him. Although he revered the leading characters in mathematics very much and he was not bad at math, he was not a genius, so learning math definitely was full of pain!

Turning to the next page, Donnie saw the course named Advanced Mathematics in Necromancy. He plucked up his courage and chose a good mentor under Karl’s suggestion.

He then finished his registrations for all courses, including those lab courses.

Because they were here relatively early, and they followed many suggestions from Karl on choosing mentors, both Donnie and Sammy had successfully found their ideal mentors for each of their courses. They were lucky to have Robert as their mentor on the Composition of Human Body because they would then automatically enroll on his Body Reform, which was an advanced course in the school of necromancy.

After this, Donnie’s timetable was ready. He had lots of courses during the day except for Sunday. One would easily suppose that most necromancy courses should be delivered during night time, but this place was the World of Souls, so the trouble could be saved. Donnie had to review all the stuff he learned during the day as there was no way that he could remember everything right away.

Seeing that more and more students were waiting, Karl forced himself to leave the “artificial intelligence”, and he took a glance at Donnie’s timetable. “We’ll have many courses together, so we can go together. Many magic towers here look identical, and there are also some illusion mazes that act as defense. You can easily get lost if you don’t have a guide. Last time I ran into several girls who got lost nearby a magic tower, and they were almost in tears...”

Donnie hurriedly asked, “You know this place well?”

Sammy was being rather sleepy again. Donnie was the only one who could stop Karl’s lecture.

"I've seen the map. I'm a genius at finding directions!" Karl was full of confidence. If someone did not believe him, he'd keep talking until the person believed.

Donnie hurriedly nodded. "Then we'll count on you next Monday morning."

"No problem." Karl patted on his chest, but his beautiful face made his movement look cute. "I like these courses, for we can do magic experiments!"

Experiment? Karl?

Donnie turned to look at Karl's chipper face. He became very nervous. He wondered if it was still okay to choose another mentor, or if he could apply for sick leaves during lab sections to avoid doing experiments with Karl together.

Karl kept going on and on, as if his mouth never dried from giving lectures. His speech, however, did help Donnie and Sammy remember where to find the library, Magic Exchange Office, Dean's office, Paper office, the tower where specters were sealed, burying place, restaurants, and the dining hall. Like how the TV and radio programs were introduced, in the academy, cuisines from different countries all gathered here, which fed Donnie and Sammy very well.

Heidler Magic College was big. It already passed midnight when they came back to their dorm. Sammy leaned against Donnie as he could fall into sleep at any time. Donnie also felt exhausted. However, Karl still looked very excited and energetic.

"What a tiring day. We should get some sleep now." Walking to his bed, Karl gave himself a long stretch elegantly.

Donnie looked at Sammy who had fallen into deep sleep in his bed and believed that they should be the right people calling themselves exhausted.

At this time, he saw that Karl was slowly taking off his black magic robe. His long, beautiful neck had been revealed and then... his curved waist.

“Karl!” Donnie blurted out, feeling his nose a bit hot and his heart beating fast. “Can you... go to the changing room?”

“What? I’m a man!” Karl was a bit confused, but he smiled later on. “You value privacy, I see. You emphasize on this even more than some nobles!”

Karl followed Donnie’s words and walked to the changing room. When he came out wearing a loose white shirt and a pair of pajama pants, Donnie looked away again.

Donnie took a shower and then finally lay down. In bed, he could not fall asleep. The schoolwork was even more difficult than he thought, and some courses even made him feel very concerned. In this dorm, there was also such an “important character” living with them. He wondered how his life in the academy would be in the close future.

Donnie wished that Karl could figure out how to modify his body genetically as soon as possible so that he could feel more relaxed living with him.

Wait... Did they forget someone on their way back? The student called... J...?

“Karl? Are we all here? I think we forgot someone!” Donnie hurriedly asked.

“Thank you for asking. I was always with you all.” The unique voice came to Donnie in the darkness before Karl responded. “By the way, my name’s Jones, and I think you have perhaps forgotten about it.”

Donnie buried his head under his pillow and released a sigh in his mind. What kind of dorm it was!

...

The dark night sky was solemn and quiet, but its edge looked rather gray and pale. The World of Souls was always like this. No change took place here.

In the color of black, white, and gray, Heidler Magic College, surrounded by the countless tombs, looked rather creepy and also very mysterious.

The gravestones were engraved with the names of the dead, the date they were born, the day they passed away, as well as the honors that they once earned. Some of the epitaphs were amusing, and some were rather serious and solemn.

Standing in the graveyard, watching the names and the black fog rising, Donnie recalled what Mr. Dollos once mentioned—the rite of Life Traceback and the “Original Body”.

His heart beat faster and faster, as if something in the middle of the graveyard was summoning him.

Although he had sensed the danger, Donnie could not help walking further toward the center of the graveyard.

There was a huge tomb in front of him. The gate of the tomb chamber was only half closed.

Donnie walked through the gate and came to the main chamber along the passage. The dim light in this space made the atmosphere beyond dreadful.

Pushing open the gate of the main chamber, Donnie was shocked. There was a huge body, which consisted of a different intelligent creature, lying in the coffin. And the black miasma filled in the entire space.

Suddenly, the body sprang up and opened its eyes. They were just two dark red spots, and the air of death poured out from them.

Donnie felt this great paralysis in his body. He wished that he could cry out loud, but he could not. He could do nothing but watch his own body corrupting and soul dissipating. In the end, there was the eternal, silent darkness.

“Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

Donnie jumped up in his bed and gasped hard. It was sunny outside, a crisp, promising morning.

“Nightmare again?” asked Sammy in concern.

Donnie nodded, but then shook his head. “Maybe I’m just not used to this new place...”

But why this dream again?

Was it because he wanted this secret so bad?

“If it keeps happening,” Karl popped his head out from the washroom with a toothbrush in his mouth and said, “you have to go and see some mentors to make sure you’re not cursed. I once saw...”

Obviously, the toothbrush in his mouth was not going to stop him from talking.

Donnie nodded seriously and said, “Thanks, Karl. But you’d better hurry up. It’s time for the ceremony.”

The ceremony in Heidler Magic College for a new term was always very simple. Schokola, the president, only gave a short speech. Then Donnie and Karl followed the crowd and went to the classroom for electromagnetics.

“I’m your mentor for electromagnetics, and my name’s Ginton,” said a middle-aged man who looked rather well-educated, who was wearing a pair of wire-rimmed glasses and looked a bit thin. “This is our first class, and I’ll lead you to the lab to do some experiments. From the experiments, you’ll see with your own eyes some classic electromagnetic phenomena, which we’ll explain later in our upcoming classes.”

“Yeah!” Karl said cheerfully.

Donnie wondered if he could stay here...

Chapter 838: The Strange Lightning

Chapter 838: The Strange Lightning

The experiment magic tower was silver-white, and its architectural style was not really in accordance with the overall atmosphere in Heidler Magic College.

It wasn't far away from the main tower and was connected to the main tower by eight gray bridges. Students wearing black magic robes were walking on the bridges.

Following Ginton, Donnie and the rest of the students had come to a big lab that occupied the entire floor.

"There're many fascinating experiments in electromagnetics, say, those showing electromagnetic induction and electromagnetic waves. I did one with my elder brother, and we were above the ocean beyond the Pearl Islands..." Karl shared his experience with Donnie, and his eyes were shining with passion.

However, Donnie was on full alert. "How was it?"

He did not care what Karl did, but what consequence that caused.

"It was perfect! Even more perfect than we expected!" Karl slightly lifted his chin out of pride.

"What else did you get? What was the consequence?" asked Donnie in great caution.

Karl chuckled dryly. "There was no consequence. Our experiment even created a new research field for arcanists in electromagnetics, to conduct lightning high above in the sky using electromagnetic waves, which can greatly improve the power of many senior-rank electromagnetic spells..."

"Really?" Donnie was very surprised. As a good student from Nature's Heart, he was quite familiar with this field.

“Of course!” Karl answered in a bit of a rush, as he disliked the suspicion. “We conducted countless flashes of lightning, like a forest of lightning. A couple of deserted islands nearby were also on fire...”

He suddenly stopped himself here and smiled with embarrassment. “My father said that there’s theoretical support, but you’d better use the...”

Donnie completely ignored the rest of the words. Instead, he murmured, “Lightning forest... Islands on fire...”

He had decided to stay away from Karl as far away as he could. Obviously, Karl’s experiment just strayed away so much from his original intention—an experiment for testing electromagnetic wave communication.

Glinton said to them seriously, “If you want to learn about electromagnetism, electromagnetic induction is something you can never avoid. Today, I’ll show you a few small experiments on this so that you all can see it with your own eyes.

“But I have to remind you that a magic lab does have very strict rules. Failing to obey them will lead to bad consequences, for yourself and also for other people. And you’ll be punished. I won’t repeat myself here on what the rules are as they should have become a part of your soul since grade five.”

He turned around, and his eyes were shining with a red light. Then two red rays shot out from his eyes and hit the gate of the lab. The gate rippled like there was a layer of water on it.

He then took out his badge on which there was a white skull. When the badge was pressed against the central part of the gate, the gate slowly opened.

“Lots of experiments can be done here. But you can’t enter this one without the permission and help of an instructor. If you want to do some experiments on your own, go and apply for the access to the common labs on floor one to seven,” said Glinton.

Donnie murmured in a low voice, “But what if things still go wrong even if the rules are strictly followed...”

He was, obviously, not talking about himself.

As a fifth-circle sorcerer, Glinton could hear Donnie’s words. He looked a bit pissed and said, “Nothing can go wrong if you stick to the rules. If it is my fault, none of you will be hurt because I’m here. Also, Heidler Magic College is already twenty-one years old, and the accidents that have ever happened cannot even fill up a piece of parchment. The worst accident ever only destroyed an operation desk.

“This is what we all feel proud of as instructors of this college. This comes from what we gained from building the ‘Path of Serenity’.”

“Yes, sir,” answered Donnie hurriedly. He did not want to leave any bad impression on his mentor.

The arrangement of the lab was very similar to that of those less advanced labs. The only difference was that there were more alchemy facilities that they did not recognize. The students could still identify a couple of the facilities and devices though, for example, the famous Cyclotron.

Seizing the chance that Karl was looking around, Donnie secretly went to the other side to stay closer to the gate.

After a couple of minutes, Donnie finally felt more relaxed when seeing that Karl had gone to the corner, instead of looking for him. However, he was then concerned that a big accident might happen at any time because of Karl.

His nervousness caught the attention of a few students close to him. A green-eyed girl with brown hair smiled. “Don’t worry. It’s just like what we did in our schools. Mr. Glinton would allow us to use Cyclotron today anyway.”

She was not a gorgeous girl, but the habitual smile on her face made the girl look rather easygoing and kind.

“Thanks. I’m Donnie, you?” Donnie answered politely. But he knew that it was sensible for him to feel very concerned.

The girl grinned. "Call me Shirley. I'm from the Duchy of Orvarit. I hope you see me as a good guest."

Donnie had the typical look of a Holmish, so Shirley was joking.

Natasha had regained control over the Duchy of Orvarit, and she was now the Grand Duchess. There were rumors saying that she was giving the title to her youngest child. Natasha and Lucien Evans kept their children away from public attention, and the children's names were even replaced by their titles in TV or radio programs.

"No matter where we come from, we're all members of the Congress and followers of knowledge. There's no host and guest," said Donnie politely.

In the magic school, Sammy was totally devoted to his study, and he rarely talked to the girls, but Shirley made him feel quite relaxed.

Shirley nodded and pointed at their mentor. The class was going to start.

Worried as Donnie was, he still stayed focused.

In the front, Glinton was explaining the discovery and development of electromagnetic induction. From time to time, he would use experiments for demonstration, and he would occasionally pause so that the students could repeat the experiments.

Glinton definitely deserved the compliment given by Karl. Serious as he was, his lecture was rather interesting and engaging. Soon, Donnie had forgotten about his worries.

Somehow, Donnie felt that the sky outside had become very dark as if thick dark clouds were gathering over the building. Also, the atmosphere in the classroom had become rather oppressive from some invisible energy wobbled in the space following a certain frequency.

Donnie wondered if it was going to rain.

It was not. When he looked out the window, he saw fine flashes of lightning jumping in the dark clouds!

But they were in the World of Souls! There were neither storms nor dark clouds here!

They were under the protection of the mythical of Heidler Magic College! The weather would remain the same here.

He recalled Karl's beautiful face and blurted out, "Sir, look!"

Glinton instantly realized the approaching danger. He quickly cast a spell and a few force field swirls appeared in front of the windows. He then commanded decisively, "Leave the lab!"

While the apprentices were panicking, Donnie, who was mentally prepared, was acting calmly. "No rush. Follow the rules and get out one after one!"

Glinton took a look at Donnie and nodded his approval. "The alchemical life will soon activate the defense magic circles."

Under the guidance, the apprentices were leaving the lab in great order and good efficiency. Soon, only the mentor was left in the lab.

Glinton released a sigh of relief. When he was about to leave, he heard this deafening boom.

A flash of lightning as thick as an old tree hit right on the outer layer of the magic tower's defense and broke it into pieces, while the force field swirls for absorbing energy were doing no help at all.

Glinton was startled. Looking a bit awkward, he quickly left the lab with a blink.

With the help of the alchemical life, the apprentices had been sent to an open area in the distance. They saw thick flashes of lightning, which looked like huge snakes, striking the lab, which they just left.

The deafening booms would not stop. The students could hear the defense shield of the magic tower cracking and snapping. The lab soon went on fire, and the thick smoke had overwhelmed the entire place.

Donnie had never seen anything like this before. His eyes opened big, and his hands were trembling slightly. If it had not been their mentor and the protection of the magic tower, and if he didn't notice it early, he could have been dead already!

"This is the most horrible accident ever in the past twenty-one years..." said a hoarse voice.

Donnie turned around in surprise and saw the fatty squatting down to the ground. He was watching the tower on fire through the strange pair of glasses on his nose. The glasses kept flashing, but it wasn't catching anyone's attention in such a situation.

Donnie remembered that the fatty was indeed one of his classmates in the program of Body Structure and Genetics, and they were in the tower earlier together.

"What are you doing?" asked Donnie.

The fatty was holding a pile of paper with his left hand, and his right hand was moving fast with a pen. He answered without even looking back, "I'm writing to Allyn Impression. They appreciate my talent and have made me their special correspondent. This is going to hit the headline! I'm also going to make good money out of it!"

Donnie took a glance at the paper and saw the news title given by the fatty.

[Horrible! The Most Severe Accident in Twenty-one Years; Pain! Consequences of Heidler College's Negligence!]

"Good, huh?" said the fatty proudly.

"Not bad..." Donnie paused a second and asked, "By the way, what's your name?"

"..." The fatty went silent.

At this time, someone was murmuring by their side, "That's the end of me... Am I gonna be kicked out? Lu Xiaoen's gonna be in a rage if he knows...”

Chapter 839: Handling the Results

Chapter 839: Handling the Results

The magnetic male voice and straightforward worry made both Donnie and the fatty felt slightly startled. When they turned around, they saw that Karl was watching the tower that was on fire with his good-looking eyebrows curved in a frown, which made Donnie and the fatty want to iron them out.

The fatty did not know the reason behind it, but Donnie clearly knew that such a beautiful “girl” who could catch people’s attention at any time was, in fact, the one who caused this whole accident. He weighed his words a bit and said, “Karl, the college won’t punish you as long as you are sure that you stuck to the rules. Did you break any?”

“No, I didn’t.” Karl shook his head hard and then lowered it. “I thought the senior-rank magic tower would prevent this from happening. The college would know it was me for sure...”

Donnie released a sigh of relief. At least, Karl never broke any rules.

He could use this to comfort Karl, although he was not sure if the college was going to kick Karl out or not.

“So what? You did nothing wrong, and... Ummm... they wouldn’t dare to treat you unfairly...” Donnie was being quite ambiguous. He was referring to Karl’s powerful background. Kicking such a student out without a proper reason would bring great pressure to Heidler Magic College.

Although Donnie could not identify the magic items that Karl was wearing, he could sense the horrible power within them. Donnie believed that even some major nobles or senior-rank sorcerers could not afford them.

Karl nodded slightly as Donnie’s comforting words more or less worked. He said to himself, “Lu Xiaoen taught me so many lessons; one more isn’t a big deal...”

Lu Xiaoen? That was a very strange name that went against the grammar of the common tongue. Donnie wondered if Lu Xiaoen was Karl's father or elder brother.

"You did it?!" the fatty asked in great surprise. He was just listening to their conversation like he was invisible.

Karl took a glance at the fatty, and his silver-purple eyes suddenly became sharp. Donnie wasn't affected, but the fatty felt the great pressure as there was already sweat on his forehead.

He dared not to ask anymore.

At this time, Shirley from the Duchy of Orvarit walked to them and smiled as she just survived a disaster.

"Donnie, thanks to you, we're all saved!"

"I was... was lucky..." Donnie suddenly stammered when facing such a compliment from a girl.

Karl murmured in a low voice, "I'd also remind you all if he hadn't seen it..."

Shirley did not hear him because of the lightning and thunder. She smiled at Donnie and said, "Yes, you were lucky that you saw it. But you helped us get out. Compared to how you look now, you looked very different when you were giving commands."

Donnie's face flushed slightly. Like Sammy, he scratched his head a bit and said, "I was also saving myself."

Suddenly, the deafening clap of thunder was cut off, and everything had fallen into a great silence.

The apprentices all looked up and saw the gray fog pouring out from the sky, which had taken away all the horrible power from the dark clouds.

"They used mythal... Finally..." said the fatty thoughtfully.

As for what the mythal was in Heidler Magic College, the apprentices did not have a clear clue. They heard that it had something to do with some necromancy circles, including the one named Miranda 12 Circles.

Shirley took a strange glance at the fatty, having no idea of when he arrived, but she also didn't care.

"It's safe now. I have to go find my roommate," Shirley said to Donnie.

After Shirley left, Donnie turned around and found himself staring into a pair of blue eyes.

"What're you looking at?" Donnie was a bit startled.

The fatty said with a bit of jealousy, "I think the girl likes you..."

"We did not even know each other until an hour ago!" Donnie hurriedly explained.

"That's right. It only took you an hour... Ummm..." The fatty sighed.

Donnie was a bit pissed but also feeling rather shy. "I didn't mean it. We're just classmates!"

The fatty looked away. "You will know her roommates. Don't forget me."

Donnie was totally speechless. He didn't even know the fatty!

"So, both of you are completely inexperienced, right?" said Karl, who had already forgotten about his worries. "I can tell."

His left arm supported his right arm, and his right hand was rubbing his chin.

"I..." Donnie tried to disagree, but he somehow could not lie.

The fatty was surprised. "How do you know?"

Karl smiled gently and said, "When the girl was thanking Donnie, Donnie was acting like a brand new baby in a relationship. He should've asked the girl to buy him lunch so that he could buy it back next time. Back and forth like this, and one day, grabbing the girl's hand won't be difficult."

"Ask the girl to buy him lunch?" the fatty asked sincerely.

Karl said proudly, "For sure! Do not feel afraid to lose your face. My father once told me a story of a farmer waiting beside a tree trunk day after day for a dead rabbit. The result is just like how you imagine it to be. To win love, you have to take the initiative. Are you telling me that you're going to wait for a girl to run into your arms?"

Donnie felt that it was a beautiful girl in front of him who was lecturing him on how to pursue a girl, and he did not feel very comfortable with it. He hurriedly cut Karl off, "So, you're... experienced?"

Karl looked up at the sky and said, "Of course!"

He paused a bit when no one said anything, "You want me to show you?"

The fatty nodded excitedly, but they were stopped by the fatty. "No, no. An accident just happened. We'd better behave ourselves before a decision is made on this."

"Yeah..." Karl looked upset again, as he lowered his head.

The fatty also recalled his mission. "I'll send out the news report first, and we'll continue after going back to the dorm..."

"Which dorm are you in? What's your name?" Donnie asked confusedly.

The fatty did not know what to say.

Finally, he released a loud sigh. "Never mind... Before this problem is solved, I won't have a chance..."

.....

In the Allyn magic tower in the City in the Sky.

Heidi looked pretty much the same as twenty years ago. She still had the same round face, a few freckles, and long, linen-color hair. The only difference was that she was now wearing an eight-star arcana badge and a ninth-circle magic badge. Also, she was wearing a few dazzling rings. There was one from the Holm Crown Prize and one from Evans Prize in Arcana. She found or made the rest of the rings herself.

“Madam, today’s Allyn Impression is available. You want to have a look?”

It was the ring on her left little finger that talked.

Heidi sipped her black tea and said, “Sure.”

The ring then lit up with red light, and a light beam projected an illusionary pile of newspaper in front of Heidi.

Heidi held the teacup with her left hand and touched the light screen to turn the pages with her right hand.

When Heidi saw the title, “Horrible! The Most Severe Accident in Twenty-One Years; Pain! Consequences of Heidler College’s Negligence”, she was amused and quickly turned to the corresponding page.

After reading the news, she was laughing too hard to sit up straight.

Fortunately, she had always been developing Lu Xiaoxi’s interest in body structure and genetics on purpose, or Lu Xiaoxi would now be studying at the Atom Institution. Her teacher should be thankful because of it!

.....

In the main magic tower of Heidler Magic College.

Schokola, the president, picked up a gold speaker and said in the typical cold and hoarse voice of a lich, “We’ve decided to discontinue Brades’ study in the college. He brings dangers to other students.”

The calm and serious male voice came out of the speaker, “I do not agree.”

Schokola paused a bit and said, “This is the most terrible accident ever since the establishment of the college.”

The male voice remained the same tone as he said, “Before this, didn’t I ever tell you all about Brades’ situation? Didn’t I ever tell you all that a senior-rank sorcerer must be there to supervise him?”

“But they were in a senior-rank magic tower,” Schokola explained.

“It’s your problem,” said the male voice.

“So you’re showing your attitude?” Schokola’s voice became even colder. As an archmage, he felt very disrespected by the young man in the speaker.

The male voice sounded a bit amused, but it then became serious again. “Yes, this is my attitude. Of course, I’ll be responsible for the college’s loss. But it is impossible if you want to expel Brades.”

“I’ll do a quote list,” Schokola said. He had to stop insisting. After all, the man in the speaker had made his compromise.

“Alright. Send the list to Brades,” said the male voice, which sounded slightly annoyed.

.....

“This much?!” Karl looked at the list and almost burst out into tears.

Schokola said gloomily, “Yes, you pay or you leave. Up to you. Of course, your elder brother will pay for it first. He asked me to tell you that the money will come from your own treasury from your future fiefs. This is the first step to grow up, and it’s called ‘take your responsibility’.”

Karl’s voice trembled as he said, “I... I’ll pay...”

Karl kept his head very low as he walked back to his dorm, as if the world was going to collapse. He went directly to bed without saying anything, which made Donnie and Sammy quite unused to it.

But they were also glad that the college was not kicking Karl out.

“Get some sleep. We have Mr. Felipe’s open class tomorrow,” Donnie said excitedly to Sammy.

Sammy nodded. Recently, he was getting more and more dispirited.

.....

Dark red eyes, the air of death...

Donnie sprang up in his bed and gasped very hard. It was this nightmare again!

Suddenly, he felt something not right. He turned to look at the window, and he saw Sammy standing there with his eyes tightly closed. The specter behind his back had completely overlapped with his body.

Sammy started walking out in a creepy manner.

Donnie was about to stop him, but his mouth was suddenly covered.

“Don’t wake him up, or Sammy’s soul will perhaps disappear forever. Let’s go and follow him,” Karl said in a very low voice.

Donnie was startled, but he could tell from Karl’s voice that he was excited.

Chapter 840: A Creepy Adventure

Chapter 840: A Creepy Adventure

Sammy was moving like a rusted piece of machine. His arms and legs looked rather clumsy, but he wasn't slow at all. He had come to the door of their dorm and pulled it open. Then he walked out into the dark corridor, which was only partially lit up by some dim lamps.

"Let's go," said Karl one more time. Like a black panther, Karl jumped out of his bed.

Karl had many thoughts in his mind. He did not know what to do, but he wouldn't let his friend just go like this. He had no other choice but to go with Karl.

Sammy, still with his eyes closed tight, then walked to and jumped down the stairs. However, his jumping did not make any noise, as if each step had been turned into a pile of cotton.

Donnie was scared stiff upon seeing this. He said to Karl in a low voice, "I don't think he's conscious. He's following some kind of instinct, or he would have taken the elevator."

Their dorm was located on the second floor of the Life Tower, and this place was equipped with elevators to all the floors. Rarely would anyone take the stairs. Therefore, many magic lamps had stopped working, but no one cared.

Karl watched Sammy jumping down the stairs around the corner.

"Perhaps he doesn't want to take the elevator..."

It was Karl's voice, but Donnie heard his voice directly from his own head.

Donnie was a bit startled.

"We can do mind communication. You don't have to speak out..."

said Karl.

Donnie guessed that it was because of some kind of magic item that Karl was wearing. Without a doubt, Karl had some very unusual background.

“Wait a sec,” said Donnie. He was confused as he asked, “You said he didn’t want to. So you mean Sammy is under someone’s control?”

“Not sure. Maybe something is calling him, or maybe like you said, he’s just following his instinct.” Karl’s eyes slightly squinted, and he made his movements as gentle as he could.

At the staircase, there were two magic lamps. However, one had completely broken, while the other only had its half side working in a rather unstable way. With the light flashing, Donnie said in a panic, “We should tell our supervisors. They’ll handle this.”

Donnie was talking about the guarding sorcerers in this tower.

Under the flashing light, Karl’s good-looking face now appeared to be a bit gloomy. “There’s no need. If Sammy is just doing a special sleepwalk caused by the specter, we two should be able to handle this. Calling the supervisors will startle him. But if someone’s really controlling him, in Heidler Magic College, a place completely covered by the mythal, we’re not going to be hurt as the supervisors could always arrive in time as long as the mythal is triggered by any spells.”

After many years of development, the medical system in necromancy had given many diseases-specific names that were regarded as evil in the past.

He turned to look at Donnie, and his silver-purple eyes looked both a bit nervous and excited. “Don’t you want an adventure? Don’t you want to handle this on your own? Maybe Sammy is heading for a great treasure or someplace where great power is hiding...”

His magnetic voice lingered in Donnie’s mind. Long and redundant as it sounded, what Karl said to Donnie seemed to have this irresistible power that managed to trigger the desire in Donnie's heart. He nodded subconsciously and kept going further with Karl.

Someone was summoning Sammy?

Like me?

Donnie thought to himself but had no clear clue. As if he was being controlled by Karl, the two of them walked out of the Life Tower.

Although there was no difference between day and night in the World of Souls, as there was only black, white, and gray in this space, there were some places that were brighter and darker so that apprentices could sleep better at night. After walking out of the Life Tower, Donnie felt it was rather dark and quiet around, and he could only see the bottom of many magic towers. He looked up, and the sky bridges were like spider nets crossing each other. The sky was "dead", as there was neither the silver moon nor any stars.

The night was cold. The breeze chilled Donnie. He looked around, but other than themselves, he saw nothing alive.

"Don't lose him," Karl reminded.

Donnie nodded nervously, but he could tell the excitement in Karl's voice.

In the silence and darkness, the three of them, one in the front and two following behind, had walked past a few magic towers and finally came to the front gate of the college.

The entire Heidler Magic College was like a city consisting of tall magic towers and was cut off from the outside by the tall and long walls. The so-called front gate was, in fact, a light screen with the height of dozens of meters and the width of more than ten meters, on which countless magic patterns were flowing like water, giving out the strong air of death.

"Is he leaving?" Donnie asked Karl through mind communication. Sammy was now standing in front of the gate.

"Maybe, perhaps, probably... We'll see something interesting as long as we keep following him. Once, I asked my elder brother to explore an ancient tomb with me at midnight..." Karl said excitedly. However, his long-winded story did not distract him from staring at Sammy attentively.

Feeling it rather strange, Donnie said, "But Sammy can't go through the gate. It has been closed. We'd better try to wake him up or wait until he goes back to the dorm himself..."

Before Donnie could finish his words, to his great surprise, he saw Sammy reaching out his right hand and pressing his hand against the light gate. Then, the surface of the gate rippled around Sammy's hand. A second later, Sammy had been devoured by the light.

"He... He's out!" Donnie stammered.

What happened to the defense mythal? Where were the senior-rank mentors watching the control center?

"Go! Or we're gonna lose him!" Karl jumped out as he grabbed Donnie's right hand.

Like a magic steam train, Karl rushed at the gate. The energy swirl on it was shrinking!

Donnie was pulled by Karl, and he was basically "flying" to the gate. He found the feeling a bit familiar to him as he once got bumped away by an ox when he was younger.

Karl was even more full of strength than he thought!

Donnie suddenly had this wet and cold feeling as if he were soaked in water, but that feeling only lasted less than a second. Then all the colors he could see had quickly faded away, and only black, white, and gray were left.

Donnie saw graves; lots of them. The black gravestones were all sloping.

Come!

Come!

Come!

Donnie's heart was thudding fast. It was exactly like in his nightmare, and he was being uncontrollably pulled forward into the graveyard by something, while Sammy was also walking to the center of the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep.

Danger!

That place was the core of the rite, Life Traceback. It must be dangerous there!

They had stepped out of the gate and entered the true World of Souls. Their mentors wouldn't know in time if anything bad happened to them!

They could not keep following Sammy like this!

Donnie's instinct made him cry out, trying to catch the attention of the college.

However, his crying for help turned out to be totally silent. Even air was dead here.

This place was the World of Souls. Anyone below the legendary level could not make any sound at all.

He tried to cast some spells to make some noise, but facing the summoning power, Donnie could not stay concentrated at all. He was listening to his own heart thudding crazily, and the desire in his heart grew more and more intense.

"Karl. It's dangerous in the front. Find our mentors!" He reminded Karl through mind communication.

Karl did not even look at him. He was staring at Sammy walking ahead of them attentively.

"What are you afraid of? The cemetery is also part of the mythal..." said Karl.

Donnie kept telling Karl about his nightmare, but Karl wouldn't listen.

Donnie kept trying until he finally saw the familiar huge grave. He had given in to the desire in his heart and decided to move on.

Sammy had no hesitation at all, and he had walked through the half-closed gate of the grave. Karl paused a bit, but he still followed up.

The gate, the corridor, and the bricks... They were identical to what Donnie saw in his nightmare. However, as soon as they walked around the corner, they were shocked to see that a group of mummies was coming!

He didn't see any guards in his nightmare!

Donnie's heart was beating so fast that it could jump out of his chest at any time, and he felt very desperate. Mummies were powerful, and those ones coming were not even common mummies. Donnie could tell from their greasy bandages.

He took a step back, and his back was against Karl, whose silver-purple eyes now looked rather sharp and the look on his face was beyond serious.

Donnie hoped that the many powerful magic items that Karl was wearing could protect them, as well as Karl's incredible strength.

However, to his great surprise, the group of mummies ignored them and walked past them.

"Why?" Donnie murmured confusedly. He was straining every nerve to get ready to cast the most powerful spell he knew. But the mummies just passed by as if they did not exist!

"Weird," Karl said briefly, which was rare.

"Yeah... Strange. Usually, you two catch lots of attention," said a coarse, quacking voice.

"Who?!"

The voice almost startled Donnie out of his wits. He never even noticed that someone was following him!

The fatty said, "I was with you two the whole time..."

Donnie took out his small notebook, which he carried around with himself, and saw what he wrote to himself.

[If you see a fatty pretending that you two know each other well, that fatty is your roommate, Jones.]

Donnie put on an awkward smile and said, "Don't follow us silently like this again..."

The fatty felt aggrieved. He was the one who always got ignored.

"Let's go," Karl reminded them. His voice sounded nervous, but he was actually even more excited.

Along the corridor, they walked further. On their way, they had run into floating specters, dragon-liches, and strange undead made of flesh pieces, but none of those did anything to the apprentices, as if they were in two different dimensions!

At the front was the main chamber. Donnie knew it. He wondered if the dreadful undead creature he saw in the nightmare was behind the gate. Would it be able to see them?

At this stage, he had completely gone out of control because of the summoning power, and Karl and Jones were also being driven further by their great curiosity.

Pushing open the gate of the chamber, Donnie's eyes suddenly opened big!

Sammy was standing in front of a huge, black coffin and was facing them. His eyes still closed tight, but the smile on his face looked rather blood-curdling.

"Sammy!" Donnie blurted out, but he could not make any sound.

At this time, the lid of the huge black coffin was suddenly pushed open. Black miasma gushed out, and from the coffin, the familiar terrible undead creature climbed out!

Even taller than a giant, even eerier than a stitched body, even duller than the World of Souls... This thing's eyes opened sharply and were now kindled with dark-red fire. The air of death filled in the space.

Donnie felt cold and numb, and he knew that Karl and Jones felt the same way. However, Sammy was totally out of the influence and jumped into the coffin.

The chamber started shaking fiercely. There was a bottomless black pit. Something beyond touch and indescribable was hiding in it.

The black miasma bulged, but the coffin and the undead creature were firmly preventing it from coming out.

What was in there?

Donnie's consciousness gradually faded.

“Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

Donnie jumped up in his bed, gasping with all his effort. Badly shaken, he looked around and was glad to find out that he was still in the dorm. Luckily, it was just a dream!

But suddenly, he gave a gasp of horror, as he found that Sammy, Karl, and Jones were all gasping hard with their foreheads covered in sweat!

Chapter 841: Karl's Idea

Chapter 841: Karl's Idea

It can't be such a coincidence, can it? Donnie felt that the uncanny fear grabbed his heart tightly like a giant hand, making it difficult for him to breathe.

"You... had a nightmare too?" he asked uneasily. Even though he tried to keep his voice steady and normal, it still came out like the smoke at night.

"Yes." Karl was the first to catch his breath and answer Donnie's question. Then, he looked around at Sammy and the rest of them with his beautiful silver eyes and said rather solemnly, "I dreamed that Sammy was possessed by his ghost and lost his self-awareness before he walked to the center of the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep. In order to find out the reason, Donnie, Jones, and I followed him..."

"Me too!" Before Karl finished, Donnie and Jones blurted out, equally appalled. The few people in the dormitory had the same nightmare?

Could it be any weirder?

Was there really a ghost that was haunting the dormitory and influencing everywhere in secret? Or had all of them been cursed?

Donnie swallowed hard. Cold sweat gathered on his forehead and slipped off his face one drop after another. He sensed a fear that he had never felt before.

"You're the same? You followed Sammy into the tomb, saw the Original Body, and found a certain item that was sealed below it?" Karl raised his voice. He seemed shocked and scared, but he was also excited.

At a loss, Jones replied, "Yes. When we passed the tomb, the mummies, the dragon liches, and the other undead creatures turned a blind eye to all of us. So, it was because we were having a dream... I was rather puzzled back then because not everybody had my talent of 'stealth'. However... However, why was I noticed and affected? Why did I have the same dream as yours?"

In apprehension, he kept mumbling to himself, unconvinced that he had been involved in such a weird matter when he had always escaped everyone's attention. Only at such a moment was he really behaving like a teenager.

The more he listened to it, the more certain Donnie was that everybody had the same nightmare but from different perspectives. Or rather, it seemed that the few of them were manipulated to perform an opera.

How did such a weird thing happen?

"What about you, Sammy? What did you dream?" Karl jumped off his bed and stared at Sammy. He was standing next to his bed in a thin shirt.

Sammy was on his bed. The ghost on his back seemed to have lost all the vitality and was wandering lazily. He did not say anything, as if he were still dwelling in the nightmare.

Hearing Karl's question, Sammy shivered hard, and the remaining confusion on his face all turned into fear. "I... I dreamed that I was summoned by something and walked forward uncontrollably. There was nothing but darkness and silence on my way, as if it were the legendary last destiny. Then... Then, the enormous body made of countless intelligent creatures appeared and woke me up, making me realize that I was in a dream. I struggled and tried to free myself, only to no avail. In the end, I sensed death..."

His voice was not clear and sounded like dream talk, but it was enough to let his roommates know that Sammy had the same nightmare! However, he sensed the nightmare from the perspective of the possessed ghost.

"Karl, this is too weird for us to resolve on our own. Should we report it to the college tomorrow morning?"

Fatty Jones and Sammy immediately agreed. Although they were all talented and proud, they were teenagers and not even official sorcerers yet. Now that they ran into such an unimaginable incidence, it was only natural that they were panicked and looked for targets they could rely on. Without any doubt, the college, which had plenty of senior-rank sorcerers and archmages, was their pillar.

Donnie asked Karl first because he sensed from his dream that Karl had the curiosity of a cat and might encourage them to investigate in secret. Therefore, he hoped to strike his eagerness by asking him the question. Also, with the guy's background, it was possible that he could see something and offer valuable suggestions.

Karl paced back and forth in the dormitory. Suddenly, he said in a low voice, "What if it's a secret experiment of the college?"

"What? The college's experiment?" Voices of shock echoed with intense disbelief.

"I am just saying a possibility that cannot be ruled out. Maybe a certain mentor was studying the relationship between the soul and the dream, right? Because it seemed to be different from the regular dreams that are based on brain structure. If it's a confidential experiment that he does not wish anyone else to know, after we report it to the college recklessly, it's possible that..." Karl made a throat-cutting movement.

Greatly alarmed, Donnie said with his shaky voice, "It's just a possibility..."

His voice gradually lowered, because he discovered that it was indeed very possible! In Heidler, there was barely anyone that could avoid the sensors of the defense if they tried to influence them in secret, unless the alarm was not dealt with at all...

The roommates suddenly fell into extreme silence. Only the vague sound of breath suggested that there were still living creatures.

"However, we are only magic apprentices..." Frowning, Sammy said while clenching his velvet quilt so hard that veins were bulging on his head.

Jones sat on the bed like a ghost, as if he was pretending that he did not exist. "Let's not scare ourselves. If it's the college's secret experiment, there is no way that we can get away from it. So, why don't we take our chances? I do not want to have the same nightmare and wait for the final outcome every day, hoping that whoever behind the curtain is not malicious! I don't want that!"

Having worked as a secret reporter for two years, he managed to remain sane, but hysteria still got the better of him toward the end.

"Everybody had the same nightmare... Whoever did it is too strong for us to investigate in secret..." Donnie tried to remain calm.

Out of everyone's expectation, Karl smiled, which bloomed in the dark dormitory like starlight. "I know. What I'm saying is that we should not report the matter to the college in a rush. I have secret channels to contact the outside world. I'll send the incident out and ask the professionals to analyze the causes and offer suggestions. After all, there are plenty of ways to let a few people have the same nightmare, and we are incapable of determining which one it was. Then, we will decide whether we wait for rescue or report it to the college.

"It's just one more day of waiting. It shouldn't be too dangerous."

Secret channels? Professionals? Donnie suddenly recalled Karl's background. As if he saw the dawn in the middle of a night, he asked excitedly, "Is it really okay? Thank you in advance!"

With Karl's identity, it shouldn't be difficult to deal with such a stealthy schemer.

If he really had the most terrifying strength, he need not hide in the shadow at all, and he could've overthrown the Congress to do whatever he wanted!

Jones and Sammy were equally excited. They looked at Karl at the same time and were finally relieved after Karl nodded. Then, one of them further moved back into the corner, and the other began to observe the surroundings sleepily.

“I thought that you would encourage us to investigate on our own...” Relieved, Donnie said casually.

Karl chuckled. “Do I look like such a reckless and inconsiderate man?”

Yes! Donnie, Sammy, and Jones thought to themselves.

“I have the keen intuitions that come from my parents. When I sense that something is too tricky for me, I’ll ask for help,” Karl said proudly. “I’ll send the message first thing in the morning. Then, we’ll go to Mr. Felipe’s open class.”

He seemed to have forgotten his previous fright and become “carefree” again.

“Yes, there’s Mr. Felipe’s open class. I have to get some sleep.” Sammy nodded, so eager to sleep that he did not seem to have had any nightmare.

Although Felipe did not specialize in ghosts, he was the most famous necromancer in the past three decades. Therefore, Sammy admired him and wanted to attend his open class.

As he spoke, Sammy lay down again. In no more than one minute, his roommates heard the familiar breath after he was sound asleep.

Karl raised his eyebrow. “I envy him so much. He can fall asleep whenever he wants. Insomnia is not a problem for him at all.”

“That’s a whole wrong way to interpret it...” Jones said in a low voice. How inert and befuddled one’s brain must be if they could still sleep after such a nightmare? “My roommates are truly all monsters...”

Donnie glanced at him. So are you, and I am the only normal person here!

However, according to Karl, the enormous undead creature I saw was the Original Body?

.....

Outside of the Heidler Magic College, the slanted tombstones rose from the ground, and the graves behind them were scattered around a gigantic room in a rather mysterious way.

Two people descended from the dim, pale sky of the World of Souls. A young man with golden hair and a child's face smiled at the man next to him. "Mr. Felipe, are you planning to establish a branch of the Heredity Laboratory?"

It seemed that he made use of the power of the defense, which allowed him to utter in the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep.

Felipe was still tall, slim, and handsome, with a sickly face. With his hands in the pockets of his black coat, he looked around and said briefly, "Many factors that affect my research can be avoided here."

He was only wearing two badges on his chest. One of them was the badge that was a hand holding a quill, suggesting that he was a member of the Arcana Review Board, and the other badge looked like a pale hand. There were neither arcana badges nor magic ones.

Seeing that Felipe had no desire for communication, the man with a child's face smiled and accompanied him through the Cemetery of Eternal Sleep to the gate of the college. He did not dare to say anything else.

Suddenly, Felipe stopped and stared at the dark tomb at the center, squinting.

His face did not seem to change, but it was grimmer than before.

"Mr. Felipe?" the man with a child's face asked in confusion.

Felipe moved his right hand, which was wearing a white glove, out of his pocket and pointed at the center. "The scent of death there seems more intense now."

"What about it?" The man with a child's face did not feel anything wrong at all.

Felipe snorted but did not bother to explain himself. He simply gave an order, “After the open class, give me the records of the defense in the last three days.”

Chapter 842: Open Class

After the adjustment of the environment, it was brighter and brighter, and a new day began in the Heidler Magic College.

Donnie, who could not sleep, jumped from his bed and rushed into the bathroom the moment he heard the echo of the Skull Bell. He shouted, “Sammy, Karl, rise and shine! Mr. Felipe has an open class today! We won’t be able to get into the room if we are late!”

The open class, as its name suggested, was open to all apprentices, provided that they could find a spot in the hall.

Since he was woken up in the night, Donnie had considered seizing the opportunity and going to the teaching tower where the lecture was to be held in advance. However, he knew that during the period between midnight and when the Skull Bell was rung, nobody except certain senior-rank mentors with permissions was allowed to approach the three central magic towers of the college—the teaching tower, the experiment tower, and the office tower.

From the seniors that he talked to in the past few days, Donnie had heard a lot of stories where sorcerers broke into the three magic towers at night only to become zombie guards.

“So, it was indeed only a nightmare that we passed through the whole college without raising any alarm...” Donnie thought to himself.

Karl, who had fallen asleep at some point, sat up in confusion. After he combed his hair, his gem-like eyes finally glittered again. Then, he jumped off his bed and knocked on the metal rail of Sammy’s bed, urging him to get up.

Sammy rubbed his head and yawned, as if he had forgotten what happened yesterday. Then, he was suddenly dazed and said nervously, “Karl, don’t forget to send the message out.”

“Rest assured. I always have the best memories,” Karl said with a toothbrush in his mouth and foams all over his lips.

After Donnie was done washing his face and brushing his teeth, he browsed his notebook and patted his head. “Jones, let’s go.”

“You finally remember me.” Fatty Jones seemed rather moved. “Only after you wrote me down in your notebook.”

“Of course.” Karl cleaned his shirt before the mirror, grimacing in dissatisfaction. However, whatever strange expression he made, he still looked like a pretty girl. “My father once said that below the senior rank, the best memories cannot compare with a short note.”

He put on his magic robe and was about to walk out of the room. Opening the door, he said, “Remember to save a place for me.”

“Not a problem.” Donnie put on his magic robe.

After seeing Karl off, the three of them were suddenly caught in awkward silence. They were yet to fully recover from the nightmare last night. If it weren’t for Karl’s astonishing background, they wouldn’t have been able to stay calm at all.

“Let’s go. We will miss Mr. Felipe’s speech if we are late.” In the end, it was Donnie who broke the weird silence.

“Alright,” Sammy said with bloated eyes.

.....

“So many people are already here?” Donnie was blasted by the heat and the noises the moment he walked into the lobby on the first floor of the teaching tower. There were one and a half hours to go before the open class, and almost three hundred people were already waiting in lines!

Looking at the jam-packed lobby ahead of them, Sammy shook his head in surprise. “We got up immediately after the Skull Bell was rung. How could they be faster than us?”

“Perhaps they did not brush their teeth or wash their face. Perhaps they finished everything before the bell was rung and rushed here the moment they heard the knock.” As a secret reporter, Jones was rather knowledgeable and experienced.

Sammy looked at him strangely. “Who are you?”

Having been struck too many times, Jones was already numb. He shrugged and said, “I am your—”

Before he concluded his sentence, Sammy had already turned around unconcernedly and talked to the ghost on his back. He did not care about who he was at all! Or rather, he felt that the question was not important.

“We aren’t too late either.” Noticing Jones’ “fury”, Donnie interjected, “The speech hall can accommodate five hundred people. We can definitely go in.”

“Yes,” Jones said in relief. That was the reward of a nightmare!

After half an hour, more and more queues had been lined up outside of the speech hall without leaving any empty ground. The apprentices and sorcerers who came late could only look at the crowd in regrets and leave reluctantly.

At this moment, Karl walked in from the outside. He was obviously shocked by the massive crowd, but he was agile enough to swim among the people like a little fish and approached his roommates.

The apprentices behind Donnie were all infuriated when they saw Karl cutting the line, but before they lashed out, Karl raised his head and smiled. “Forgive me, my friends have been keeping a place for me.”

His smile was mixed with apology, shame, pitifulness, and gentleness. The apprentices’ eyes bulged immediately as they said, “It... It doesn’t matter.”

It was not until then that Karl turned around and said to Donnie, Sammy, and Jones in a low voice, “I’ve already sent the message. We will receive the analysis and suggestions of professionals by tomorrow.”

“Thank you, Karl,” Donnie said honestly.

The four of them stopped talking and started to think about their own business until the gate of the speech hall was opened and the people before them moved forward in order.

Because they were not too late, Karl and the rest of them were at the center of the hall and could see the podium ahead rather clearly. Outside the gate, many magic apprentices and sorcerers who did not have a seat were standing and listening.

At this moment, a smaller gate on the other side squeaked, and a tall, slim man in a black coat walked in. He coughed with extreme indifference on his sickly face.

“Mr. Felipe is exactly like what’s described in the paper,” Donnie said in a low voice.

Felipe did not like being exposed to the public, so he rarely accepted the invitations of TV interviews and preferred newspapers or radio stations.

Karl smiled in a low voice. “I wonder if his arcana expertise is as what the newspapers described...”

“You don’t know that?” Donnie asked, finding it odd. Such a renowned archmage who had good chances to become legendary should’ve received much attention in his family. Huh. Why is Mr. Felipe only wearing the badges of the Arcana Review Board and the Hand of Paleness, instead of arcana and magic badges like regular sorcerers would?

Karl shook his head. “I do not have enough arcana knowledge to decide his papers and his research, and my brother does not like to discuss him. However, he must be awesome to have won so many honors.”

From the podium, Felipe looked around at the apprentices and sorcerers down below. Wherever his eyes reached, everybody fell silent. Then, he spoke with his special gloomy voice, “I am Felipe. You may call me mister or mentor. I’m here today to show you the bleeding-edge theories and achievements in genetics. It’s possible that you do not understand them, but you must know them, or you will rot like the bodies in coffins without being able to present any valuable works...”

Donnie listened attentively. However, he keenly sensed that Mr. Felipe’s eyes seemed to have stopped for a while on the few of them. Of course, the pause was so short that Donnie thought it was his illusion.

“Mr. Felipe is entirely different from the other mentors. The other mentors all said that they were here to share the latest knowledge with us, but he...” Sammy asked the ghost on his back to rub his forehead to keep himself calm.

Jones also nodded. “Yes, he is very blunt and straightforward, completely ignoring our feelings...”

As Felipe’s speech went deeper, everybody was captivated by the marvelous genetics, which included chromosomes, genetic models based on alchemical reactions, and the speculations and experiments on heredity.

Most of the information was too much for the sorcerers and apprentices to understand, but they were indeed amazed by the wonders of the field that involved the secrets of life.

“That is all my speech. Do you have any questions?” Without them knowing it, it was already noon, and Felipe put his right hand back into his pocket.

The apprentices and sorcerers were just back to themselves and hadn’t even raised their hands when a magnetic male voice said, “I have a question!”

Donnie looked at Karl, only to see his highly-raised hand and his fully-written notebook.

Felipe nodded and said casually, “What is your question?”

Karl stood up excitedly and bowed. “Hello, Mr. Felipe, I am Brades. I would like to ask your opinion on the current genetic model. Personally, I don’t...”

Donnie held his forehead helplessly and moved his eyes away, pretending that he did not know Karl. Based on his experience, Karl would certainly ramble on.

However, instead of waiting for Karl to finish, Felipe answered the question, “It’s obvious that the abundances and wondrousness of this world cannot be described and inherited by this simple model.”

Everybody gasped hard. Was Mr. Felipe openly expressing his dissatisfaction regarding the current genetic model?

COMMENT

Karl seemed rather uncomfortable when his long speech was cut. So, he asked again, “Then, Mr. Felipe, do you think it is possible to change one’s look by controlling genes? Is it possible to—”

Felipe interrupted him again, “That’s not a problem at all. As a matter of fact, the blood power research in the Magic Empire is exactly a practice in that regard, except that they did not have any theoretical guidance and could only summarize the pattern by abundant human experiments.”

Karl’s face was so twisted as if he were being suffocated. “I have one more question...”

“Please give other people a chance. You’ve already asked two questions,” Felipe said straightforwardly.

Karl could only sit down gloomily, but his lips were still moving up and down, as if he were talking to himself.

Donnie couldn’t help but feel amused. Normally, there was no way that he could stop Karl from rambling. It was quite enjoyable to see the guy choked.

In the meantime, he raised his own hand, waiting to be picked.

.....

After the open class, Felipe sat in a secret chamber in the teaching tower by himself. The artificial intelligence before him was playing all the pictures recorded in the college in the past three days. After the development of artificial intelligence and alchemical storage materials, it was much easier to save things now.

In the dim pictures, the whole college was in order, and when it came to night, everything was quiet without the slightest anomaly. Felipe stared at the pictures with a cup of red wine in his hand, not leaving out any detail. However, after half a day, he still did not find anything that deserved his attention.

Suddenly, someone knocked on the door lightly.

“What is it?” Felipe asked.

“Mr. Felipe, somebody sent a note to you.” It was a servant.

Felipe nodded, and the door of the room was opened. The servant walked in and handed a plain-looking note to him.

“Donnie?” Felipe saw the handwriting that he was rather familiar with on the note and read the word on it.

.....

In Room 202 of the Life Tower...

“Hu. It’s not dangerous. My brother asks us not to worry about it and just leave it alone.” Karl jogged in from the outside and waved the note in his hands in great delight.

Chapter 843: The Heredity Laboratory

Chapter 843: The Heredity Laboratory

“Really?” Donnie, Sammy, and Jones stood up at the same time, with delight and disbelief beaming out of their faces.

Karl nodded heavily. “Of course. I’m too familiar with my brother’s handwriting and seal.”

“I mean, is he really confident about that? Did he specify the cause or tell you who was behind it?” Although Donnie knew that Karl’s brother was probably a strong and influential big shot, he did not know the guy in person after all. Also, it was a matter that concerned his own safety. So, he couldn’t help but ask again, refusing to believe it so easily.

Karl tossed the note in his hands to Donnie. “He couldn’t have made the statement without a 90% confidence. Well, he only said that it was not a common dream in the domain of illusion but involved something more sophisticated. He did not point out who the mastermind was. I estimate that he must be still investigating and hasn’t drawn any conclusion yet. The only thing certain is that the enemy is not as formidable as we thought. So, we’ll pretend that we have forgotten the matter while we secretly observe and wait...”

Donnie looked at the note in his hands. The content was basically what Karl said, but of course, in a much more concise way. At the end of the note was a seal in the shape of a black hat, which seemed common but carried distinctive air.

“But I really don’t think it’s very safe...” Jones muttered. However, there was nothing he could do. Reporting it to the college recklessly might put himself in danger.

Sammy took a breath in relief. He extended his right hand to his left shoulder to pat the ghost, which had been rather lethargic recently. Then, he yawned and said obscurely, “Since Karl’s brother put it that way, there is no need for us to be worried about the matter. I’m so sleepy.”

Donnie's facial muscles twitched. "Sammy, I don't think you are taking it seriously. So far, the real cause of the matter and the mastermind haven't been found out. How can we not be worried?"

"So what? What else can we do except to be more careful?" Sammy was rather carefree. He took off his clothes and got on his bed.

Karl smiled, and his eyes were twinkling. "There's really nothing to be scared of now that my brother is on it. If that nightmare happens to us again, we are going to explore it well..."

He was obviously eager again.

Donnie couldn't help thinking to himself that the guy seemed rather confident in his brother.

.....

The next day in the morning, the four people of Room 202 were busy washing up and brushing their teeth when they heard heavy door knocks.

Donnie put on his magic robe and walked over, opening the door. "Come on... Mr. Robert?"

It was the dead-looking Mr. Robert who stood outside of the door. The red needle-like brilliance in his eyes and the clear veins on his emaciated face chilled Donnie.

Why was he here in person?

Despite his horrible look, Robert had a gentle and comforting voice. "I happened to be passing the Life Tower, and I dropped by and came to ask you if you are willing to join the Heidler Branch of the Heredity Laboratory as apprentice-level assistants?"

"What Heidler Branch of the Heredity Laboratory? Is it an institution that Mr. Felipe has established in the college? Does 'you' include Donnie, me, Sammy, and Jones, or only some of us? Mr. Robert, I am really interested in genetic factors, and I have a reasonably good understanding of that..." Karl charged out with a toothbrush in his hands and white foams flowing from his mouth as he blurted out his questions and self-introductions.

At this moment, the apprentices who were going to the teaching tower noticed Robert who had a special appearance. They stopped and looked at Donnie and his roommates in shock.

The Heidler Branch of the Heredity Laboratory? Is it true?

Donnie, Sammy, and Jones were too shocked to speak anything. They were crammed at the door and looked at Robert earnestly, waiting for his answer.

“Because it is convenient to conduct certain experiments with high requirements in the World of Souls thanks to its special conditions, Mr. Felipe has been planning to set up a branch of the Heredity Laboratory here. A few days ago, the basic arrangements were settled, and the recruitment began. I was the first arcanist to be picked by Mr. Felipe,” Robert explained the reasons unhurriedly. “Because of your questions in the open class, you left some impression on Mr. Felipe, so he asked me about you when he decided to hire apprentice-level assistants. Since I was very satisfied with your efforts, I recommended you to him seriously.”

Pausing for a moment, he added, “It includes Karl, Donnie, and Jones.”

The apprentices around were finally back to themselves as they gasped hard. It was really the Heidler Branch of the Heredity Laboratory! They were really going to study under Mr. Felipe! Why were they chosen instead of other people?

Shocked and jealous, many apprentices couldn't have regretted more. Had they known it in advance, they would have raced to ask questions like Karl did to leave a good impression on Mr. Felipe. Everybody in the Life Tower knew Karl's name because of his special appearance.

“Really?” Donnie and Jones asked in disbelief again. Sammy, on the other hand, lowered his head in frustration. He was an apprentice who majored in the soul, after all, and the Heredity Laboratory certainly wouldn't pick him.

Robert nodded. “Why would I lie to you about that? Mr. Felipe remembers you because he has always believed that the arcanists who do not ask whys are not qualified arcanists.”

It was something President Douglas said before. All the apprentices knew it very well, but now that they heard it again, they felt that their remorse was biting their hearts like rats. They shouldn’t have been restrained by shyness, fear, or other feelings! They must be bolder to ask whys in the future!

“It’s... It’s fantastic! Thank you, Mr. Robert...” Donnie expressed his gratitude excitedly. Although Mr. Felipe had asked about them, they wouldn’t have been picked without their mentor’s recommendation.

Jones was stunned. He had an ignorant smile on his face, as if he had entered his “domain”. The surprise came too unexpectedly. He wasn’t prepared at all!

Robert nodded and said expressionlessly, “It seems that you are all willing to accept the offer. Then, you can come to my office later. I’ll bring you to the branch of the laboratory to check in.”

“Mr. Robert, what will we mostly do as apprentice-level assistants? Help with experiment materials? Observe and feed the creatures we cultivate? Or will we analyze them with the knowledge in the studies of magic crystals?” Seeing that plenty of people were watching, Karl quietly put down the toothbrush and got rid of the foams in his mouth. He was a graceful gentleman who valued manners!

“Somebody will tell you what to do.” Robert’s lips twitched as he ignored Karl’s storm of questions.

“How marvelous!” Jones wasn’t back to himself until Robert was far away. He then waved his arms excitedly.

.....

After the lift descended to the hall, it did not stop. Instead, it emitted a pale brightness that was connected to the mentor’s badge on Robert's chest, before it continued descending into the darkness.

"Well, is the laboratory below the ground?" Karl looked around in excitement and curiosity.

Donnie turned around, pretending that he did not know the guy. Although his roommate looked as quiet and peaceful as a lake, the guy was actually like an energetic cat.

Robert simply turned a deaf ear to Karl's incessant questions.

After a while, the lift stopped, and the pale curtain of light was opened. A silver metal shuttle-shaped object appeared up ahead. Robert stepped on it first.

"We need to take an underground shuttle?" Karl asked joyfully.

Neither Donnie nor Jones had seen it before, and they were rather ill at ease. They were grateful for Karl's introduction.

"Yes." Robert nodded.

The underground shuttle was closed and moved forward along the tunnel quickly. After three minutes, it came to a stop slowly. On its left side were two silver metal gates that were cold and splendid.

Robert waved a strange badge at it, and the gate backed off from two directions, revealing a pathway with walls that were like an orange beehive. It was shaped in such an astounding style that even Karl subconsciously stopped talking.

After they passed the channel in silence, many different roads stretched out before them. At the end of every road was a different metal gate.

"I'll lead you to apply for the entrance badge first," Robert said briefly.

As he spoke, the metal gate on one of the roads was opened, and Felipe walked out with his hands in the pockets of his black long coat.

“Good morning, Mr. Felipe!” Donnie and Jones greeted him in excitement. Karl was late, but he also paid his respects.

Felipe glanced at them and briefly stopped on everyone’s face. Then, he said casually, “This place is not your playground. I hope that you can remember that.”

“Of course, Mr. Felipe.” While Donnie and his roommates replied, Felipe had already moved past them and walked to the other side.

Suddenly, he stopped and said without turning around, “Do not ask Karl to run any experiment yet. Let him be familiarized with the work of the research groups first.”

Donnie was secretly amused. Had Karl’s notoriety as the “laboratory vandal” spread to the ears of Mr. Felipe too?

Karl pursed his lips and couldn’t have looked more wronged.

At this moment, Donnie’s heart suddenly raced, as if something deep inside the laboratory or further into the ground was summoning him.

What’s that? Donnie stared at the wall in a daze, uncertain whether or not it was his illusion, because the feeling of being summoned flashed fast.

He observed Karl and Jones, whom he almost ignored, only to discover that they sensed nothing. He was even more confused. Did he really have an illusion because he was too worried?

“It’s inconvenient to ask right now. We can discuss after we are back in the dormitory...” Donnie held back his anxiety.

.....

At night, in Room 202 of the Life Tower...

Because Karl and Jones did not have the feeling, and neither did Sammy who was having a class, Donnie’s strange feeling did not raise much attention. After all, they believed that somebody was taking care of it for him.

In his sleepiness, Donnie's heart raced again, and he seemed to see the color of fire in the darkness.

He opened his eyes quickly, only to find himself lying before a tombstone. Sammy, Karl, and Jones were not far away from him, and they were observing the environment with confusion.

Chapter 844: Action

“How did it happen?” Donnie blurted out in shock and fear, but after his voice spread out, it seemed to be melted in the air and did not raise the slightest ripples. There was still nothing but quietness and serenity among the black and white tombstones.

Jones looked at him, frightened, and then at Karl. Didn't you say that we need not be worried? Then, why are we having the same nightmare?

They were very familiar with the experience, which was absolutely the same as the last nightmare!

Karl looked around, slightly confused. He then smiled gently. “It’s just a nightmare. What’s to be worried about?”

His voice echoed in Donnie’s heart like some sort of spell. On his peaceful and gorgeous face, silver eyes were glittering like two beautiful stars. There wasn’t the slightest fear but curiosity and the desire for exploration.

.....

In the control pivot of the office tower of the Heidler Magic College...

The stream screens were displayed in every corner of the college. Light and shadows were altering all the time.

Some of the screens showed the same dormitory from quite a few perspectives. The plate on the door read “Life Tower 202”.

In the darkness of night, the dormitory was as quiet as any other place without the tiniest anomaly. Under the illumination of the tender lamps, it emanated unusual coldness.

Standing before the screens, Felipe stared at them with his hands in the pockets of his long coat. They were not just manifesting the pictures but also playing the sounds and the simulated waves that were perceived, making one feel that they were on the spot.

However, Room 202 was still quiet and usual.

“Hehe.” Felipe suddenly snorted.

.....

“How can we not be worried? If our dream can be manipulated in the heavily defended college, who knows what will happen next?” In the “dream”, Donnie seemed more temperamental than usual, because he sensed the summoning from far away again. His heart beat faster and faster.

Sammy was both scared and puzzled when he looked at Karl. “Didn’t your brother say that we should leave it alone? But why are we entering the same nightmare again? I really thought that there was no need to worry about it...”

The ghost on his back, energized, was stretching its arms in great delight.

And you really stopped worrying about it? Jones secretly mocked Sammy.

Karl waved his hands. “When my brother says that there is no need to worry about it, there is no need to worry about it.”

He seemed rather confident, but Donnie, Sammy, and Jones were not convinced. Does anybody know your brother? Who knows whether his promise is valid? After all, the one thing that is certain is that we have come into the same nightmare!

Blinking, Karl did not explain why he trusted his brother. Instead, he simply grimaced and said, “As a matter of fact, we weren’t really harmed in the previous nightmares, were we?”

Well... Donnie was dazed. It was indeed true. The previous nightmares, though vivid and intimidating, did not really hurt them before they withdrew from the dreams under the watch of the Original Body. Not just that, but it seemed that the increase of their spiritual powers had also been greatly accelerated. Was it a benefit of such “dreaming”?

“However, the harmlessness of the previous nightmares does not mean that we won’t be harmed in this one.” Jones tried to cover his existence, fearing that a ferocious specter would suddenly emerge from the darkness.

Sammy nodded slightly. “It happens often in the field of soul and illusion that the victims could be killed when their dreams are controlled. The King of Nightmare is particularly good at that.”

“That’s right.” Karl nodded solemnly and said with a peculiar smile, “However, now that we have already entered the dream, why don’t we explore actively and find out the reason? After all, if danger awaits us, we will run into it in any case if we are being manipulated, and if there is no danger, we will not be harmed no matter how we explore. Besides, this is our dream. If we believe that we are strong, we will really be strong.”

Donnie, Sammy, and Jones were all stunned. On second thought, Karl’s words did make sense, because they all sensed that the summoning from far away was getting stronger and stronger. Even if they did not take any action, they would be attracted to it sooner or later!

Meanwhile, they vaguely felt that something was wrong with Karl’s statement.

“However, before that, we need to see if we can break out of the dream!” Fatty Jones gnashed his teeth.

Huh, break out of the dream? Donnie and Sammy both looked at Jones, astounded. Neither of them had much adventure experience. They had no idea what Jones was planning to do at all.

Jones raised his left hand, put it in front of his mouth, and bit it hard.

“Ahh!!!”

A miserable cry burst out in everybody’s heart and did not break the silence of the cemetery.

Putting his left hand right, and looking at the bleeding tooth marks on it, Jones said to the surprised Donnie and Sammy in self-mockery, "I'm told that pain can help people get away from dreams, but it seems that whoever controls our dream is very powerful."

"As I said, this is a very special 'dream'..." Karl mumbled before he continued with a smile, "The ordinary pain wouldn't do. Jones, why don't you knock the tombstone with your head? Maybe you will get away from the dream after you pass out."

In a bitter smile, Jones looked at the tough black tombstone, on which a pale epitaph was written in the ancient magic language—"He thought that he wouldn't die, but he did."

"Forget it. I don't think it will work." Jones compared the hardness of his head and that of the tombstone and backed off without a word. He tried to summon his "talent" and prevented himself from being watched.

Karl chuckled. "Then, should we set off to the central tomb?"

"Alright!" Donnie did not hesitate this time, because he could barely control his body right now. Therefore, they might as well seize the day and explore actively!

Now that Donnie had reached a decision, Sammy certainly wouldn't object to it. To be honest, he hadn't quite figured out the situation yet.

Now that there was no object, the four of them pressed toward the central tomb under Karl's lead.

The cemetery was covered in a vague black mist. The sky was as gray and dim as before. The enormous tomb loomed there quietly like a dark monster, and its half-open gate resembled the mouth of the creature.

Swallowing, Donnie suppressed his fear and walked into the monster's mouth behind Karl.

The moment they entered the pathway, they encountered the mummies that they were rather familiar with. However, they were not panicked this time thanks to their experience. They moved slightly to the side and avoided the route of the mummies' march so that they could react in time in case of an emergency.

With their gray cloths saturated with oil and their eyes full of pale fire, the mummies passed before Donnie and his roommates without a sound. Perhaps they were also releasing the stench of decay, but none of the intruders could smell it.

"So, they really cannot see us," Donnie said in a low voice.

The ghost behind Sammy stretched out as he asked, "Was it the same last time?"

In the previous nightmare, he was possessed by the ghost and did not sense much. He could only listen to Donnie's description.

"Yes. It's exactly like last time." Karl was even more excited as if he had remembered something.

.....

Outside of the enormous tomb, the vague black mist seemed to be frozen. The place was in utter silence as it had always been.

Suddenly, in the middle of the black mist, ripples spread out, and a figure was gathered out of nothing!

He was wearing a black long coat with his hands in his pockets. With a tall nose, thin lips, and a sickly face... It was Felipe who watched the screens in the control pivot!

He had entered the dreams of Karl, Donnie, and the rest of them!

Looking around, Felipe nodded slightly with a grim face. In the monotonous gloom, he walked toward the gate of the tomb unhurriedly.

Suddenly, he stopped and looked at the back of the tombstones sharply, before he demanded, "Get out."

Behind the tombstone, many other ripples spread out and gathered into a human being.

He was wearing a black double-breasted suit with a top hat. He was very tall but not slender. He had black hair and black eyes, with a chiseled face. His eyebrows were dense and extended to his temples in a slant. He was a handsome and masculine man.

“You’re here too.” Felipe did not seem surprised.

The man said with a lazy smile, “Having discovered me so easily, Mr. Felipe, you are truly out of my expectation.”

Felipe turned around and kept walking toward the gate of the tomb before he asked casually and indifferently, “I came here because I used the special help of the college’s defense. Why could you?”

“As the child of a demigod and a top legend, I certainly have my own special abilities.” The man also walked to the gate of the tomb at ease. However, from what Felipe could tell, his answer did not provide any information.

Felipe opened the tomb and walked in like a king who was inspecting his territory. “You didn’t ask for anyone’s help? Are you not scared that it may be dangerous?”

The man chuckled and was not nervous at all, as if he were on a vacation in the Land of Thousand Lakes. “As the child of a demigod and a top legend, I certainly have my own special abilities.”

The same words meant different things. Felipe stopped talking and walked into the pathway.

.....

After they opened the gate of the main vault, Donnie and his roommates immediately saw the dark coffin.

Their “harmony” with the powerful undead creatures on the way did not ease their anxiety at all. They all stared at the coffin in tension, fearing that the terrifying “Original Body” inside would suddenly sit up and banish them from the dream with its eyes that represented death, or even simply deprive them of their lives!

Of course, they were also more or less thinking of escaping from the dream with the Original Body.

The vague scent of death started circulating, and a dark abyss appeared below the dark coffin, as if something intangible had been hidden below.

In the meantime, screeches echoed inside the coffin, and the Original Body that was beyond the imagination of Donnie was about to sit up.

Donnie, Sammy, and Jones all had intense desires. The abyss was summoning them!

It made them unable to control themselves. Before the cover of the coffin was moved away, they threw themselves into the coffin “fluently”.

Karl was briefly stunned. Then, gritting his teeth and touching an accessory on his chest, he stepped forward and lunged into the abyss too.

Chapter 845: The Eighth Research Institution of the Congress of Magic

Chapter 845: The Eighth Research Institution of the Congress of Magic

The dark mist spread out so densely that one could not see his own fingers or hear his own voice. They felt that they were caught in the purest and quietest death. Even their soul was befuddled, without the slightest idea occurring to them.

Suddenly, something gray penetrated through the intense black mist. Donnie shivered and got away from the mind fridity. He found himself standing in the middle of a desert that was full of black sand. The sky was pale and gray, the same as any part of the World of Souls. Not far away up ahead, a black, ragged palace was standing. It was ancient and splendid, releasing the infinite air of death.

Dum, dum, dum.

Donnie's heart was beating fast again, as if something was summoning him inside that dilapidated palace. The call was so strong, so clear, and so irresistible.

"Is there something summoning me in the palace?" somebody asked, and the voice appeared in Donnie's mind.

Donnie turned back in confusion, only to discover that Sammy, Karl, and a fatty were standing behind him looking at the same palace not far away.

Well, who is this fatty?

Donnie did not ask it out. Since the guy had a nightmare together with them and was included in Karl's mind communication, he had to be very close to them. It was a shame that he did not carry his notebook...

The ghost behind Sammy trembled nonstop and buried its face on Sammy's neck, as if it were intimidated by the black palace and what was in it. However, in the meantime, its hands pulled Sammy's body, as if it were urging him to enter the palace and approach the thing.

"It's a dream of such a level?" Karl said to himself, half lost and half refreshed. Then, he announced as if he were giving an order, "Let's go in and take a look!"

Donnie and Sammy did not reply. Under the strong summoning, they had already walked off.

Passing the desolate wilderness, the four of them drew close to the black palace and saw the gate that was carved with pale patterns.

The patterns were weird, twisted, mysterious, and vintage. They seemed to be in a certain intangible rhythm.

Wu! Wu! Wu!

Suddenly, a loud and miserable cry came over. Donnie and Sammy almost tripped themselves over.

In a defense posture, Karl looked at the source of the sound eagerly. The "attacker" must be either strong or special to make sounds in the dream that was similar to the World of Souls!

They saw a half-rotten owl on the top of a broken pillar near the gate. Pale bones protruded from its body made of black, rotten meat, and its two wings were gray and slim. On its head, one of the eyes had decayed into a black hole, but the other retained the strange brownish colors and was staring at the strangers indifferently. It kept letting out miserable cries, which made Donnie, Sammy, and Jones tremble in intimidation. Was it the envoy of death? Was the sound here to claim their lives?

"An owl that can keep its original appearance in the palace shouldn't be surprising. Have you not seen any undead creatures? I must've dissected dozens of such owls..." Karl said in disappointment.

Donnie couldn't have thanked Karl's talkativeness more at such a moment, which relieved him from the devastating and strange cries of the owl. Otherwise, he feared that his soul would be broken one bit after another and transformed into part of the palace. Although he did not know why Karl was not affected, his feeling was definitely unmistakable!

"Let's go in." After an elaborate talk, Karl opened the gate with mysterious patterns.

The gate opened without a sound. It was nothing but pitch darkness inside, as if countless monsters were hiding.

Dum, dum, dum.

The moment the gate was opened, Donnie, Sammy, and Jones all clearly sensed something. It was right there in front of the palace!

"Come on!"

"Come on!"

The summoning had already turned into a concrete voice. Donnie and his other two roommates stepped forwardly subconsciously, but Karl looked around and observed the environment in great curiosity.

The more they stepped forward, the clearer the voices of summoning became.

"Come on! You will receive power and a long life!"

"Come on! Strength, wealth, glory, and beauties are waiting for you!"

"Come on! You need not study or research arduously anymore. You will grasp the unparalleled power immediately!"

"Pu." In the mind communication, Karl laughed in amusement, which slightly woke up Donnie, Sammy, and Jones whose heads were already swollen with blood.

“What are you laughing for?” Donnie asked subconsciously.

Unable to hold back his laughter, Karl said, “The temptation is glaringly inconsistent. The first two statements are formal and grandeur, but the last one is too specific. Haha. You need not study or research hard to grasp power. It seems to be specifically prepared for the students who have taken the College Entrance Exam. It’s like a weaselly man holding a donut and saying to a little girl, ‘You should come with me. You will have wonderful food every day, and you don’t have to go to school or finish your homework’. Haha. Don’t you find it petty and amusing?”

“No...” Sammy blurted out.

Donnie and Jones also nodded. Karl truly had strange humor.

“You can hear the summoning?” Donnie suddenly realized something. Didn’t he say that he could not hear the summoning?

Karl chuckled. “I have certain special abilities...”

He did not explain much. Intense curiosity beamed out of his face, as if he could not wait to meet this tasteless tempter.

After they passed the hall, it was seven stairs before them. Above the stairs was a grave and intimidating throne.

Sitting on the throne was a unique black full armor that was glimmering in coldness. It was poised as if a real person were seated there.

It sat there quietly, but it seemed to have filled the whole universe and dominated everything. Before the mask of the helmet was the impenetrable darkness, exactly like death that nobody could escape or see through.

The moment they saw the full armor, Donnie, Sammy, and Jones’ heartbeats were slowed. At a loss and enthralled, they extended their right hands and were about to touch it.

The overwhelming power was right before their eyes, and the ecstasy of controlling everything was so clear. As long as they took parts of the full armor and put it on themselves, they would obtain it easily!

How could Donnie, Sammy, and Jones, who were still magic apprentices, resist it?

Even Karl who had been conscious the whole time frowned, his face changing all the time. He simply watched Donnie and the rest of them acquire the black armor without doing anything.

In the black desert that was full of sand, two people were gazing at the enormous palace quietly. It was exactly Felipe and the vigorous handsome young man earlier.

“Just as I expected...” The young man chuckled, the laziness on his face unchanged at all.

Right when Donnie, Sammy, and Jones were about to touch the weird armor, he suddenly extended his right hand and pressed the void before him.

All of a sudden, he became illusionary, as if he had dispersed and existed everywhere. The whole black desert immediately shook violently, with the earth falling apart.

His hands in his pockets, Felipe observed the changes in silence without any expression on his face.

Power, fortune, and glory were near at hand. Donnie was so passionate that substantial desire oozed from his eyes. His palm was almost reaching the cold armor.

Right at this moment, the earth shook so violently that Donnie, Sammy, and Jones fell on the ground.

Donnie, who was slightly awakened, realized in surprise that cracks were appearing on the captivating armor. Then, it broke apart without a sound and turned into a cluster of dispersive black, white, and gray.

The moment he saw the indescribable and intangible black, white, and gray, Donnie felt that his mind was frozen in eternal quietness.

Even his body started to rot.

Crack.

Something clearly broke.

Donnie opened his eyes abruptly and observed the environment, but his face was frozen again. He thought that he had got rid of the dream, but the scene around him was still strange.

It was infinite darkness, with silver or gold magic runes glittering like stars. They were joined into different constellations and brilliant nebulae.

In the middle of the flowing magic symbols, the cluster of black, white, and gray couldn't have been quiet. Donnie did not have the feeling that he would die the moment he saw it anymore.

"What is this place?" Donnie asked subconsciously, not expecting an answer.

However, Karl's voice echoed. He replied in confusion, "A very familiar place..."

It was not until then that Donnie realized Karl, Sammy, and the fatty were still next to him.

Squeak.

A door seemed to be opened. Donnie looked over in shock, only to discover that a silver gate appeared in the starry cosmos. From out of the gate, a graceful old man in a red, glamorous magic robe came in. He seemed as energetic as ever.

"Ah..." Karl sighed in surprise and delight.

The old man seemed to have sensed something and suddenly turned his eyes at them. In the slightly dirty red eyes, electricity was glittering.

Donnie trembled and was paralyzed as if he had an electric shock. He then lost consciousness and fell into the darkness.

The darkness ebbed, and Donnie rolled over and sat up, breathing heavily nonstop. He looked around again and was finally relieved.

The rays out of the window were dim, and it was quiet and peaceful in the room. It was his own dormitory. He had finally got rid of his nightmare!

However, that old man was truly intimidating. After only one glimpse from the guy, he had been completely woken up.

“Finally awake...” He heard the voices of Sammy and the fatty.

Karl, however, chuckled in a low voice without any stop as if he had been deranged. Donnie was rather intimidated and feared that something was still not right.

“Karl, are you alright?” He ventured to ask.

.....

After the dream was broken, Felipe and the mysterious young man did not appear in the place where they entered the dream. Instead, they emerged in a metal tunnel whose wall was full of decorations in the shape of hives.

The two of them walked forward in silence for a while until they reached a grim gate. Next to the gate were several words written in the common tongue.

[The Eighth Research Institution of the Congress of Magic: Lab of Demigods.]

Chapter 846: Seals

Chapter 846: Seals

An invisible light passed Felipe and the mysterious man, and the silver gate was immediately opened, revealing a honeycomb-shaped pathway in splendid colors.

On the pathway, an old man in a red magic robe was staring at them with lightning bouncing out of his eyes. He lambasted, “Was Brades here just now? Otherwise, Hathaway’s experiment couldn’t have had such an accident! Also, I sensed him!”

The young man secretly grimaced. “Maybe...”

Then, he asked innocently, “What exactly has happened?”

.....

Clang!

The Skull Bell of the office tower let out a long and freezing echo.

Donnie happened to be drawing the last line in his soul. So, the magic model collapsed and absorbed the ocean of energy crazily. Life and death entangled, and “power” kept branching, resulting in fierce changes.

After everything died down, a complicated “crystal” was added into Donnie’s soul. It flowed mysteriously as the vivid representation of a certain law. It also showed that Donnie had crossed the phase of apprentice and become an official sorcerer!

It was the breakthrough that countless magic apprentices had dreamed about, but most of the apprentices could barely fulfill their wish.

After they became official sorcerers, not only would they be given the power that could kill apprentices and ordinary people easily, but they would also automatically become the members of their hometown's parliament, same as the nobles. For the children of civilians, it meant that they had stepped into the upper society!

Donnie, who was not of a noble background, reviewed himself in delight. After he almost touched the black armor several months ago, Karl, Sammy, and he never had similar nightmares. Their lives and studies were rather peaceful, and it was much easier for him to make breakthroughs in spiritual power. So, after Karl and Sammy, he became an official sorcerer before the new year! It was a reasonably good achievement even considering all the apprentices of the Heidler Magic College.

Although some people had become official sorcerers before they were admitted by the Heidler Magic College, most apprentices were never qualified to fight for the rank until the end of their freshman year. Few of them made the breakthrough before the new year.

"I feel that the few nightmares polished my soul. That's why my spiritual power increased faster and more steadily..." Donnie had a lot of random thoughts. "The nightmares are enough to cause such changes. What could have happened if I touched the black full armor in the end?

"That's not right. Perhaps I would have been controlled by the black armor. I can't be too greedy... Well, I should visit home during the new year holiday and thank Mr. Dollos by the way. Without his generous help, it would've taken forever for me to become an official sorcerer..."

.....

In year 24 of the arcana calendar, at the end of the Month of Ice, any drop of water would be frozen in the blowing wind immediately. The passersby on the street covered themselves in thick clothes and lowered their hats under the coldness.

"It's already so cold..." On the Hexagram Station, Karl pulled his man suit and intentionally exhaled, raising a white mist from his mouth.

Although Donnie had become an official sorcerer, he hadn't cast any spell that could resist the coldness. Therefore, he was also shivering. Holding back his black magic robe, he said, "Yes. Winter only feels like winter in Rentato."

The Heidler Magic College was in the World of Souls with a permanent temperature adjusted by the shield of the college, making it impossible for the students to perceive seasonal changes. After they were out of the World of Souls, Heidler City had been corrupted by the air of the World of Souls for too long and therefore looked more or less the same. On the magic steam trains, there were air conditioners that provided heat. So, although they had seen snow all their way here, Donnie and Karl did not feel that it was winter until this moment.

"I need to go home. See you after the holiday," Karl said in a sweet smile. Then, he waved his hands. "By the way, Happy New Year!"

Sammy and Jones were separated from them in the station in Heidler. After all, their destinations were different.

Watching Karl disappear into the crowd in the station, Donnie sighed faintly. It had been half a year, but he was still not used to Karl's look yet.

Shaking his head, he got rid of the thought and walked out of the station. He had booked a train ticket to return to his hometown tomorrow, and he could only visit and thank Mr. Dollos as well as the teachers who took care of him while he was in school today.

Near the Triumph Square, Donnie walked toward the Knowledge Bookstore in joy, eager to tell Mr. Dollos the good news that he had been promoted into an official sorcerer. It was a simple, understandable show-off that Donnie couldn't stop himself from doing.

"How did this happen?" Donnie stood before the Knowledge Bookstore in a daze, not understanding what happened.

He saw that the gate of the Knowledge Bookstore was closed, with quite a few pieces of dim and fuzzy paper stuck to it.

“How is it closed?” Donnie approached in surprise and identified the words on the paper carefully.

“This store has been closed for tax evasion by the Tax Office of Holm.”

“This store has been co-closed by the Punishment Department of the Congress of Magic and the Police Department of Holm for selling banned books.”

“This store has been co-closed by the Punishment Department of the Congress of Magic and the City Hall of Rentato for selling fake and unqualified magic items.”

...

Donnie read the orders and mumbled to himself, “What exactly did Mr. Dollos do?”

Ten years ago, thanks to the further popularization of magic items and the growing number of alchemical workshops of different categories, the life in Holm changed greatly. One of the greatest new features was the division of labor. Therefore, Heinrich, the prime minister back then, separated the government departments that used to be combined, in order to deal with the new situation.

Although Mr. Dollos did seem to have committed crimes, Donnie remembered his help and was reluctant to leave. So, he looked for the owners of the nearby stores and asked them carefully.

“A few months back, people of the tax office summoned Dollos first, claiming that he committed tax evasion.”

“Dollos never came back after he was summoned. In the days that followed, more and more people came to stick those seals. There were quite plenty of them.”

“I’m told that Dollos has already been sentenced to prison and that he won’t be released for another five years.”

Faced with Donnie who had the badge of an official sorcerer on his chest, none of the store owners dared to lie or use the nicknames that they gave to the tax collectors and the police officers.

“Sentenced to prison...” Donnie murmured in a low voice and struggled for a moment, but he still decided to visit Mr. Dollos. After all, the man had offered tremendous help to him.

However, Donnie was soon disappointed, because the staff of the Congress told him that Dollos was kept in a prison far away, and that his whole holiday was only enough for a round trip. So, taking the suggestion of the staff, he wrote a letter to Dollos and left his own mailing address.

.....

Wu!

Clang! Clang!

The noise when the train came into the station scared off the kids who were playing around. Even the adults were more or less intimidated. It hadn't been long since the railway was extended to the town, and the folks were not used to the gigantic creature that could run on its own yet.

Donnie slowly walked out of the magic steam train. Seeing the familiar buildings and mountains, he had a lot of complicated feelings.

“Huh, isn't it Donnie White?” There were not many residents in the town. They were quite familiar with each other.

“That's right. It's Donnie. He seems much taller and bigger now. Wait, has the badge on his magic robe changed?”

“One black circle on the silver background. He... He is an honorable Mr. Sorcerer now!”

In the blink of an eye, the town residents whom Donnie was quite familiar with changed their expressions to one that was full of admiration and fear, as if he were no longer the Donnie they knew but a strange Mr. Sorcerer that was even more esteemed than the mayor!

Although they hadn't met an official sorcerer many times, the generous treatment that their petty mayor offered every time had left them a deep impression. Without them knowing it, had their neighbor's naughty kid become a high and mighty sorcerer too?

The residents' change of attitudes couldn't have escaped Donnie's senses, which were now keener and keener. He was both somewhat uncomfortable and somewhat delighted. No wonder everybody wanted to be a sorcerer and a noble. At the very least, until he could really explore the world, the feeling of being respected could motivate him to work hard.

After a brief silence, somebody left the station and shouted, "White, White, your little Donnie is back! He is now a Mr. Sorcerer!"

Donnie hurried to move forward to the exit.

Very soon, a middle-aged man whose face seemed to have been whetted by frostbite appeared on the street near the station. He was old and had gray hair. Had it not been for his lack of wrinkles, he would've convinced everyone that he was in his fifties. Behind him was a plump woman and a young and vigorous girl.

The three of them were equally excited and delighted. The two ladies were weeping already.

"Father, Mother, Lily..." Donnie walked to them. His voice was choked with tears.

His father held his hand tightly and patted it hard. "Great, great, so great..."

At this moment, Donnie felt that all his previous ordeals were worth it!

.....

Passing the new year in easiness and delight, Donnie was quite satisfied with his new life. The only unpleasant thing was that the town was still very underdeveloped. Lamps were only set up near the station, and there weren't any home TVs. The only entertainment was Arcana Voice on the empty ground to the east of the town.

On that day, when Donnie, his parents, and his sister were about to go out to listen to Arcana Voice, a wagon with the sigil of a noble suddenly stopped before their house.

“Greetings, esteemed Mr. White. My lord, Baron Herdos, would like to invite you to his manor. He’s hoping that you could help him resolve a problem that has bothered him for a long time.” A butler-looking man got off the wagon.

Knowing that Baron Herdos was the lord of the few towns around, Donnie dare not disrespect him. “What is the nature of the problem? I would be happy if I can offer any help.”

The butler did not lie. “My lord has an ancient castle that seems to be haunted by ghosts. We asked for the help of several magic apprentices and sorcerers before, but it did not work. Two magic apprentices even died inside. We’re told that you have already become an official sorcerer, and you are a student of the Heidler Magic College. So, my lord sincerely asks for your help. You are a professional.”

Donnie had a conditional reflex of fear about such things. However, before he declined the request, the butler already said, “Whether or not you can take care of the problem, my lord will offer you ten queen gold coins as a reward. If the matter is resolved, there will be even more!”

Chapter 847: The Minor Negligence

847 The Minor Negligence

Ten queen gold coins? Donnie's breath suddenly turned heavy. He knew that he would earn a lot of money after he became an official sorcerer, but he had been barely engaged in any deals in cash since most of the subsidies in school were exchanged to arcana points. Therefore, after he heard the offer of ten queen gold coins, his heart beat fast, and he swallowed hard.

Ten queen gold coins were nothing for nobles, wealthy merchants, and sorcerers. However, having been brought up poor in a civilian family in a small town, Donnie had never seen one gold coin in his entire life. Also, he could earn the tremendous wealth that could significantly improve his family conditions without promising that he could solve the problem. How could he not be tempted?

If he wished to continue on the path of sorcerers, materials, recipes, books, and extraordinary items were unavoidable. All of them needed the support of wealth!

If he could really take care of the problem, how much would Baron Herdos pay him?

Donnie thought about so many things that even his voice became slightly coarse. "If I can fix the issue, how much would the baron pay me?"

The butler's face was unchanged, and he did not mock Donnie's overconfidence even though a third-circle sorcerer had been hired before but failed. He said respectfully, "My lord said that, if Mr. White could restore the peace of the castle, you will be given an additional 'Magic Glove', which is a level-two extraordinary item, besides the ten queen gold coins."

An extraordinary item? Donnie felt that hot blood was surging into his head. He almost accepted the request immediately.

Thankfully, the meditation and casting exercises that he had been doing helped him maintain his last consciousness. He said calmly, "Baron Herdos is the lord of this town. I am very happy to help him. However, I need the records about how the previous sorcerers and apprentices handled the anomaly in the castle. If I am confident enough to solve it, I'll go to the castle in person."

He couldn't be more prudent about such a matter.

A smile appeared on the butler's respectful face. He took out a thick pile of documents from his suitcase and said, "These are the records you need."

Sensing Donnie's surprise, he explained with a smile, "My lord is no stranger to sorcerers, so he knew that you would need those."

Donnie's puzzle was answered. He took over the records and examined them with magic. Finding no sign of tampering, he read them carefully.

After a long time, he turned the pages and said peacefully, "Two apprentices were so surprised that they jumped out of the window of the castle, which got themselves killed. There is no death record of sorcerers. Well, it shouldn't be too dangerous for me. Mr. Butler, please lead me to the baron."

The first half of the sentences weren't meant for the butler. They were for his parents and his sister in case they were worried.

As he expected, after hearing his explanation, Lily and Mrs. White, who were concerned and about to stop him, were both relieved. It was an honor of their family that their son (brother) was appreciated by the lord. It was really the right decision to let him go to the generic school!

As civilians, they were more revered by their lord than the regular sorcerers were.

Donnie's father nodded in excitement, telling Donnie to go without concerns about the family.

.....

Near the town were the rising and falling hills that were covered in evergreens. A deep, dark castle stood next to a beautiful peaceful lake and added to the magnificence of the scenery.

Inside the castle, Donnie and Baron Herdos, who was coughing all the time with an emaciated face, sat face to face on the couch.

“This castle has been in our family for nine hundred years. It’s a symbol of the Herdos family. However, the haunting in the past decades has been bothering us. I hope that you can help fix the problem, Mr. White, as a professional of the school of necromancy,” Baron Herdos said in a weak voice.

He had been living in his villa in the city and barely returned to the castle. Today, he had specifically come back to wait for Donnie. After the establishment of the electric system and the popularization of alchemical items, more and more nobles preferred to live in the city or the suburbs. Castles were gradually being abandoned unless the infrastructure could be extended deep into the woods in the future.

While Donnie was a necromancer majoring in body structure and genetic factors, the knowledge on ghosts and evil spirits was among the compulsory courses of the Heidler Magic College. So, he was no stranger to them. He asked solemnly, “I wonder what happened decades ago that caused the haunting ghost. I hope that you can tell me everything without neglecting any detail.”

A ghost certainly could not have come out of nowhere.

“Nothing really happened. The previous sorcerers asked the same thing,” Baron Herdos replied with a bitter smile.

The sorcerers he hired before were not the professionals of the school of necromancy, but since they were here to address the problem, they had certainly done their investigations. Unless they were out of their minds, no sorcerers would act recklessly.

“It seemed to have appeared all of a sudden. Maybe somebody did something in secret, but it’s been too long, and the leads must be gone already,” Baron Herdos added.

Donnie nodded his head. "I hope that you can give your family files during that period to me. All the files. I'll stay here tonight and kill my time with them."

"Thank you for your help in advance, Mr. Donnie." Baron Herdos nodded. Then, he left ten queen gold coins on the table, before he left the castle with his butler and returned to the city.

The servants of the castle all came during the day and left by the evening. None dared to spend the night here. Therefore, after Baron Herdos left, the castle resumed its peace and gloom. Fire was burning furiously inside the furnace, but it could not drive off the deep coldness.

Donnie examined the castle and found nothing. Then, he got into a bedroom and began to meditate to stay sharp, waiting for the night to come.

Clang! Clang! Clang!

After three bell knocks, the old clock suggested the arrival of ten o'clock. According to Donnie's files, all the ghost-related phenomena happened after this hour.

BAM! BAM! BAM!

The moment the bell stopped, Donnie heard a dull and strange voice. He frowned. Was it the sound of the wind blowing at the window frame? However, he had checked a moment ago, and all the windows were closed!

Touching the sorcerer's badge on his chest, Donnie opened the door and entered the corridor, walking toward the source of the sound.

Bang!

An enormous and dull collision echoed behind Donnie. He was so scared that he hurried to turn back, only to discover that the room that he just left was closed automatically!

Wu! Wu! Wu!

Weeping noise that was as feeble as an illusion found its way into Donnie's ears. He had goosebumps all over his body. Had it not been for his nightmare experiences, he probably couldn't have remained calm.

Wu!

The sobbing wind suddenly blew in the corridor.

Candles died out one after another, and the castle was completely enshrouded in darkness.

Donnie hurried to cast a "Luminosity". His glove immediately glowed like a torch and illuminated the environment.

However, all of a sudden, a cold and gloomy breath blew at Donnie's neck, making his hair erect. Then, "Luminosity" ended without a sound!

"This evil spirit is even more horrible than described!"

Having seen all kinds of undead creatures in his nightmares, Donnie felt the power of the evil spirit more clearly than regular sorcerers would. He accelerated to the gate of the castle in uneasiness. "It interrupted my spell without alarming me at all! How could the previous sorcerers have survived?"

Generally speaking, such evil spirits were all stranded in a place. As long as he left the castle, he would be safe!

"Ge! Ge! Ge!"

A white fuzzy shadow floated before him and laughed devastatingly.

"If I didn't let them leave, would they have delivered food to me again and again?"

Donnie was greatly alarmed. It knew what was on his mind? Or maybe... was it shaking his determination with the illusion and the words?

“Rest assured. I will not simply eat you; I will suck your soul slowly and gradually.” The shadow flashed here and there, not giving Donnie any chance to lock onto it. “Ever since I was woken up, I have been very abstemious. I will only suck half of your soul, which will make you forget what happened and come here once every few months.”

Donnie moved forward warily, unaffected by the words. The evil spirit did not stop him either.

He was more or less relieved, feeling that the evil spirit was only bragging. At this moment, he had reached the gate of the castle.

All he needed to do was to run out!

Donnie pulled the gate, but it was the hall of the castle out of the gate!

Shock and coldness rose from his feet, paralyzing his whole body quickly.

“Haha. I like fear more than anything else.” A pale, illusionary face appeared before Donnie. It opened its mouth and spewed stench out at Donnie’s face brutally. He was so dizzy that he could not focus his attention to cast any spell again.

Looking at the face at a loss, Donnie felt colder and colder. His soul seemed almost frozen.

He survived those nightmares, only to be killed by this not-so-powerful evil spirit in the end?

Suddenly, Donnie sensed that something cold surged in his right hand. Then, it lifted beyond his control and snatched the face before him.

Is this my right hand?

A palm in the monotonous black, white, and gray appeared in Donnie’s pupils. He felt that he saw the never-fading death the moment he saw this hand!

“No!” The evil spirit cried miserably, as if it had seen what it was most scared of.

Then, it was stiffened as if it were waiting for Donnie’s right hand.

The right hand passed through it, and the evil spirit was dismembered and thrown into the black, white, and gray, vanishing into nothingness.

Donnie was back to himself. He hurried to cast Luminosity, only to discover that everything was the same as before although the candles were put out.

“An illusion? No, it must be real!” Donnie raised his right hand. Looking at the hand that showed no anomalies now, he mumbled, “What happened? Why did my right hand turn into that?”

In the previous moment, he felt that he was the dominator of death!

“It... It feels a lot like the black, white, and gray and the black armor in the nightmares!” Donnie suddenly raised his head, and his face was covered in a cold sweat.

.....

Outside of the castle, a magnificent person stood quietly and smiled. “As I expected, all the problems cannot be resolved so easily.”

Chapter 848: Trump Card or Insidious Problem?

848 Trump Card or Insidious Problem?

Cold wind passed by, and the sweat on his forehead was almost frozen into ice. Donnie trembled hard because of the coldness. However, he was not woken up but merely looked at his right hand half in delight and half in fear, recalling the picture from just now.

The monotonous black, white, and gray, the eternal silence that seemed to affect the environment and completely overwhelmed the evil spirit, and the snatch that could directly penetrate the defense of the evil spirit. His right hand was so strange and so powerful!

It felt very similar to the black full armor that he met in his nightmares and the black, white, and gray that was sealed at the center of the illusionary cosmos!

Did something go wrong during the nightmares, and he was corrupted by the “monster” without him knowing it?

Donnie felt scared from the bottom of his heart when he thought of the monster that could manipulate their dreams and that resembled the purest death when he looked at it. So, he shook his head violently, waking himself from the trance. He roared in his heart, I need to find Karl immediately! Only he and the big shots behind him can help me fix the problem! They must be very interested in the monster!

The roars in his heart drove Donnie to walk forward toward the gate of the real castle. At this moment, he saw the glimmering powder on the carpet.

Powder of the evil spirit?

Donnie came to an abrupt halt. Was it left by the evil spirit after it died?

The powder of the evil spirit was a middle-rank material that was very rare and precious. It was something that Donnie never thought he could have before!

However, Donnie was stunned. Before stooping to pick it up or retrieving it with a spell, he heard a clear voice in his heart.

“The evil spirit just now must’ve been as strong as a fifth-circle sorcerer. Chances were that it was close to the senior rank. Killing me should’ve been as easy as killing an ordinary person for it, but it could not resist my right hand at all under the weird black, white, and gray. It broke like a bubble after I poked it...

“Is my right hand so powerful?

“The contamination of the monster alone has already turned me so powerful?”

Sensing the power of his right hand for real, Donnie hesitated. For a civilian who had grown from an ordinary person to a magic apprentice to an official sorcerer through hard work, such capabilities were beyond his imagination before.

“With the hand, I will have the power to suppress the specters below the senior rank. It’s possible that I can even affect the senior-rank ones...

“Also, it seems able to eliminate the extraordinary abilities below the senior rank like the ‘Elimination’ blood power. It may be even stronger than that...

“In such a case, I’ll be able to take adventures in the World of Souls and explore the mausoleums that are considered dangerous. I will acquire all kinds of materials and astronomical wealth, which will significantly improve my strength...

“Strength means position. I will be treated respectfully even if I am faced with a grand noble...

“My father and my mother wouldn’t need to worry about the grocery store anymore. They can enjoy the convenience brought by the alchemical items... Lily will have a chance to go to the generic school instead of helping with the family chores and waiting to be married without having a life of her own...”

Donnie’s facial muscles were unprecedentedly twisted in horrifying hideousness.

“After all, nobody could tell that something is wrong with my right hand! At least, Karl and the big shots behind him did not notice it!”

Gradually, Donnie put his right hand back into the pocket of his magic robe.

Bang!

The cold wind blew, and a window that was opened at some point bashed into the frame brutally.

Donnie was suddenly woken up. Sensing the freezing coldness, he was suddenly refreshed, and his desires were overwhelmed by his fear again.

“What happened to me just now? The monstrous air in my right hand makes me powerful, but who knows if it will corrupt me and turn me into an unconscious zombie one step after another?

“The power that is beyond control and of unknown sources must be studied carefully... Too many senior-rank sorcerers have been killed in reckless attempts...

“As long as I am alive, there will always be opportunities!”

Donnie finally made up his mind and decided to call Karl, who had left his personal number to him, immediately after he was back to the town. Then, the outcome couldn’t be more severe than losing a right hand. Also, with any luck, there would be some power that was controllable and did not have insidious problems left.

Outside of the castle, the tall person chuckled. “It’s good that the guy has a remarkable control over his desires. Otherwise, he would not just be corrupted by the air of death, and it’s possible that ‘Greed’ would be triggered.”

Primeval devils could never be extinguished as long as intelligent creatures existed. They would reappear and regather in a dozen years at most, except that they would not be as powerful as before for a while.

...

Donnie traveled in the quiet and dark forest by himself. Roars of beasts burst out now and then intimidatingly, but for Donnie, it was much easier and safer than the castle. Those beasts and ghosts combined could not compare to one “Paralyzing Breath” from the evil spirit.

He had left a note to Baron Herdos, indicating that he had fixed the problem of the evil spirit. Then, he returned to his town without any delay.

Enhanced by magic, Donnie saw the familiar town after only two hours. Except for the station of the magic steam train that was illuminated by the bright lamps, the other places were utterly dark and quiet.

Donnie chose to go to the station. He walked to the office and knocked on the closed door heavily.

“Who is it?” the cleric inside asked in fear. Could it be a bandit?

Many magic steam trains that shipped cargoes passed during the night, so somebody had to stay in the station for coordination. However, in such a small town, barely any of the staff had the power of the magic apprentice, and they could only deal with dangers with the burst guns, but the bandits had already learned their lessons. They knew how to dodge the weapon and wouldn’t wait to be shot like what they did in the past.

If the bandits were as strong as knight squires or magic apprentices, it would be even more dangerous. After all, burst guns required human aiming and could not lock onto the target with spiritual power.

Donnie took off his sorcerer’s badge and waved it at the window. “I am Donnie. I need to use the phone in the station. This is the right of the sorcerers.”

According to the agreement of the Congress of Magic and many countries, the official sorcerers could use the communication facilities in public places with their badges in emergencies.

The cleric inside was greatly relieved. After confirming the authenticity of the badge, he opened the gate. “Come on in, Mr. Donnie. The phone is on the desk.”

Donnie nodded. Having no time to thank the guy, he hurried to go to the desk and dialed Karl’s number.

After three beeps, Karl’s lazy and vague voice came over. “Who’s calling me in the middle of a night? Do you not know that this is a very inhuman and brutal thing to do?”

He seemed to be rather angry to be woken up from sleeping.

Donnie was briefly stunned. Karl’s voice sounded less magnetic on the phone. “Karl, this is Donnie. I have run into something weird.”

“Donnie? What weird thing?” Karl seemed refreshed. Then, he said habitually, “If it is not weird, you will have to apologize to me. Interrupting other people’s sweet dream is punishable by sentencing into prison. I have to stay energized to listen to Grandpa Victor’s concert tomorrow, which is probably going to be his last one. I cannot miss it, and I cannot yawn during it...”

“The black armor monster in the nightmares is attached to my right hand,” Donnie said straightforwardly. That was the only way to stop Karl’s rambling.

In fact, he also knew that Victor’s concert would be held in Rentato tomorrow, as had been introduced by Arcana Voice.

As Mr. Evans’ music teacher, he was too old to hold concerts anymore even though he had been taking magic potions. It was said that he would hold a farewell concert in both Aalto and Rentato to show that he treated classic music and pop music equally.

Although Victor was known for his good student, all music lovers knew that Mr. Victor's achievements in music were enough to make him a master. His other few students had also distinguished themselves with their music even though they were not as good as himself or Mr. Evans. So, he had been praised to be the best music mentor.

Karl suddenly raised his voice. "The black armor monster in the nightmares? Does your right hand demonstrate frozen black, white, and gray, suppress the undead creatures, and eliminate spells?"

"How did you know?" Donnie was quite surprised.

Karl smiled. "Of course I know it. My father saw it and told me before. Hehe. It's great that you told me, or your vitality would fade away quickly. Perhaps in a couple of years, your body will start to rot..."

"Then, what should I do?" Donnie was glad that he made the right choice.

Hesitating for a moment, Karl said, "It's going to be fine for the time being. I'll come to find you after Grandpa Victor's concert. Alternatively, you can take the earliest train to Rentato tomorrow morning. I'll have someone pick you up."

"I'll come tomorrow!" Donnie dared not delay at all and decided to go to Rentato the next morning. "Thank you, Karl. I'll stop bothering you. I need to take a rest."

Karl chuckled. "You've woken me up, and you want to go to sleep? No, you have to chat with me!"

"But you have a concert tomorrow..." Donnie could not refuse it. He felt that he was exhausted.

Although Karl was talkative, he was certainly not insensitive. Noticing Donnie's reluctance, he ended the call.

Donnie went home quietly. He dared not go to sleep, fearing that he would have nightmares again. So, he began to meditate.

...

In the middle of the fuzzy and hazy meditation, Donnie's body suddenly trembled. He felt that the scene before his eyes changed greatly. Around him was the frozen, dull black, white, and gray, where mountains, rivers, cities, and villages were reflected and countless undead creatures were wandering everywhere without the slightest sound or color.

"The World of Souls? I'm having a nightmare again?" Donnie thought in shock. He had entered a dream without sleeping?

"This city is a mess, but it looks somewhat familiar... It's Aalto, 'Capital of Music', that the documentary of the Sky TV Station mentioned!"

Donnie had never thought that he would come to a city on the other side of the continent.

Outside of the city, two persons that seemed both real and illusionary looked at everything quietly. One of them said in a low voice, "Brother, aren't we going to do something?"

It was Karl's voice. As it turned out, he could speak in the World of Souls, except that he was also in black, white, and gray right now!

Chapter 849: News End of Side Story: Year 24 of the Arcana Calendar

849 News End of Side Story: Year 24 of the Arcana Calendar

The pale and dim sky, the topsy-turvy city, and the colorlessness and soundlessness covered the World of Souls in the eternal coldness and silence.

The taller of the two persons who were observing Donnie from outside of the city said in a low magnetic voice, “Rest assured. It’s going to be fine. I’m only trying to figure out what he is trying to do and where he is going after releasing some of his air through such hard work.”

“Alright.” Karl trusted his brother very much and did not say anything else. “He must be looking for a way to get out of his quagmire. Hehe. If he seeks cooperation, we wouldn’t seal and study him all the time. Grandpa Fernando has plenty of experiment materials, and Father has established a demigod path of arcanists. We’re researching him just to figure out what ‘death’ is, how it can be included in the current arcana system, what extraordinary abilities it has, and whether they can be modified into the legendary spells of the school of necromancy...”

The taller person rubbed his temples. “You’re not strong enough and can only count on your talents right now. So, you should not talk much in the World of Souls.”

...

Donnie looked at everything around him in a daze. Staring at the Psalm Hall, which had appeared in the district of the poor for a long time, he was finally back to himself and thought bitterly, I’ve always hoped to visit the Capital of Music, but I did not plan to come under such circumstances.

He was rather ill at ease, not knowing why the mysterious existence dragged him into the World of Souls. So, he did not even have the interest to visit the Psalm Hall before him.

Suddenly, he felt that his right hand was cold. A distant, old, and hoarse voice echoed in his heart. "Go back! Go back to where you belong!"

The voice was both magnificent and cold, numbing Donnie's soul and making him feel the most earnest summoning from far away and from the bottom of his heart!

It deprived him of his resistance. Just like it was his own wish, he strode forward and pressed toward the deepest part of the World of Souls.

At this moment, Donnie hadn't lost the ability to think. He was puzzled about the source of the summoning and his own destination. However, he did not find it strange that he accepted the summoning, as though it were his own thought and the only reasonable action.

As he walked on, the cold, monotonous black, white, and gray surfaced on Donnie's right hand, before it covered Donnie's whole body. His blue eyes, the silver background of his magic badge, and the silver spots on his arcana badge were all highlighted. He flashed forward, and every step seemed to be covering a long distance.

After a long time, Donnie's eyes glittered. A group of magnificent, boundless palaces was reflected in his pupils. Many of the palaces rose into the pale sky, their tips beyond the eye, as if they led to the residence of the true god.

It was a splendid and magnificent view that Donnie had never seen before and could never imagine. So, he was stunned there like a vivid statue.

However, Donnie trembled hard and woke up from his shock, because he sensed the horrifying vibes that could collapse his soul. They were only secondary to the black armor in his nightmares and much more powerful than his mentor Robert, shaking both his body and his heart!

Looking at the mummy that was covered in brown, oily cloths, the monster in a black cape with a long scythe and a misty face, the gold skull that drifted up and down, and the enormous dragon of bones, Donnie hated that he had taken the creature identification class so carefully that he recognized what they were the moment he saw them.

The Primordial Mummy, the Servant of Death, the Demigod-lich, and the Dragon of the Death. They were all legendary undead creatures!

Further away, from the horde of the dense undead creatures, a lot of similar air was coming over.

“L... Legendary...” Donnie’s eyes widened. He would’ve been covered in a cold sweat if he weren’t in the World of Souls. He had never seen or got in touch with a legend in his entire life!

Despite the rapid development of arcana and magic, and even though telegrams, phones, satellite stream, and radio programs had made the world much smaller, “legendary” was still something that most intelligent creatures feared and admired. It represented the sublimation of life and absolute domination.

The fear in Donnie’s heart made him back off subconsciously, but the ancient and overwhelming voice was still roaring, “Come back! Come back!”

It forced Donnie to step forward instead of backing off. He was about to approach the evil and horrifying Primordial Mummy.

Donnie’s legs were shaking, and his teeth were chattering. He would love to pass out right now to avoid being torn apart and swallowed by the legendary undead creatures.

However, at this moment, the Primordial Mummy collapsed forward like a mountain and knelt on the ground, placing its head next to Donnie’s feet.

Without a sound, countless undead creatures fell on their knees, raising an enormous wave, as if they were embracing their dominator and their king!

Donnie looked at the scene in shock. Too many thoughts rolled in his heart. He was both shocked and somewhat satisfied. The feeling of being respected was so marvelous that no wonder so many people sought after it.

“It’s a pity that those legendary undead creatures are not kneeling for me...” Donnie managed to stay awake and flew forward following his heart. Wherever he reached, both the legendary undead creatures and the small festered zombies that even Donnie could’ve killed easily kneeled before him.

After the undead creatures fell on their knees, Donnie was able to see further. Then, his eyes encountered a pair of transparent amber eyes!

It was a monster in the myths, but Donnie, who had been watching stream shows all the time, was no stranger to it. It was a dragon! It was a crystal dragon that was fully covered in transparent scales!

The crystal dragon seemed to be wearing something, which allowed its scales to emit cold and dreamy brilliance even in the World of Souls. However, it was in an extremely weird state. It was crouching among the undead creatures and picking something with its claws. Many gray, bulging bags were hanging on its back, and a black cloth that could only cover its nose was on its face.

The might of the dragon surged at him, and Donnie lost his calmness and shouted, “Monster!”

“Monster!” The crystal dragon was scared too, and its slightly juvenile voice turned sharp.

Then, the person and the dragon both turned around and fled, as if they were both scared of each other.

Observing it from far away, Karl said in amusement, “Why is he collecting garbage here again?”

“With the item that Father gave him, he cannot be perceived by the legendary undead creatures. Naturally, he has to come here to search for valuable materials and gems.” The tall shadow chuckled. “Many materials here are very precious.”

“That’s so filthy!” Karl pinched his nose and raised his voice as he said, “I won’t acknowledge him as my friend anymore!”

The taller person turned his eyes to Donnie. “Is there any secret in the Temple of Spirits that’s worth his return?”

“Maybe something here can help him get out of the trap.” Karl snorted at the crystal dragon’s back, which was disappearing far away.

...

After he escaped from the dragon, Donnie entered the group of enormous black palaces from a side door. The roar in his heart was higher and higher, and the feeling of being summoned was stronger and stronger!

It made him move faster and faster, as if the greatest benefits were awaiting him up ahead!

Passing through the temples, Donnie suddenly beamed with interest, because one of the palaces was full of bookshelves on which countless yellow books were covered with an intense stench.

The instincts of an arcanist made Donnie stop and observe the surroundings.

“Those books must be very precious. Otherwise, they wouldn’t have been preserved so thoroughly and emitted colors in the World of Souls...” Donnie thought in delight. He held the deepest love for books because they changed his fate!

Although he had the strong urge of drawing a book out and taking a look at it, the strong sense of summoning prompted Donnie to surpass the bookshelves and run to the exit.

After he left, a young male walked out of a corner that was blocked by the bookshelves. He had silver hair and silver pupils, with an eccentrically handsome face. In a red shirt and a black coat, he was holding an opened book in his hands.

“Hehe. You’re back again? Interesting...” He closed the book and followed Donnie casually.

“Immortality!”

“Come back!”

Similar roars echoed in Donnie’s heart. The black, white, and gray on his right hand gradually covered his whole body.

It slowed and paralyzed his mind. His body seemed to have been occupied and controlled by someone invisible.

Pale and dim fire was ignited inside his pupils. Then, he flew toward the exit up ahead earnestly.

Donnie, who managed to retain part of his consciousness, could only see the things ahead of him and lost the ability to control his body.

Karl, who was tailing him far away, said in amusement, “Is he trying to return to the Path of Immortality?”

“Maybe he has found something in his research, and he is confident to get out of his trouble through the Path of Immortality,” the taller person said casually and did not hurry to stop them at all.

...

The wall where countless faces of souls were gathered, the channel that released the air of immortality, and the landscape that was dispersing and collapsing all the time... The weird pictures popped up in Donnie’s head. Although he had seen none of them before, he had the clear vision that he was about to see them in a minute!

After he left the exit, Donnie saw a “familiar” square, and the wall where the soul faces were frozen stood at the entrance of the palace at the end.

However, there were plenty of other things that Donnie wasn’t familiar with!

Above the palace hanged red banners that read:

[We sincerely welcome the God of Silver Moon to inspect our work...]

[By all the members of the Ninth Research Institution of the Congress of Magic...]

[Portal of All Realms!]

The cheesy decorations made the voice that echoed in Donnie's head burst out a miserable cry.

“NOOOOOOOO!”

At this moment, a tall and kind-looking old man walked out of the back of the Furnace of Souls. In a tailcoat, he smiled gently and waved his hands, extracting the black, white, and gray inside Donnie's body and recovering him!

“Mr... Mr. President!”

How could Donnie not know the president of the Congress of Magic!

“This is one of the most advanced research institutions of the Congress. It was founded by Lucien in person for the travel and exploration between parallel universes. Now that you are here, you can visit it by the way.” Douglas did not mention anything that happened just now.

Donnie bulged his mouth widely and forgot to close it. Why could he hear the name of Lucien Evans in such an uncanny place too?

Far away, Karl laughed rather delightedly.

(End of Side Story: Year 24 of the Arcana Calendar)

Chapter 850: Side Story: John

850 Side Story: John

“Hey! Ha!”

A little boy no older than ten was holding a wooden sword high and striking it forward.

Bang!

The boy on his opposite side, who was of a similar age, waved his sword to block it. The two swords collided in a dull noise.

Under the scorching sun, the two boys were sweating hard. Their cheeks and their necks were all wet. Even so, they were still gritting their teeth and focused on the sword practice.

On the stairs nearby, a golden-haired and brown-eyed man slightly nodded, expressing his satisfaction with the boys' sword practice. He looked young and handsome, but his manners were mature and trustworthy, making it impossible to tell his accurate age.

However, he was in an obvious trance right now, as if he had seen somewhere far away through the child before him.

“John, what’s on your mind?” A slim, tall, and beautiful woman walked over from his back. She felt gentle and had blond hair and blue eyes, different from the common look of Holm.

John’s eyes were focused again. He turned around with a smile and said to Kalie, his wife. “When I watched the children practicing with their swords so hard, I remembered that Lucien and I practiced in exactly the same way when we were little in the empty places in the slums of Aalto. However, he was not as strong as I was, and he was never satisfied. His sword was knocked away every time...”

Kalie held his waist from the back and smiled gently, “Who could’ve thought that one of the two kids in the slums of Aalto would turn into an earl of the empire, a radiant knight, and the deputy captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights, while the other one would turn into a demigod, a grand arcanist, a prince of the empire, and a great musician?"

"Yes. Life is like a play." John patted his wife's arms and said with mixed feelings, "At first, I only thought to be an official knight to change my family's life, protect them, and protect the duchy. I never dreamed that I could become a radiant knight or have a wife as beautiful as you."

Kalie was taller than John, so she was able to lean her jaw on John's shoulder. Hearing his words, she couldn't help but smile.

Looking ahead, John became tranced again. He said with a smile, "Lucien couldn't have expected his achievements today either. At that time, his greatest wish was to become a civilian who had a regular income. Fate is truly a wonder that even the astrologists cannot predict. I remember that Lucien and I used to stand outside of the Psalm Hall fantasizing that we could listen to a concert someday. Hehe. I have almost forgotten what the Psalm Hall looked like now..."

"Do you miss Aalto?" Kalie asked keenly.

John smiled steadily. "Yes. I do miss the Psalm Hall, my old house, the black forest where I had my knight training, and the bards and performers on the street. Hehe. Those who are old always tend to miss their hometowns and their childhoods."

"Old? Are you suggesting that I am old too? I'm only a few years younger than you." Kalie pretended to be angry. "Do you regret choosing to stay in Rentato instead of a fief near Aalto?"

When he became an earl, John had a chance to choose his hereditary fief. At that time, Natasha had already become the Grand Duchess of Orvarit and could give him the land near Aalto. However, John eventually decided to stay on this side of the Storm Strait.

John did not give an answer. He patted his hands, hinting the children to stop. He then gave them a few reminders before he returned to the villa with Kalie.

“It’s time for my regular patrol,” John said unhurriedly.

Kalie nodded. “I’ve already prepared your knight suit and your armor.”

When he passed the hall, John stopped Kalie and pointed inside. “Listen to the beautiful music. My mother is holding yet another salon.”

“Yes.” Kalie did not quite understand what John meant. His mother often invited the noble ladies to her salon. What was to be surprised at?

John pointed at the study upstairs. “My father must’ve been to the Musicians’ Association.”

“Yes.” Kalie was still confused.

John said with a smile, “Rentato has magic gramophones, air conditioners, home TVs, refrigerators, alchemical cars, and many other items that have changed our life. It is the place with the best magic popularization. My father and my mother are used to them, and they enjoy them. Asking them to go back to Aalto would be a torture for them. Besides, with the airships available now, we can reach Aalto in a couple of days for holidays without transmission magic circles. So, I never regretted my choice.”

In the end, he added, “For me, home is where you are. I will always choose the place that you love. What I miss is my childhood and the time passed rather than Aalto.”

Kalie blushed and did not talk. She dragged John back to the main bedroom on the second floor and helped him get changed.

Bang!

When John was cleaning his clothes before the mirror, a dull explosion echoed from the other end of the corridor.

Neither John nor Kalie showed any unusual reaction, as if it were as common as door opening and closing.

“Something went wrong in Elvin’s experiment again...” John listened carefully, catching the footsteps in the laboratory and sensing that Elvin was still alive. Then, he sighed rather regretfully. “He became a second-circle sorcerer only with the help of potions, but he is never devoted to arcana.”

Elvin was a free spirit. He disliked the boring arcana and magic studies, and he preferred the popularized alchemical items. In Lucien’s words, he was more like an inventor than an arcanist.

Kalie comforted him, “Elvin is very smart, but his interest is fixated on the popularized alchemical items right now. After he knows that it is impossible to conduct his modifications effectively without profound arcana and magic knowledge, he will work hard.”

Kalie was a level-two arcanist and a fourth-circle sorcerer herself.

“Alright.” John nodded and put on the last part of his armor.

.....

Above the Stroop Forest, John asked his subordinates to scatter and patrol on aircraft. He roamed in the air and observed the forest carefully.

Since many elves had been introduced into the human society, the responsibility to defend the abyssal gap had been shouldered by the Elven Court, the Elder Council of the Druids, and the Congress of Magic together, and the major knight associations of the empire were asked to deal with the demonized creatures or missing demons around the forest.

Debates had always remained unabated regarding how to deal with the abyssal gap. The elves wished to seal it completely, and so did the nobles and civilians in the few counties around. After all, even the thorough protection couldn’t be perfect. Not only was the forest being polluted more and more severely, but certain creatures and demons had also entered villages, towns, and cities. Although they were all taken care of in time, some people were still killed or crippled.

However, most sorcerers and knights hoped to keep the gap and the Town of the Anonymous. The place had limited the strength of the invading demons. They did not need to worry about the formidable beings like Demon Lords or Dukes, and they could obtain many senior-rank materials. It was certainly much better than going into the abyss for adventures.

As far as John knew, the Highest Council had reached a decision and established a research squad. The target was to separate the two realms and to keep a buffer area on the first floor of the abyss for the convenience of adventures and exercises.

“Ahh!!!”

A grunt echoed in John’s earpieces. He immediately became grave and swooped like an eagle.

In the forest, a few knights were resisting the attack of a beautiful girl back to back. She had delicate and lovely demon horns on the forehead, and part of her body was covered in bright black armor. With the most tempting body curve and face, she was every inch a powerful succubus.

The few knights were all wounded. Caught unprepared, some of them were dying and were in dire need of rescue.

Holding a thorny whip, the succubus attacked quickly, spreading out pink and dark mist with her naturally-endowed spells.

Suddenly, a longsword enshrouded in darkness slashed from the sky and drove the mist away. All the spells that the succubus cast were nullified.

John did not turn into elements or light. He looked as plain as a common grand knight. However, wherever his longsword pointed at, all the extraordinary abilities were reduced into nothingness!

“The Elimination blood power!” Greatly shocked, the succubus flapped her wings and tried to flee.

However, her speed had been greatly weakened. John caught up to her and cut her to the ground.

“Don’t... Don’t kill me! I can acknowledge you as my master and serve you well!” The succubus twisted her enticing body, hoping to exchange for a chance of survival!

“You weren’t such a peace-lover when you assaulted my teammates, were you?” His face unchanged, John slashed his longsword and executed the succubus directly.

The succubus’ shock was frozen on her face. The few knights attacked by her seemed rather regretful too.

BOOM!

The earth suddenly shook so violently that the knights could barely stand on their feet.

“What’s going on?” John looked at the source of the earthquake in shock, only to discover that a bloody plain appeared on the horizon vaguely. The space before it was twisted and weaved into an unbelievable, hideous crack. Behind it was the view of the abyss on different floors.

Before the protruding abyssal gap, a young man in a black double-breasted suit was floating. He had a black bow-tie with a monocle on his right eye, handsome and gentle. The darkness that surrounded him was as contorted as the abyss itself.

“Lucien?” Seeing the familiar back, John blurted out.

At this moment, Lucien pressed his hands forward. His body became so fuzzy that he seemed to be in an intangible and unapproachable world. A boundless cosmos showed up behind his back with stars glittering in it.

BOOM!

The fog near the gap was too thick for John to see the changes clearly. He only saw that the space collapsed, and the Scarlet Plain, as well as the abyss behind it, slowly broke away from the gap!

In the meantime, an enormous storm swept across the Scarlet Plain and completely consumed it. The thick, long bolts of lightning separated it from the second floor of the abyss that it was connected to!

The “abyss” had been shoved away?

Looking at Lucien who appeared like a god in the high sky, John was rendered speechless. He was suddenly grasped by vague sorrow.

Chapter 851: Side Story: Viscount Carendia

851 Side Story: Viscount Carendia

Crack.

The sound of the door lock being opened was particularly loud at the quiet night.

A golden-haired and golden-eyed little boy had been lying on the couch, half asleep, but he sat up the moment he heard the noise and ran to the door in excitement.

After the door was opened, a golden-haired woman, wearing a purple court dress, walked in. She was pretty and tall, with a blush that was not so obvious on her face. There was a certain charm in her formal smile.

“Edward, you haven’t slept yet?” The beautiful and mature lady was obviously surprised when the little boy ran to her.

The boy smiled shyly. “Mom, I wanted to wait for you to come back...”

He suddenly stopped talking because he saw a tall man behind his mother. The man had a sculpted, handsome face that looked like a glacier that would never unfreeze. He also had very special silver short hair.

The man suddenly put on a gentle smile, like spring melting the snow. He picked up the golden-haired lady’s hand and kissed it. “It’s an honor to have met you. I wish you a sweet dream tonight.”

“I’m happy to make your acquaintance too, Viscount,” the gold-haired lady responded with a smile and saw the formally-suited man off.

“Mom, who is he?” For reasons he did not know, Edward disliked the man just now.

“Well, it’s a foreign viscount that I met at the ball today. His name is Carendia.” The golden-haired lady tried to answer calmly, but her lips were still curling. Then, she suddenly became solemn. “Edward, it’s almost twelve o’clock. You’re two hours late for bed. Where is Adelin? I’m going to ask her why she allowed you to wait for me! You are the only descendant of this family, and you should never be self-willed.”

“I... I slipped out of my room. It has nothing to do with Adelin...” Edward pretended to be scared. He knew that his mother would not really punish him.

...

“Young master, it’s possible that you will have a new father soon,” a maid said to Edward, who had grown much taller, in a low voice.

Edward, who was still not old enough, was gloomy and agitated. During the past two years, her mother and that Viscount Carendia were closer and closer and were really like a couple now. As a result, he had less time to talk or play with his mother. What an awful man!

“Although it has been difficult for Her Ladyship to support the family after His Lordship was summoned by the Lord, and she should be blessed for pursuing her own happiness, you must remember that you are the only heir to the title and the heritage. You cannot allow Viscount Carendia to transfer the wealth bit by bit.” The maid who was loyal to the family reminded Edward of the potential crisis.

Edward, however, blurted out, “He approached my mother for money and the title? No, I have to stop him!”

After that, the boy ran to the lobby, leaving the maid stunned. It... It was only a reminder. I certainly did not mean that.

“Wu, wu, Mom, I was wrong. I shouldn’t have been so impolite to the viscount!” Soon enough, Edward’s cries came from the living room. He had been pressed down on the couch and spanked hard by his mother, and he wept really hard.

The golden-haired lady snorted and said to Viscount Carendia in apologies, "Forgive me for not teaching the child well."

"It's nothing. Children of his age are all naughty," Viscount Carendia said; his eyes gentle.

"Edward, apologize to the viscount," the golden-haired lady asked him.

Sobbing, Edward apologized. Then, while his mother was not looking at him, he pretended to be tough and said in an extremely low voice, "I won't let you steal my mother!"

Viscount Carendia looked the same as before, as if he were looking at an angry but not-at-all threatening kitten.

...

"You will call the viscount dad in the future," the golden-haired lady said to Edward rather shyly.

Edward pursed his lips and tried to make himself look normal. "Yes, madam."

Viscount Carendia, who sat on the opposite side of the table, cut the bloodstained steak and said to Edward seriously as if he were his real father, "Your current knight teacher is not good enough. Starting from tomorrow, I will teach you in person."

"I will certainly work hard." Edward clenched his fists, swearing to vent his fury on the goddamn man during the training.

...

Pa.

Edward was thrown to the ground and cried in pain.

"Why do you need a sword if tears help?" Viscount Carendia said without the slightest pitifulness. "So, you are only a boy, not a man. A real man sheds blood, not tears."

Edward stood up and glared at him.

Viscount Carendia waved his wooden sword. “Don’t you hate me the most? Don’t you want to kick me away? Accomplish it with the sword in your hand! Or maybe you are a coward who loves failure?”

Edward roared brutally and charged at Viscount Carendia with the wooden sword in his hands. He was knocked again and again but stood up every time.

He thought, I will not compromise!

...

In the church square, a cross had been established, and a mature, beautiful golden-haired lady was tied to it.

“Mom! Mom!” Despite the restraint of a few knight squires, Edward struggled to move toward the cross, with tears and panic all over his face.

With the Saint Badge of Truth in his hands, the bishop drew a cross on his chest and pointed at the golden-haired lady. “She is a noble, but she is corrupted by the darkness and degenerated into a vampire’s servant, trying to turn the Lord’s lambs into the vampire’s food.”

The golden-haired lady seemed to have lost her soul. She stared at the bishop without saying a word, but Edward refuted in a loud voice, “No! No! My mother never hurt anyone!”

The bishop completely ignored Edward and continued, “You are evil and filthy, but the Lord is merciful and benevolent. Purge is His grace and your path to paradise. Let me ask you. Would you like to repent and kneel before the Lord’s feet again?”

“If... If I repent, will Edward be pardoned? He’s just a child. He knows nothing!” The golden-haired lady seemed back to life all of a sudden.

The bishop kept drawing the cross. “The Lord is the fairest of all. As long as Edward survives the fire, it will prove his innocence.”

The golden-haired lady laughed miserably. “Hahaha. Then, let me answer you. I would rather fumble in hell than lose myself in paradise!”

“Sinner, go to hell and repent there.” Coldly, the bishop let out a holy light and ignited the stand.

“No!” Edward cried earsplittingly. He seemed to see the gentle eyes that were looking at him through the burning fire.

After a long time, Edward passed out in tears. Suddenly, a voice echoed next to his ears, “Sorry that I was late.”

Edward tried to open his eyes. He saw the man who caused his mother to be burnt. He gnashed his teeth and snapped, “It was all your fault! If it weren’t for you, my mother wouldn’t have been burnt at all!”

“I’m sorry. I was late.” Viscount Carendia looked as gloomy as a mountain that just had an avalanche.

“You were late?” Edward said with a sneer that was beyond his age. “What a perfect reason!”

Then, he spat out, one word after another, “You murdered my mother!”

Viscount Carendia sighed. “Whatever you say, I will take good care of you.”

He lowered his head and approached Edward’s neck, his four teeth suddenly grew. “From today on, you will be Viscount Carendia.”

Sting came from his neck, and Edward’s face was numbed, but his eyes were still full of sparks of hate.

...

The chilly and dreamy silver moon hung high in the sky, creating silver ripples on the lake that was as smooth as a mirror.

Golden-haired and golden-eyed, Viscount Carendia stood before the window with a cup of wine in his hand, appreciating the view.

“My lord, do you remember your past again?” Nied, his old butler, walked in from the outside.

Viscount Carendia nodded expressionlessly. “You can never forget hate.”

The old butler did not know what to say. He could only speak from a practical point of view. “My lord, you are just a grand knight, and the old viscount is close to a level-eight radiant knight.”

“What’s to be scared of if even death cannot intimidate you?” The handsome and muscular Viscount Carendia suddenly smiled. “Such an irresponsible man will be killed sooner or later. In the meantime, I will practice myself to be a radiant knight sooner.”

“However, as his descendant, you cannot resist him at all when you are facing him,” Nied said again.

Viscount Carendia sighed and did not pursue the topic. He turned around and went into a secret chamber. Looking at the silver-haired and silver-eyed man in the painting, he said, “Grandpa, although I haven’t seen you much, I can sense your love. I hope that I can follow you and receive your instructions...”

After his “prayer”, Viscount Carendia’s eyes suddenly focused, because he saw another cup on the table. Thick red fluids were floating inside, and countless illusionary symbols were drifting up and down inside.

“What’s this?” he asked in shock.

Nied’s eyes almost popped out. “This... This is the Origin of Blood of the first-generation vampires. Was... Was the old earl here?”

“Grandpa?” Viscount Carendia looked around, only to find nothing, but he soon burst into laughter. “As long as I melt this blood, I will no longer be scared of the bloodline suppression from that man.”

The old butler said helplessly, “The old earl hasn’t changed his hobby and habit one bit. How can such a tragedy be fun?”

“Camoray Cuke, did you notice anything?” Viscount Carendia asked.

A dull noise hummed, leading the whole castle to shake. “No. It’s just that... my nose is itchy. Achiu!”

It sneezed so heavily that the window glass was all ringing.

After a brief silence, Viscount Carendia said half-teasingly, “The greatest impression that grandpa has left on me is that he likes to observe everything in secret. He’s like a voyeur.”

“Achiu!”

Somebody on the mountain far away suddenly sneezed hard.

Chapter 852: Side Story: Hellen

852 Side Story: Hellen

In the Allyn magic tower in the City in the Sky...

Berkley was already used to the magnificent building. No longer amazed by its appearance that was entirely different from other magic towers, he only felt that fondness and appreciation from the bottom of his heart.

Also, the moment he saw the magic tower, Berkley felt firm and steady. He was no longer as scared as he used to be in the past, when he was often woken up in the middle of a dream, fearing that the night watchers would find him, capture him, and send him to the fire.

“This place is the heaven of the sorcerers...” Berkley closed his eyes and remarked. Then, a fire seemed to be ignited in his heart. Would she still be there today?

He moved faster and passed through the lobby of the magic tower, entering the first zone on the first level of the magic tower where the General Arcana Library had been established.

Many arcanists had the habit of reading and studying the books immediately after they borrowed them, in order to figure out the files that they were missing. Therefore, the Congress of Magic had established a reading room on the empty ground in the first zone so that the arcanists would have a place where they could read quietly.

Later, many arcanists realized that the environment here was very suitable for them to read books that did not require experiments. Therefore, they came to the place to study as well.

Berkley took out two thick books with black covers from his magic pouch. Taking a few deep breaths and pretending that he had come here as a hardworking researcher, he slowly walked into the reading room, although no books were on his mind at all.

The moment he entered the reading room, he looked at a place next to the window, hoping that he could see the beautiful girl there again.

“She’s really here!” Berkley couldn’t have been more delighted. A brilliant smile popped up on his face completely beyond his control.

The sun shined into the room through the window and illuminated a beautiful girl who was sitting in the silence. She was focused and indifferent. Her face was delicate. Her lips were blue, but they emitted a certain weird charm. Together with the halo caused by the sunlight, she looked like a snow elf that could not be described.

She was the most beautiful and attractive female that Berkley had ever met during his escape all over the continent. As a result, he had spent the better half of his last week in the reading room appreciating the girl quietly, unable to get himself away from her.

“No. I can’t be like this anymore...” Berkley said to himself, as if he were making up his mind to work harder. “Who knows whether or not she’s coming to the reading room next week? After all, she barely came to this place before. I have to get to know her. This opportunity is too great to be missed out on. Otherwise, I will be regretful for the rest of my life!”

Encouraging himself and summoning his courage, he finally made up his mind after a minute and walked over to the girl with his books in his hand, hoping to use them as a conversation starter.

“There’s no need to fret! This is just regular friend-making! I am not forbidden from making friends in the Congress of Magic, am I?”

“Bring out the courage when you date with the noble ladies in the past! Don’t be a coward!”

Too many thoughts popped up in Berkley’s head. He felt that his feet were as unsteady and strengthless as his own heart.

The girl was too focused on the book in her hand, calculating on the paper now and then, to notice that Berkley had approached her.

Her hair seemed to be made of ice, which was clear and glittering under the sunlight, reflecting vague rainbows. Berkley was dazzled and completely forgot what he had in mind previously.

“Honorable lady, may I sit here?” Berkley asked; his lips dry. He felt that his voice was shaking beyond his control.

The sound of quill running on the paper never stopped. The girl with an unparalleled face did not even bother to raise her head. She was as focused as before.

“Honorable lady, may I sit here?” Berkley held back his cowardliness, which was urging him to turn around and flee, and asked again.

Hualala.

The pages of the book were turned, but the elf-like girl seemed to have nodded her head, or so Berkley thought that was what he saw.

Was it my illusion? Berkley thought unconfidently. However, he immediately told himself that he should leave it alone. As long as she did not openly refuse him to sit here, it meant that she was okay with that!

He sat on the girl’s opposite side carefully and stole a glimpse at her again, only to be astounded by her surreally delicate face again. In the meantime, he noticed that the girl had two badges on her magic robe. One of them was a four-star arcanist’s badge, and the other was a sorcerer’s badge with two black circles.

She’s already a middle-rank arcanist at such a young age? Berkley was shocked because he had barely seen any girls with such a remarkable achievement. Then, he thought hard about how to get to know her.

“My lady, I’ve been to the Congress for years, but I’ve never met anyone whose arcana level is so much higher than their magic level. You are really an arcana genius.” Berkley tried to make his smile elegant and handsome.

The girl kept writing with her quill, not even bothering to nod her head or give any reply that indicated her awareness of his remark.

Berkley's face was frozen on his face. Did she not like the subject?

So, he went on and said again, "My lady, you seem to be of the bloodline of the snow elves? That's an extremely rare bloodline. As I recall, it only exists in the northland."

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when the girl suddenly raised her left hand. Berkley couldn't have been more delighted. There was finally some reaction!

The girl's tiny eyebrows were furrowed. She held her cheek with her left hand, and her index finger was extended to her mouth and touched her lips without her realizing it at all. However, she still did not look at Berkley at all or said anything back to him.

Berkley was attracted by the most beautiful picture at first. Then, immense frustration of failure emerged and bit his heart deeply.

I can't... I can't give up just like that!

If I miss this opportunity, there wouldn't be any in the future. Who knows if she is from the northland? Who knows if she will return very soon?

After several minutes, Berkley summoned his courage again. Trying to soften his smile that had already been rigidified, he said, "My lady, I'm impressed by your concentration. I can't help but wonder what you are working on."

The moment he spoke it out, Berkley almost slapped himself in the face brutally because he had seen the familiar mathematical symbols all over the book before the girl. It was not difficult for him to guess what category the book belonged to at all.

The girl's left forefinger seemed to have already been extended into his lips. Her eyes were fixed on the paper, and the quill in her right hand kept moving, as if the whole world had nothing but herself as well as the book, the paper, and the ink left, and no other people existed in that world at all. Whoever sat on her opposite side would be treated as air equally.

Berkley was silent for another couple of minutes. The passion in his heart was unstoppable. Therefore, he pulled himself back together and said again, "My lady, according to my quick glance, you seem to be studying the knowledge about calculus. I don't know what problem you have run into, but if you don't mind, you can speak it out so that we can discuss it together. Although I've only come to the Congress for several years, I do know calculus rather well. After all, the solutions to many magic models cannot be achieved without calculus..."

He tried to start with the part that the girl was obviously most interested in.

Before Berkley finished his sentence, the girl had raised her head abruptly. She stared at him carefully with her transparent, ice-like eyes. Berkley felt that his mind was shaking so hard that he almost lost control of himself.

"How should a limit be strictly defined to avoid the previous problems? What about continuity, derivative, and infinitesimal? How can they be mathematically defined in a self-consistent way?" The girl's voice was chilling and refreshing, like the floating snowflakes in the winter. There was nothing but solemnity in her tone.

Dazed, Berkley opened his mouth and could barely close it. What... What were those questions? What was she working on exactly? It was... It was too terrifying!

His brain seemed to have just been savaged by "Mental Storm", a legendary spell, and nothing could be found at all in it. However, the girl was still staring at him attentively and carefully. Subconsciously, he replied, "I... I haven't really given any thought to those questions before..."

The girl nodded her head. With no despise, albeit some disappointment, she lowered her head again and continued writing her own ideas.

Looking at the chilling girl who basked in the brilliant sunlight, Berkley felt that his heart had been so destroyed that he could not fight any longer. She was a goddess in arcana that other people could only appreciate and admire from far away but could not approach.

Chapter 853: The Unannounced Guest

Side Story: Rise of the Congress

The Unannounced Guest Side Story: Rise of the Congress

“My lord.” The farmers who were busy working in the land greeted their liege humbly and obediently. Most of them did not quite see the face of the earl, but they knew that the only person who could have been surrounded by so many knights, who could have ridden the magnificent Dragon Scale horse, who could have worn the fancy clothes, and whose necklace was above the back of his head and covered his ears, was the distinguished Lord Earl. Also, the guys before them were also paying respects.

With the Dragon Scale horse between his legs and a whip in his hands, Earl Paphos heard nothing of the farmers’ greetings. It was a privilege that any noble deserved, and there was no need to feel surprised.

After he left his manor and reached the highroad, Earl Paphos slapped his horse hard to let it run faster, surpassing the wagons and the passersby on his way.

Earl Paphos had always despised the nobles who took wagons. The nobles who had been knighted for eliminating sorcerers and the other heresies should not abandon their pride and their knightly instincts! Vanity was also an original sin!

The Paphos family was one of the earliest knight families who resisted the Magic Empire with the Church and the king. The title of the earl had been earned by the magnificent strength of every generation and the remarkable achievements they made. Earl Paphos himself was among them. He had become a radiant knight before forty, winning the nickname “Dragon of Protection”. His hands were stained with the blood of evil sorcerers and other heresies.

Dozens of Dragon Scale horses galloped fast all the way into the city. The guards of the city cleared the path when they saw the emblem of the Paphos family far away, not daring to stop or examine them at all.

Hooooooooo!

Earl Paphos pulled his bridle, and the Dragon Scale horse rose like a human and roared as if it were a dragon.

The knights that followed him did the same. All the horses were stopped simultaneously.

“Good evening, my lord.” At the entrance of the villa, two nobles were already standing.

They were wearing the fashionable two-layered shirt inside, whose many buttons were all made of gems. Outside, they were wearing a high-collared coat that was decorated with many accessories.

Earl Paphos got off the horse and nodded. “Thank you for your trouble.”

They were the two barons on his land. Today, they helped him summon the nobles that were close to him for a private meeting.

“It’s our pleasure,” the barons answered respectfully and directed him into the villa.

Earl Paphos did not smile or say anything, but he was quite satisfied with the two barons’ attitudes, which made him feel the honor and power of a senior noble.

Several long tables were placed in the hall, and steaks, roasted chicken, and the likes were on them. Many nobles were already gathered in small groups with their wine cups.

“Good evening, my lord.” All the nobles greeted Earl Paphos as soon as possible.

Earl Paphos raised his right hand and waved it. “Everyone, good evening.”

He enjoyed such occasions. Power was always most fascinating at these moments.

Handing over his horsewhip to a knight who came with him, Earl Paphos was ready to host the meeting when the guard at the gate led in a cleric who was in a sacred white robe.

“Esteemed earl, the bishop invites you to the church.” The young cleric was very polite, but his facial skin was tightened without the slightest smile, giving an arrogant feeling. However, none of the nobles felt inappropriate. He was the Lord’s shepherd. Even though they were dissatisfied with his attitude, they could not reveal it, or the night watchers of the Inquisition would come.

“Is there anything urgent?” Earl Paphos asked slowly.

The cleric seemed to be looking at the ceiling. “I’m not sure about that. You will know it after you come to the church.”

Earl Paphos was secretly infuriated by the guy’s attitude. Did the clerics of the Church not have the basic manners now?

However, he got his feelings under control and said expressionlessly, “Alright.”

“Right, earl, it’s past six in the evening. None is allowed to ride a horse except for the knights on watch,” the cleric added in a rough tone.

Earl Paphos clenched his fists, feeling that fury was surging into his head. As an earl and the lord of this city, he did not even have the privilege to ride a horse?

After delivering the information, the cleric drew a cross on his chest. “I hope that you will come to the church as soon as possible. Only Truth lives forever!”

“Only Truth lives forever...” Earl Paphos drew a cross; his eyes deep and dark. He decided to hold it back. What else could he do? Defy the Church? How could he resist one demigod, fifty legendary Grand Cardinals and divine knights, and seraphs who can arrive at any moment? That was a force even more terrifying than the three Magic Empires in the past!

Also, as the remaining forces of the Magic Empire were gradually cleared, the Church was less and less dependent on the nobles, with a worse and worse attitude.

The wagon slowly reached the city church. The sky was dark and full of clouds, suggesting an upcoming storm.

Boom!

Thunders rumbled, and the silver snakes of lightning illuminated the sky. Earl Paphos looked at the sky, got off the wagon, and entered the church.

“Good evening, Your Highness. Please allow me to pray to the Lord first,” Earl Paphos said politely. The dissatisfaction and fury in his heart were already gone.

The city was the capital of the county. It was at an important location and was relatively prosperous. So, the bishop here was Field, a newly promoted red robe. He nodded. “It’s very pious of you.”

After praying before the cross, Earl Paphos smiled. “Why did you summon me, Your Highness?”

Field said in a seemingly gentle way, “According to the report of the night watchers, sorcerers seem to be active in this area recently. I hope that you can devote more attention to hunting them.”

“It’s my responsibility,” Earl Paphos replied casually, waiting for the bishop to discuss more important things with him.

“Very good. Please see that it is done after you are back.” Field smiled.

“There’s nothing else?” Earl Paphos blurted out in shock.

Field raised an eyebrow. “Do we need other things?”

Fury burst out in Earl Paphos’ heart. You’ve asked me to come here for such trivia? You could’ve sent someone to deliver a message! What do you think I am? A dog of the Church that you can command freely?

“Or maybe, you think the issue is not important enough?” Field’s smile was gradually gone.

Earl Paphos tried to hold back his fury. “I was just about to make more contributions to the Lord. Your Highness, since there’s nothing here, I’ll return and investigate the sorcerers immediately.”

He went out of the church and got into the wagon without changing his expression. Sitting like a stone statue with golden scales growing on the back of his hand, he did not turn gloomy until the wagon was some distance away and thunder broke out nonstop.

“Damn it! They do not regard us, the nobles, as their equal at all!” Paphos gnashed his teeth.

A torrential rain poured down. The night was even darker. Under the blowing wind, the trees and branches were flying crazily. Now and then, leaves and dust were thrown into the wagon.

Pa, pa, pa.

The raindrops hit the top of the wagon as if they were playing an instrument. Looking at the dark night out of the window, Earl Paphos couldn’t calm down after a long time. Was it the real position of the nobles?

Dum, dum, dum.

Three rhythmed knocks echoed near the window. Earl Paphos was so shocked that he turned around in shock and roared, “Who is it?”

Having arrived soundlessly without being perceived by a level-six radiant knight, the person was definitely terrifyingly strong.

“An unannounced guest.” A low female chuckle echoed out of the window, but the coachman and the knights behind sensed nothing.

“Who are you exactly?” Earl Paphos squinted. Golden dragon scales surfaced on his skin that was exposed to the air, and his pupils became gold and vertical too.

The magnetic female voice chuckled again. "Are you too worried to invite me to come in, my lord? If I intended to ambush you, I wouldn't have warned you at all just now. For the experts like you and me, does the blockage of a wagon really matter?"

A proud woman who likes to mock other people... Earl Paphos reached a conclusion. Considering for a moment, he opened the window carefully.

A red shadow blinked in and sat on Earl Paphos' opposite side.

A senior-rank sorcerer... Earl Paphos raised his wariness again and was ready to attack. However, his eyes suddenly glittered, because it was a young and beautiful girl who was as bright as fire. She was petite with a blood-red magic robe and a delicate face. Her pupils were as red as blood, making her extremely vigorous.

The rumors are true that female sorcerers like to modify their look, but don't they say that the senior-rank sorcerers often turn hideous because of their bloodline modifications and the experiment pollutions? Earl Paphos thought subconsciously. Why did he not know such a senior-rank sorcerer at all? Was she from a different country?

"Absentmindedness won't help solve any problem." The gorgeous beauty on his opposite side seemed rather impatient. She said directly, "My lord, do you not want to change the current situation?"

"The current situation?" Earl Paphos repeated in a low voice and then sneered, "Discussing the current situation with sorcerers who are no better than stray dogs? My lady, we are not on the same level. Right, how should I call you?"

The pretty girl's expression turned grave. "You may call me 'Storm'. As for the current situation, I believe that even pet dogs have to worry about their position nowadays."

Is it the right attitude for communication? Earl Paphos was rather amused by the lady that the sorcerers sent over. She did not seem willing to give in at all.

However, his face became much more solemn. Despite her rudeness, the lady's words were exactly his concerns.

"We don't have much time. Your villa is not far away. Let's talk straightforwardly." Ms. Storm wasn't bothered by Earl Paphos' attitude change and said quickly, "The responsibility of the nobles is to help the Church resist sorcerers, elves, dragons, and other rogues. When you lose your value, you will be no different from the ordinary people, and the Church will treat you however they see fit."

She slightly squinted. "Besides, the Church is more wary of the nobles than the ordinary people. So, you need to know where your responsibility lies and do not lose it."

After that, instead of waiting for Earl Paphos to reply, she turned into a shadow and disappeared from the wagon. It was impossible to make a deal after only one negotiation. More communications were still needed.

Looking at the dark night where she disappeared into, Earl Paphos was deep in thought.

The storm was pouring outside with astounding thunders, and it was as dark as the doomsday.

Chapter 854: Difficult Situation

854 Difficult Situation

The torrential rain poured from the sky like a waterfall and raised vague mist when it hit the ground. It was completely dark except for the occasional bolts of lightning in the sky, like a place of ghosts.

Nobody dared to come out at such a night. The storm had separated every house, giving people both the panic of upcoming doom and the strange sense of safety that nobody would break in. The curtain of water from the room was like a rampart for every house.

Inside a common two-floored house in the city, a young man in a blood-red magic robe was staring at the rain thoughtfully. He appeared to be in his twenties. His pupils were red, and his face was handsome, with bright electric arcs bursting out vigorously now and then. Also, the vague air of books on him added to his gentleness and made him look quite special.

“Fernando, did you forward those words to Earl Paphos?” The door of the room was opened, and another young man in fashionable clothes came in. He was wearing a popular black high-collared jacket that reached his head and completely covered his ears.

His face was slim and long with a mustache. He left the impression that he was a knowledgeable scholar too.

“Of course! Have I ever screwed up anything?” The young man who was called Fernando turned around and said, almost roaring. Then, he waved his hands to stop the guy from approaching him. “Lauren, like I told you, don’t get too close to me!”

Holding back his laughter, Lauren dared not say anything else and kept his distance. It was because he was significantly taller than the short Fernando.

“How did Earl Paphos react?” Lauren touched his mustache and became serious.

Fernando said angrily, "How could he have reacted? It's the first time we met! He did not even know what the situation was! If he had promised anything, I would've suspected that it was a trap!"

His voice was loud and confident. Infinite strength seemed to be stored in his stout body.

"It makes sense. We have to take it slowly. However, we need to relocate tomorrow in case those black-clawed dogs catch us." Lauren nodded. The black-clawed dog was the nickname for the night watchers who had killed many sorcerers, because of the black gloves they wore.

Fernando was fine with that. Although he was impatient and strict, and he was even bold enough to argue with his teacher about a certain mistake in the magic knowledge, not considering the rigorous teacher-student relationship in the ancient Magic Empire at all, he had little arrogance left after being hunted by the night watchers for such a long time.

"It's best that we hide in the caves outside of the city first," Fernando said calmly. Then, he turned his eyes to the table, where a plain-looking belt was placed. Immediately, he burst into a fury again. "Lauren, why did you ask me to meet Paphos in this belt? Is it fun to turn into a female?"

Lauren lowered his head in case he laughed aloud. It was not until a long time later that he finally raised his head and said "solemnly", "You are a young senior-rank sorcerer and the hope of the Magic Empire. Also, having killed a red robe before, you already caught the attention of the black-clawed dogs and made it to the Cleansing List. How could Earl Paphos not know you? If he had other thoughts, chances were that Grand Cardinals or legendary knights would've come after you. It's better if he couldn't tell who you were."

"I could've changed my appearance with other spells!" Fernando was not tricked at all. His red eyes seemed full of storms.

Lauren took a step back subconsciously. "However, isn't it less likely for you to be recognized if you change your gender? Also, you are reckless and mean. You may have infuriated Earl Paphos as a male, but if you are a pretty lady, communication and negotiation would be easier.”

“We are not short of female sorcerers,” Fernando mumbled, although he found the explanation acceptable.

Lauren opened his hands. “But none of them are in the senior rank, and they might be caught easily. Besides, you did not object when I proposed it. You did not even ask for an explanation.”

“Fine.” Fernando’s fury was gone as fast as it came. He did not seem to be as angry as Lauren expected. “I was just curious about the feelings as a female...”

Lauren seemed interested. He asked curiously, “How does it feel to be a lady? Was anyone attracted by you?”

“How does it feel? It’s rather strange. It’s certainly pleasant to see other people enthralled by you. However, this belt is not perfect. The conditions after the change are all illusionary, and I cannot experience the body feelings of a female for real...” Fernando said, as if he were conducting magic research. “I need to find a way to create a perfect one...”

He looked at Lauren, only to discover that his friend was so astounded that he did not say anything until a long time later.

“What a pervert!”

“Huh?” Fernando snorted, and the air pressure around was soaring.

Lauren chuckled. “It was just a joke. Right, Fernando, we need to go to the Patray Port. A sorcerer is coming from the other side of the strait on a boat. It’s an archmage!”

“An archmage?” Fernando asked in surprise.

“Yes, a fairly young archmage. He will significantly build up our strength!” Lauren said in excitement. “If Gallos hadn’t met him before on the other side of the strait, we couldn’t have got in touch with him at all, and the other magic associations would’ve got him.”

This place had been divided into three kingdoms, one duchy, and one group of cities on the north coastline. The Magic Empire in the past had been shattered, and many magic organizations had emerged. Among them, there were large organizations with a long history, like “Cabin of Palmeira”, and there were smaller ones that were newly found, like “Union of Sorcerers” where Fernando was at. The one thing they had in common was that they all could only hide in the dark and struggle to survive.

Fernando nodded. “An archmage who knows the ninth-circle spells will really help us unite with other organizations.”

They had named their group “Union of Sorcerers” because they hoped to unite with the major magic associations to resist the Church together. However, they were not strong enough to convince other groups at all.

Lauren sighed. “Exactly. The legends can hide in their demiplanes and close the entrance, and they can run into the Dark Mountain Range. We, on the other hand, can only struggle to survive. An archmage will be the most important leverage for us.”

“That’s not fair. If the legends hadn’t distracted the Grand Cardinals and the legendary knights, we probably would’ve been eliminated.” Unusually, Fernando did not describe those legendary sorcerers as rats in the gutter.

Lauren sighed again. “There are still important cities like Aalto. It’s said that the Truth Cult has focused most of its men on attacking them. Well, many legends have been gathered there. It seems that the glory of the empire hasn’t died after the fall of Antiffler. Instead, people are even more united. Honestly though, if it weren’t for the missing legends, the Truth Cult wouldn’t have developed so fast at all...”

“It’s already a fact. Don’t regret and remorse. Focus on the present and the future!” Fernando interrupted Lauren rudely. “What’s the name of the archmage? How old is he?”

He subconsciously compared the guy to himself.

Lauren shook his head. "I am not sure. He can't be too young. Every archmage is hundreds of years old."

"I won't be!" Fernando declared proudly.

He was born after the Divine Calendar was announced, but the War of Dawn was still in an impasse back then, and most of the places on this side of the strait were still controlled by the Magic Empire.

Lauren held back his smile. "Right, his name is Derrick Douglas. He has fled to our place due to the fall of Antiffler."

"Derrick Douglas," Fernando repeated and remembered the name for his future comparison. "Why doesn't he just fly over?"

"It's said that he is too wounded to fly. After all, there is barely any examination if you take the boat," Lauren said unconcernedly.

BOOM!

A thunder burst out.

Fernando looked out of the window and turned to Lauren. "It's time to rest. We have to move tomorrow and then go to the Patray Port."

Lauren nodded and raised his eyebrows. "Got it. You want Ingrid here."

"Get lost!" Fernando roared impolitely.

Lauren laughed aloud. He shouted on his way out, "Ingrid, Fernando wants to see you."

The fury on Fernando's face was gone, replaced by vague helplessness and mixed feelings. There weren't that many deep feelings between him and Ingrid, a female sorcerer. They were just desperately in need of the comfort of each other's body in such a dark and depressing environment.

Suddenly, his face changed, and a mirror with countless mysterious symbols appeared before him.

A holy light that seemed to have descended from the sky hit the mirror with overwhelming magnificence, shattering it. However, the holy light was blown black and pierced through the rain and darkness outside. Several people were consumed.

“Enemy incoming!” Fernando shouted in a high voice. He pointed his finger, and a figure that jumped out of the shadow immediately glittered. It was frozen and fell on the ground into countless pieces.

“No...” A female cry came to an abrupt halt. Fernando’s eyebrows bounced. Was it Ingrid?

He left the room and entered the corridor, only to discover that a man in black gloves was passing by a body.

He was so familiar with the body, but it was completely lifeless now!

“Damn it!” Fernando’s eyes were bloodshot. Cracking noises burst out, and silver bolts of lightning surrounded the night watcher like giant serpents. A forest of lightning seemed to have arrived.

BOOM!

The electricity attracted the bolts of lightning outside, which fell from the sky and penetrated through the ceiling.

The place became an ocean of lightning and blocked the enemy. Fernando did not delay at all. Having been used to death, he held back his fury and covered the other sorcerers to evacuate from a secret channel.

Then, he cast a spell to ignite Ingrid’s body as a way of burial.

Chapter 855: Weirdo

855 Weirdo

The storm was still pouring, but lightning and thunder were getting rare. So, the night was even darker than before.

In the basement of a manor at the suburb, Fernando sat in a corner with a grim face, and Lauren paced back and forth anxiously, sneaking out now and then for investigation.

As a matter of fact, even the owner of the manor did not know that the evil sorcerers had turned his basement into their bureau.

“The night watchers were deceived by our arrangements and chased after the wrong direction.” After a while, Lauren reentered the basement. Avoiding several traps, he told Fernando what he learned. “Like how we rehearsed before, the other people went to the other bureaus in different groups. As for the loss of sorcerers and apprentices, we can’t calculate until this thing is over.”

Fernando did not nod or shake his head. “What I want to know is why the black-clawed dogs can find the place.”

A horrifying storm seemed to be brewing in his red eyes. Even Lauren, as a friend who was most familiar with him, couldn’t help but step back unconsciously.

Lauren said gloomily, “That’s exactly my question too. That bureau was very inconspicuous. We had never used it before. Also, we found no sign of being followed by the black-clawed dogs. I think that some of us might’ve joined the black-clawed dogs.”

He did not sound shocked at all. Betrayal, slaughter, and escape were the themes at the end of the War of Dawn.

“Investigate in secret but do not make a fuss. A good traitor might even ‘help’ us. Also, everybody has been separated to avoid the enemy now. Nobody knows the location of the other groups except us. The traitor cannot cause any greater losses.” Fernando was surprisingly calm. Lauren had thought that he would burst into fury and torture the traitor to avenge Ingrid.

Lauren nodded. "I know what to do. Honestly speaking, Fernando, I thought that you would lose control of your temper."

There was no smile on Fernando's face. "My fury is waiting to burst out at an appropriate moment."

He secretly sighed to himself. Although Lauren and he had known each other for years as old friends, the guy did not really know him. It was true that he was picky, impatient, and downright a roarer, but he could control himself and understand the situation. Although he barely admitted it, he was never stubborn in front of unquestionable facts and reasons. He knew what to do very well at such a moment. His fury would be gradually accumulated until the day it was unleashed.

"Judging from the signs during the attack, it's 'vulture' who commanded the squad of night watchers tonight." Lauren shifted the topic to their ambusher. "He has been after us for a long time."

"Vulture" was their scornful nickname for a senior-rank night watcher. The guy was a level-eight radiant knight, ranking top thirty among the night watchers. His codename was "Predator".

"Yes. At the end of our evacuation, he was hit by my 'Shadow Arrow' but also broke my defense. Had it not been for Spell Trigger, perhaps I would've needed to find a way to transform into a lich." Fernando confirmed Lauren's speculation before he said with insuppressible anger, "We need to make a plan to secretly kill him so that the night watchers, reverend, and knights who are after us will be scared and work less hard!"

"Assassinating a ranked night watcher will raise the retaliation of the Church. Chances are that legends will be deployed to chase us. Are you willing to abandon everything here?" Lauren did not quite agree with Fernando's idea. The Union of Sorcerers was still too weak. It needed to avoid attention and grew up quietly.

"Because we are weak, we need to do something big so that the sorcerers will know that it is hopeful to follow us. After all, now that a traitor has appeared, we have to give up most of Paphos County. Also, our next target is very clear, which is to attract the nobles who are dissatisfied with the Church and hide behind them,” Fernando said, as if he knew what was on his friend’s mind. His hair was rather messy, suggesting that the previous battle with the Predator was not so easy.

Lauren hesitated. “Let me think about it. We should discuss it again after we pick Douglas up.”

“Alright,” Fernando replied briefly.

When he watched Fernando who fell quiet, Lauren seemed to see a human-shaped storm.

...

The bright sun, the clear sky, and the vague stink of the sea delivered by the wind filled the Patray Port with a charm that was different from any other places.

Fernando and Lauren, pretending to be merchants who had come to fetch their goods, paced back and forth in a fixed area in the port, glancing at where the boats were docked. According to Gallos and Douglas’ deal, it was their rendezvous, and the white gloves and the red handkerchiefs marked their identity.

A classic boat slowly approached. Both Fernando and Lauren beamed with interest. It was exactly the boat that Douglas was on, but it was one day late. However, they were not very surprised, as the weather in the Storm Strait was terrible, and it was very normal for boats to be late.

“Black-clawed dogs!” Suddenly, Fernando’s expression changed. He saw a few men, covered in capes, walk to the place where the boat was being docked with dozens of knights and squires. Their unique black gloves indicated their identities.

Lauren was rather grim. “Is it a regular examination, or is it specifically against Douglas?”

Ever since the fall of Antiffler, more and more sorcerers had come to Holm, and the Church paid more attention to the examination of boats. However, since their personnel and attention were not enough, most sorcerers could still successfully hide their identities. As long as it was not specific, an archmage wouldn't fear such examinations at all.

"How would I know?" Fernando roared in a low voice. "We have to see how strong the night watchers are."

At this moment, a merchant in clean clothes walked in from outside of the port. The two of them immediately stopped talking, pretending that they were waiting for their goods.

"Good day, sirs, have your goods arrived?" The merchant was tall and strong, probably in his thirties. His nose was high, his black hair was thick, and his face was square but not exactly handsome. However, his deep blue eyes gave him a unique vibe that Fernando was quite familiar with.

Lauren chuckled. "Not yet. Our cargo must've been blocked by the storm. What about yours?"

He talked as enthusiastically as a real merchant.

"My goods have arrived. It's right here," the merchant said with a smile. His voice was as comforting as a spring breeze.

"What?" Lauren was dazed.

Fernando, however, immediately realized it. He asked in a low voice, "Douglas?"

Lauren looked at the guy, stunned. He finally noticed that the young merchant was also wearing white gloves with a red handkerchief in his pocket.

"Yes. Are you Gallos' friends?" The young merchant admitted his identity frankly and asked warmly, not fearing that they were night watchers at all.

"Yes. Why... Why did you come from the outside?" Lauren was rather confused.

Douglas chuckled. "I got off the boat in advance and came from the bottom of the ocean. I've waited for you at the port for a day."

His smile was as clean as an innocent kid.

No wonder he's not afraid of night watchers or ambushes. He must've examined the environment carefully. Lauren was immediately enlightened.

"Our goods have been delayed. We should come again tomorrow. Let's have some drinks and talk to each other," Fernando said like a businessman, slightly disgusted by Douglas, because the guy was also one foot taller than him, and he was not nearly as skinny as Lauren was!

When the night watchers examined the boat, the three sorcerers did not attract any attention and left the place like any other merchants on the port. They took a wagon and returned to the capital of Paphos County.

After changing a few wagons, they finally had a member of the Union of Sorcerers as the coachman. It was not until this moment that Fernando and Lauren finally formally introduced themselves.

"I am Fernando Brastar, the leader of the Union's branch in Paphos County. You can call me Fernando. I do not like my last name." Fernando secretly sniffed.

"Fernando Brastar?" Douglas repeated, raising his voice before he smiled. "The 'Dark Storm', ranking the 296th on the Cleansing List?"

Lauren nodded on behalf of Fernando, implying that it was exactly him.

"You made it to the Cleansing List just after you arrived at the senior rank, and you reached the top 300 after you advanced into the seventh circle. Fernando, you must be significantly stronger than the regular senior-rank sorcerers," Douglas complimented with a smile.

In this period, most of the archmages and senior-rank sorcerers of the Magic Empire still lived. There were almost eight hundred people on the Cleansing List.

Fernando chuckled. “I’ve only grasped and modified some spells and killed a red robe. I am certainly not as good as you, a ninth-circle archmage.”

Not bothered by Fernando’s subconscious tone of comparison, Douglas said with a peaceful smile, “Me? I am not even on the Cleansing List.”

“I’ve been quite curious about that too. You are an archmage. How come you are not on the Cleansing List?” Lauren had learned the Cleansing List from the night watchers they killed, but the name of Derrick Douglas was not on it.

Douglas chuckled in a low voice. “I was always considered a weirdo who did not have any prospect in magic when I was in Antiffler. I became an archmage because of the long-time accumulation, my teacher’s heritage, the training in the War of Dawn, the fortuitous incidents, and some of my own little ideas. It’s perfectly normal that the Church does not pay much attention to me. After all, the sorcerers who joined the Church will tell them that Douglas will never become a legend or achieve any ambitions. He will only ask his questions while he waits to die. It is unnecessary to waste time and energy on him.”

He made fun of himself, not angry at all that other people thought little of him.

“A weirdo?” Lauren and Fernando asked at the same time. In their conversation so far, Douglas had shown no weirdness at all. Instead, he was fun, warm, and attractive. He seemed to have natural-born leadership.

In the meantime, Fernando’s impression of Douglas was much better after he admitted that he had become an archmage because of the long-time accumulation.

Douglas smiled. “Yes, I am good at asking questions.”

“What’s weird about that?” Fernando said in confusion before he went on with his self-introduction.

Douglas suddenly interrupted him, “You must be good at the spells of storms and lightning in the school of elements, right?”

“Of course, night watchers rarely give wrong nicknames.” Fernando nodded.

Caught in silence, Douglas mumbled to himself, “Why can lightning kill people... How is lightning generated...”

Fernando and Lauren looked at him in shock and confusion. Wasn’t it natural that lightning could kill people? Was it necessary to ask why? He was really a weirdo...

Chapter 856: Talk in the Wagon

856 Talk in the Wagon

The atmosphere on the wagon became extremely weird. Douglas seemed to have forgotten the two sorcerers next to him. He kept asking strange questions one after another, and neither Fernando nor Lauren knew how to respond. Weren't they all as matter-of-fact as the sun rising from the east and the fruit falling to the ground after they were ripe?

However, Douglas soon came back to himself. He said apologetically, "Excuse me. I tend to be absentminded once in a while."

"It's nothing. It happens to me when I encounter magic problems," Lauren replied with a smile, as if he were not interested in Douglas' strange questions at all. Fernando opened his mouth but did not say anything in the end.

After a brief silence, Fernando and Lauren introduced the situation on this side of the Storm Strait.

"Both the Sylvanas Magic Empire and the Asso Empire have been dismembered into scattered organizations that do not obey each other. Some of them have even escaped to the Boundless Ocean. It is safe to say that the situation here is even worse than the other side of the strait. At least, the western territory including Aalto is still in the hands of sorcerers..." Lauren sighed.

Fernando added, "The territory that used to belong to the Asso Empire has been divided into two parts, the Kingdom of Brianne and the Duchy of Calais. From what used to be the Sylvanas Magic Empire, the Kingdom of Holm and the Kingdom of Colette have been born. Our organization is mainly active in Holm, which is where we are in right now..."

Having investigated the situation before he passed the Storm Strait, Douglas was no stranger to the information. With a tranquilizing smile, he said, "As a matter of fact, I chose to pass the Storm Strait instead of running to Aalto, because I had more hopes in this place.”

“Is that so?” Fernando tried to be indifferent and narrowed his eyes, preventing his eyes from betraying himself.

The Union had always been analyzing the situation, and their final conclusion was similar to Douglas’. That was why they risked making attempts and changes.

Douglas said peacefully, “Because the nobles here are more powerful than the Church in general.”

His words struck Lauren like lightning. He finally understood why his organization changed its policy and asked Fernando to meet the greatest noble at the capital of Paphos County.

Lauren knew that it was meant to attract the nobles and sow discord between them and the Church. However, he had never known why they were doing in, and what they were contriving to do.

Fernando said nothing and simply looked at Douglas, waiting for what he was about to say.

“We did not know the specific conditions here, but according to my observation, after the fall of Antiffler, the clerics were more and more arrogant toward the nobles, and most Grand Cardinals and divine knights have been concentrated in Antiffler and Lance, ready to march west,” Douglas spoke of what he knew.

“In western cities such as Aalto, many legends have been gathered, and they even have the help of some vampires and dragons. However, they have serious internal contradictions, and the gap between them and the Church and nobles will be wider and wider. Unless the Silver Moon arrives, they will be swallowed step by step. On the other side, while we are weak in this place, the gap between us and the Church is not as huge.”

He compared with the overall strength of the Church and the nobles in the first time but only the Church in the second time. Both Fernando and Lauren knew his meaning well.

Fernando spoke in a weird accent that suggested he wasn't a native of Holm, "After most of the senior-rank sorcerers were eliminated, the Truth Cult has mobilized more than half of the legendary clerics. Now, there is only one saint cardinal in Rentato and Cocus respectively."

"Some of the legendary knights have been moved away too, but there are still five left. After all, this place is their hometown, and they are unwilling to attack Aalto far away even though they are devout believers. Also, they believe that the Church does not need their help. Obviously, the Church thinks so too."

"But what's the point?" Lauren frowned and asked in confusion. "As long as the Church destroys the legends in the west and sends most of the experts over, all our efforts will be in vain."

Fernando glared at him. "Time. The time for us to develop, look for allies, sow discord, and seek balance."

Douglas also smiled. "We aren't the Church's only enemy."

"Right, if Aalto is lost, the Church will reach the Dark Mountain Range. Perhaps the Silver Moon will really arrive." Lauren nodded.

Douglas suddenly seemed tranced. "Even if the Silver Moon does arrive, I think the pope will remain undefeated."

"Is God's Arrival really so powerful?" Fernando asked in shock and curiosity. Their intelligence was too untrustworthy on this side of the strait, and now they were faced with a living sorcerer who went through the Battle of Antiffler.

"His Excellency the Light of Stars perished without any resistance. Even the city defense of Antiffler was mostly destroyed. I don't know how powerful a real demigod is, but I know that the Light of Stars was beyond top legendary when he fought in Antiffler..." Douglas recalled; his peaceful smile replaced by panic.

Both Fernando and Lauren fell silent. Neither of them had been to Antiffler before. Although Fernando was a native of the Asso Empire, Antiffler had been “Crown of Arcana” for all the time thanks to the lessons of their teachers and seniors. It was known as the strongest fortress on earth where the most powerful legendary sorcerers were gathered, but after only one attack of God’s Arrival, the consul and the capital of the Sylvanas Magic Empire were demolished.

Was God’s Arrival so powerful?

For a moment, they were grasped by intense desperation. What was the point of their work? It would be finished by one God’s Arrival after all.

Douglas put on a warm smile again. “There’s no need to be too worried. I don’t think it’s so easy for the pope to perform God’s Arrival.”

“How do you know?” The intelligence was too important and Lauren had never heard it before. He was even suspicious that Douglas was merely comforting him.

Douglas did not have any beard, which made him younger than he actually was. He smiled. “It’s been almost ten years since the fall of Antiffler, but the Church never marched west on a large scale. The pope has never attacked again, even though people are regathering and picking up their confidence. I think there’s a reason for that.

“Besides, the pope was surrounded by legends before, but he never used God’s Arrival. If it is so easy to perform, he could’ve used it to finish the battle quickly.”

He proposed his guess honestly, not bothering at all that the two sorcerers kept a lot of stuff to themselves.

“Well...” Douglas was deep in thought. The more he thought, the more reasonable it appeared to him, and the more wary he was of Douglas. They had known the facts for a long time, but nobody had ever connected them or pointed out the problem. Was it because Douglas always asked strange questions?

They stopped further communication. After all, they hadn’t really established trust yet.

The wagon stopped at the suburb. Fernando and Lauren led Douglas in the woods and approached a shelter.

In this forest, the Union of Sorcerers had three secret bureaus. One was still unactivated, one had been given to the three sorcerers as a shelter, and the last one was their destination.

“Let’s go there and take a look first,” Lauren said to Fernando in the telepathic bond.

Fernando nodded and knew that he wanted to observe the shelter where the three sorcerers were hiding because one of the traitors they suspected was there.

Douglas did not talk but followed them in silence. Fernando and Lauren, on the other hand, did not intend to show him the bureau. For all they knew, he could still be a spy of the night watchers.

Now that the Church had dominating advantages, more and more sorcerers who struggled in darkness and depression joined the Church and became night watchers who hunted their companions. Nobody could tell if their close comrades yesterday would become the enemy who ended their life the next day.

Several big magic organizations had been infiltrated by the night watchers and suffered destructive strikes. The other organizations learned their lessons and gave strict tests on every newcomer even if the newcomer was an archmage. It had to be noted that there were plenty of archmages among the top thirty night watchers!

Fernando and Lauren only intended to glimpse at the place from far away in case the secret bureau was exposed. However, after only one glance, Fernando’s face became so gloomy that a storm seemed to come.

The cave was half open, and the intense stink of blood had attracted three wolves.

“We’re one step late!” Lauren patted his head in regrets. He already knew what happened. They had the correct suspect, but he did not keep lurking, hoping that he was not discovered. The guy had killed two sorcerers and left immediately. He had to be under the protection of the night watchers now.

Douglas watched them examine the surroundings and followed them to the cave in silence. He saw the two bitten, incomplete bodies, as well as their faces that were overwhelmed with fear and confusion.

“Gary is dead, Prince is dead...” Lauren spoke to himself, “Gary’s little girl asked me to take care of her father, and Prince hadn’t even told his girl that he loved her yet... Damn it, Benson, they were your good friends! Gary even saved you before! I came too late...”

“They’re dead for at least a day and a half. It’s obvious they were soaked in the rain,” Douglas said in a low voice, suggesting that Benson attacked immediately after they arrived. Nobody could have helped them.

Fernando’s face was blue and red. He vaguely recalled that Gary’s daughter was a lovely kid. After a long time, he finally roared in a low voice, “I’ll let Benson regret this!”

A fifth-circle sorcerer and an elite who was very likely to be a senior-rank sorcerer had joined the night watchers just like that!

Lauren took a deep breath. “Let’s get out of here first.”

The two of them hurried to burn the bodies into ashes and kept them in their magic pouches.

The rest of the journey to their secret shelter was even more depressing. Douglas suddenly opened his mouth. “Actually, I am a sorcerer who prefers figuring out the reasons behind things to killing and fighting.”

Fernando was about to roar, but what Douglas said next left a deep impression on him.

Douglas looked at the sky and heaved a soft sigh. “However, only in a safe and steady environment and with the support of other people will it be possible to explore and research. Now, there isn't even a place where we can install an alchemical platform stably, and the partners we explore the world together with are all dying.

“When a person is cornered, it will be time for him to change.”

Chapter 857: Tes

857 Tes

As they traveled in the forest again, the three of them were even quieter. Fernando was like a human-shaped storm that was about to burst out. The more he held himself back, the more terrifying he was.

The shelter provided to Douglas was an inconspicuous cave, with only the traces of magic circles in the deepest part. The cover was most natural.

“Mr. Douglas, you can stay here for a couple of days. We’ll find you again after things are sorted out.” Even though Douglas had been warm and friendly, Lauren still chose to show him enough respect when they said goodbye to each other. He was an archmage after all.

Douglas did not appear to be angered by their treatment. He knocked on the wall of the cave and nodded with the same smile. “I’m already satisfied that there is a place for me to do my research.”

He was not bothered that they were wary of him. Instead, he was very glad to see that, because most organizations that were not wary of the sorcerers who joined them had been eliminated. He did not wish that the one he was joining was among them, in which case it would be no different from suicide.

Before the fall of Antiffler, he had already learned the cruelties of the situation through his keen observation. Under the temptation and coercion of the Church, it was not unusual for parents to abandon their children, the apprentices to kill their masters, and friends to attack each other. It was even more brutal after the collapse of the Magic Empire. This was because, for most sorcerers, they could not afford any more hesitation. It was either betrayal or death.

“You’d better not run magic experiments. The black-clawed dogs have sharp noses,” Fernando reminded him solemnly, fearing that the archmage from Antiffler would be overconfident.

Douglas took out a thick paper from his magic pouch and put it on a stone table in the cave. “Rest assured. I have mathematical studies that are enough to drain me.”

“Mathematical research... Are you from the Tower?” Fernando was in a better mood now that the subject at hand was magic. The Tower Geometry was his first frustration when he learned magic. Also, the sorcerers of the Tower were as zealous about mathematics as Douglas.

The sorcerers of the Magic Empire had attached great importance to mathematics since a long time ago because it was closely related to the construction of magic models. However, they still devoted most of their attention to the studies of spells and blood powers. After all, the results of mathematical studies barely proved useful, and few sorcerers were really interested in it. Most of them were members of the Tower.

After the War of Dawn broke out and the Church was winning, fewer and fewer sorcerers had the leisure to study mathematics. At least, Fernando had never seen any guy who was so passionate about mathematics.

Douglas raised his head and said with a self-mocking smile, “As a matter of fact, I would love to join the Tower, but they did not want someone as queer as me. After the fall of Antiffler, I never saw them again.”

“I’m glad that you are fully aware of your queerness. If you ask fewer questions, you will be a great friend.” Fernando had always been fond of striking other people, even if the guy was an archmage.

Douglas smiled and did not respond to Fernando.

Lauren looked at Fernando and complained to himself. Why do I have to make up for someone else’s mistake? Does the guy not know how to talk without sarcasm? His pretty and appealing face is such a waste!

He coughed and said, “Mr. Douglas, don’t mind Fernando. He is a descendant of the savage empire of Aaso, as is evident by his accent. Right, you can make a list of what you need in the next couple of days. If you need anything urgently, you can tell me right now.”

“I don’t need anything.” Douglas shook his head and saw Fernando and Lauren off, knowing well that it would be time for his test when they returned.

What would the test be?

...

When they left the woods in silence, Fernando and Lauren did not talk to each other. However, they both changed their route and walked into the city, reaching Viscount Elrealcan’s villa. That was their safest shelter that only the leadership of their organization knew. It was also the last place that the night watchers would be suspicious of.

The noble reached out to a senior-rank sorcerer of the Union of Sorcerers in a certain operation before he inherited his title. Then, with the sorcerer’s help, he eliminated powerful enemies and earned his title. After that, he made many contributions by the intelligence provided by the Union of Sorcerers and was promoted to be a viscount. He was the first influential noble that the Union of Sorcerers acquired after the new strategy was implemented.

Fernando and Lauren had changed their appearances into those of the valets that everybody was familiar with. When they passed the gate, nobody suspected them because of their identities on the surface.

The old butler remained silent, not asking anything about the guys who often accepted the viscount’s special orders.

After he returned to his room, Lauren had just washed his face when he heard Fernando’s violent door knocks.

“What’s up? Do you want to discuss how to test Douglas?” Lauren asked in confusion. All he wanted was a good rest after a few intense days.

Fernando’s spiritual power spread out. He closed the door and roared in a low voice, “Lauren, we must counterattack!”

“Assassinate Vulture?” Since they discussed it before, Lauren realized it after a brief daze. He said cautiously, “We need a thorough plan. Should we tempt Vulture with the traces of other people and surround him?”

“No.” Fernando’s red eyes were full of solemnity and fury. “Benson has defected. The black-clawed dogs know very well how many men we have. Maybe before we even surround Vulture, they would surround us first. Also, I’m thinking of taking down Benson at the same time!”

“How is it possible? Benson must be hiding inside the Inquisition. There’s no way that we can get him out!” Lauren refused Fernando’s proposal without any hesitation. “Should we wait for more reinforcements from the headquarters?”

Holding his fury, Fernando shook his head. “Vulture has a keen nose. He will not attack recklessly a few days later. He may even go to other areas.”

“What are you planning to do then?” Lauren asked in confusion. What did Fernando mean exactly?

Fernando said, almost roaring, “We attack the Inquisition and kill Vulture and Benson! They have to be there!”

“You’re out of your mind!” Lauren felt that either Fernando was crazy or he himself was the crazy one.

When the Magic Empire still existed, there were cases where the Inquisitions and even the cathedrals were conquered, but no sorcerers dared to attack the Inquisitions anymore in the past hundred years. They were the lairs of the black-clawed dogs, with powerful divine power circles and senior-rank night watchers.

There were better ways of suicide!

A gentle breeze blew at Fernando's hair, like the prelude to a storm. "Since it's beyond your imagination, the Church and the black-clawed dogs won't be able to see it coming either! The Inquisitions have never been attacked in a hundred years. Their reactions must be slow. As long as we kill Vulture and Benson quickly, we will be able to leave easily!"

"But... But... We are too weak..." Lauren thought that his mind was in a mess. For a moment, he thought that it was certainly beyond Vulture's wildest dreams, but then, he also thought that it was too crazy and ridiculous.

Fernando said without any smile, "We have an archmage."

"Douglas?" Lauren was immediately back to himself. "Vulture, as a level-eight radiant knight, is the strongest enemy in the city. The others are all newly-promoted red robes or radiant knights. Perhaps there will be a few senior-rank sorcerers who have betrayed us, but there can't be any archmage; otherwise, we couldn't have escaped so easily."

He paced back and forth. "The ninth-circle spells are eccentric and powerful, and the archmages are far stronger than the senior-rank sorcerers. It shouldn't be difficult to break into the Inquisition. It will be better if he is capable of 'Time Stop'. Benson had no idea that we were picking up an archmage. Yes, our strength is not a problem. However, Douglas hasn't been tested yet. Will he betray us?"

Fernando was still rigid. "This will be the test. If he kills Vulture, he will be one of us."

"Alright..." Lauren felt that the odds of success were not slim, but he was still not determined. "But it will infuriate the Church. I'm afraid that 'Heart of Time' will be sent over."

His fear was so strong that he did not even realize when he mentioned "Heart of Time". The legendary knight had forged his glory with the corpses and blood of sorcerers. He had even killed a legend. He was the nightmare for countless sorcerers.

He suddenly realized that he had been tricked by Fernando. “We have Douglas with us. It is totally possible to kill Vulture with distraction. Even if they pretend that they are tricked, they can’t see it coming that we have an archmage. Why do we have to attack the Inquisition directly? Fernando, don’t be blinded by fury. We can eliminate Benson in the future.”

Fernando snorted. “Ask the other people to evacuate from Paphos County first. You need to leave in advance, too. If the Church wants to retaliate, they need to find us first.”

He became more solemn. “We have to take down the traitor immediately. Only by proving that we are capable of eliminating traitors and causing trouble to the Church will the nobles be willing to work with us in secret, support us to create greater trouble, and not betray us easily!

“Lauren, you know very well how urgent the current situation is. If we are unwilling to take the risks, we will gradually be choked. We have to demonstrate our value in order to get help. Backing off will make us lose all the opportunities for cooperation.”

Gritting his teeth, Lauren thought for a moment before saying, “Fernando, be safe. Pay attention to Douglas in case he’s a spy.”

It was an indirect agreement with Fernando’s suggestion. According to the rules of the Union of Sorcerers, as long as the two leaders of the branch both agreed, the operation would be ready to go.

Fernando was not delighted because Lauren accepted his suggestion. He clenched his fists and suppressed his fury, preparing to unleash it at the appropriate moment.

...

In the forest, near the shelter...

“I’ll keep watch on the outside,” Lauren said to Fernando, fearing that the night watchers had already set up an ambush in the place.

Fernando nodded and entered the hidden cave.

Hardly had he passed the last barrier when he stepped on a piece of paper. Such paper was all over the ground.

Looking at Douglas who was busy writing, and seeing that his well-combed hair was now already a mess, Fernando picked up a piece of paper curiously and read the content on it.

Fernando was stunned the moment he started reading. He had been a well-acknowledged magic genius, and he was quite talented at mathematics, but the equations, words, and symbols on the paper made him feel that he had never learned mathematics!

What exactly was Douglas working on?

Chapter 858: Pearl on the Crown of Magic

858 Pearl on the Crown of Magic

After being stunned for almost a minute, Fernando asked in a hurry, “Douglas, what mathematical problem are you working on?”

He had never been embarrassed when it came to asking other people what he did not know, and he was most earnest when it came to the things he was interested in. Magic knowledge and mathematical problems were certainly among them.

Having set up alarm magic circles around, Douglas had known about it when Fernando entered the place, but instead of greeting the visitor, he continued dwelling in the ocean of mathematics. It was not until Fernando opened his mouth that he finally raised his head and answered, “The calculation of the area and volume of irregular objects, as well as the corresponding problems.”

The quill in his hands did not stop when he answered the question. So, his words were quite literal.

Fernando immediately looked shocked after he heard the reply. His red eyes were like two scorching suns. “The calculation of the area and volume of irregular objects? Are you studying the curves?”

It was a fundamental problem in analyzing the complicated magic models that had upset generations of sorcerers. It was the most brilliant pearl on the crown of magic. However, the research so far could only be applied to special conditions but could not be extrapolated. Many sorcerers were so frustrated that they even questioned the possibility of a solution. They stated that it was better to devote their attention to the studies on the improvement of spiritual power. The progress wouldn’t be fast either, but at least the returns would be obvious.

That was the reason why Fernando was so shocked. From the paper, the strange symbols, and the graphs of curves, he could tell that Douglas went further than anybody else in that regard!

If the problem could really be solved, the difficulties in analyzing and engraving magic models for the low rank, the middle rank, and the high rank would all be significantly lowered, and the sorcerers would be much stronger in twenty years!

Douglas was woken up from his research and smiled. "Yes. Although I've always been mocked for being impractical, I couldn't stop myself from studying it. I feel that it contains the most beautiful view in the world."

"What's your perspective?" Fernando blurted out. He then realized it was inappropriate. "If you do not want to answer, you are free not to. I'm just curious."

He had always been respectful of other people's secrets and would never snoop on them, which was a serious issue that might cause sorcerers to kill each other. However, "please tell me" was clearly written on his face.

Douglas chuckled. "It's not a big deal. I've been troubled by some problems too, and I need someone to talk to me and inspire me. Well, I'm working from the perspective of infinite division and recombination..."

Not intending to keep it to himself, he went on eloquently. Although Fernando couldn't understand most of it, he managed to follow with his basic understanding of mathematics. Now and then, he asked about the parts that he did not understand, which made Douglas even more enthused.

"What does this symbol mean?" Fernando had already approached Douglas. He pointed at a certain symbol on the manuscript.

His eyes glittering, Douglas said, "It's a symbol that I defined. It denotes infinity..."

Just like that, the two of them were so dedicated to the discussion of mathematics that they forgot about Lauren who was outside.

It seemed that few people had ever talked with Douglas about the problem that he was most proud of. So, he was extremely thrilled.

His previous warmth and gentleness were replaced by the excitement on his face. He went on talking like the most talkative old man.

“What are you doing?” Lauren waited for a long time outside, only to receive nothing, but he did not find any sign of a battle. The Secret Eye reported that Fernando was alive too. Therefore, he emboldened himself and walked in full of suspicion, only to discover what appeared to be a scene from when he studied in the magic tower before.

Douglas’ cheeks were particularly red. “We’re discussing mathematics.”

“I can see that.” Lauren smiled. “But don’t we have more important matters to discuss?”

“What is it?” Douglas calmed himself down from the heated discussion.

After a brief silence, Fernando said, “We are going to attack the Inquisition in this place to kill a high-ranked night watcher and a traitor. However, safety matters most. We should not take any risks. We would evacuate in case of an anomaly.”

Lauren looked at him in surprise. That was not what Fernando said during their discussion. He did not mention the latter half of the sentence.

“I need detailed information including the comparison of our strengths, the distribution of the divine power circles, etc. before I decide to join you or not,” Douglas said prudently.

Lauren hurried to introduce the situation in the city and spoke of their conclusion.

Douglas nodded. “Based on your intelligence, the odds of success are rather high, because the night watchers couldn’t expect that we are audacious enough to attack them at all. However, it is also very dangerous. If we are slow, and the Church activates the divine power circles and the transmission circles in reaction, we will be in serious trouble.”

The Church had set up plenty of facilities to defeat the Magic Empire. The churches of such a big city must have transmission circles that led to the capitals of the major countries. Heart of Time, the Sword of Truth, the Grand Cardinals, and the other legendary experts could arrive in several minutes. If they were stopped by the divine power circles, they would be in grave danger.

“Lauren will interfere with the church with magic items, but he will only buy two to three seconds for us. We have to seize the opportunity to escape.” Fernando introduced their plan.

“That will do. Even if we run into a gold knight, I’ll still be confident enough to get away from the battle, unless he is immune to Time Stop.” Douglas revealed that he was capable of “Time Stop”, one of the trickiest ninth-circle spells.

“I’m going to attack the Inquisition with you.” Fernando released some suppressed fury.

After they made the detailed plans and the backup ways to escape, Lauren asked Fernando in a low voice, “Why did you stress that safety matters most and we should not take risks?”

Fernando was very solemn. “Because I believe that Douglas is much more valuable than the Inquisition, this city, and even the whole Union. Of course, that is not including me.”

Lauren looked at his friend in shock again. The guy had always preferred sarcasm to compliments, but he had given Douglas such a high remark! Even though his compliment at the end exposed his nature, it was still rather unbelievable. Was the Sun rising from the west today?

What happened before he came in? Had Fernando been controlled?

Holding back his surprise, Lauren asked carefully, “Where do you see that?”

Fernando replied angrily, “Everywhere! Here, here, and here!”

He pointed at the papers on the ground and told Lauren about Douglas' research in a low voice.

"If he succeeds, wouldn't it be much easier for me to become a senior-rank sorcerer?" Lauren observed in excitement. He had always admired and trusted his friend's judgment.

"Who knows? There are still plenty of problems. Chances are that it will be unfinished by the time he meets the Goddess of Magic." Fernando couldn't help but mock Douglas.

...

The horizon was crimson at sunset, and the city gate was about to be closed.

On a hill nearby, Fernando prepared his spell in a temporarily-established ancillary magic circle.

"Has he really improved the spell?" Douglas asked Lauren curiously.

Lauren said proudly, "Yes. In the entire Union and the other organizations that I'm familiar with, nobody controls the spell so perfectly that it's almost natural."

Fernando was suddenly covered in electricity. The sky within dozens of kilometers became dark, with clouds slowly appearing.

"Let's go into the city. A storm is coming in three hours." Fernando walked out of the magic circle. At this moment, the clouds were still not too many.

It was "Weather Manipulation", a seventh-circle spell!

A thunderstorm would cover most of the traces of magic waves!

After they snuck into the Inquisition, since the sorcerers who had betrayed them often practiced magic, they wouldn't fear that they might be sensed by the defense circle of the whole city.

Douglas looked at the sky, somewhat shocked. The regular “Weather Manipulation” should have created thunderstorms or blizzards very quickly under appropriate weather conditions. Everybody could tell that those phenomena were caused by magic. Nobody had ever changed it bit by bit, as if it were a regular weather change, like what Fernando did.

Only in such a way would it escape the attention of the keen night watchers and red robes.

Lauren stayed out of the city to watch over the magic circle. He would also fly to the top of the city after the storm arrived, monitor the church, and disrupt it with magic items and bolts of lightning whenever it was necessary. On the other hand, Fernando and Douglas went into the city before the gate was closed. They hid in a fairly clean tavern.

More and more clouds were gathered, and the air was getting damper and damper. Everybody sensed an upcoming storm. So, few people were on the street. Even the patrolling soldiers were considering where they should hide from the rain.

Pa!

A bolt of lightning struck in the dark sky, raising intense thunders.

Douglas and Fernando looked at each other and nodded. They left the tavern and strolled toward the Inquisition.

BOOM!

The bolts of lightning and thunder broke out nonstop. By the time they reached the Inquisition, torrential rain was already pouring.

The Inquisition was an inconspicuous two-floored tower. It seemed plain, but it gave a gloomy and horrifying feeling. It was the nightmare of sorcerers and ordinary people.

“Based on our previous files, the main part of the Inquisition is below the tower,” Fernando reminded him.

Hualala.

As the rain poured down, everything became dark, and all their senses were blocked.

Douglas and Fernando moved faster as if they were in a hurry.

“What are you doing?” asked a night watcher who was pretending to be the janitor.

“Sir, we have important leads about the sorcerers!” said Douglas in a panic.

The night watcher was not surprised. He observed the strangers carefully. Recently, many people had come to the Inquisition at night to confess their secrets.

The moment his eyes met Douglas’ eyes, he seemed to have sunk into a boundless cosmos. He appeared rather agitated. “Why didn’t you come sooner? I’ll lead you to the captain!”

The vague magic waves were drowned in the storm.

Chapter 859: A Tour in the Inquisition

859 A Tour in the Inquisition

Thick, dark-yellow carpet, crystal light hanging up in the ceiling, fine statues, vivid wall paintings and relief sculptures, and the bright and warm atmosphere made the small, black building look like a nobleman's private property instead of a notorious "hell".

That was the first impression that the Inquisition gave to Fernando and Douglas. The gatekeeper led them through the tree-shaded path and now they had come to the most horrible place known to every sorcerer.

In the main hall stood Fernando, Douglas, and the gatekeeper. Although they did not see anyone else, their sharp instincts were telling them that a few night watchers were hiding in the darkness. Fernando and Douglas believed that those who were hiding were the first set of vigilance of the Inquisition.

The gatekeeper was slightly panicking. Walking, he said to them with annoyance, "I doubt your devoutness. You should've reported this right away. If this causes big trouble, you two will be sent to the gallows!"

After taking a short pause, his tone softened slightly as he said, "But if things go well, you'll be rewarded generously."

"Yes, yes, sir..." Douglas hurriedly nodded, pretending to be rather obedient. Fernando remained silent with his head low. He looked afraid.

The gatekeeper's words made the hiding night watchers stay where they were. They only scanned Fernando and Douglas using their intuition or spiritual power fields. But the two were well-prepared in advance. The night watchers could find nothing.

Of course, Douglas and Fernando were not acting as ordinary people since magic waves were hard to hide among the divine circles. What they were playing were two low-rank sorcerers who were selling out their friends. Half true and half fake as their roles were, they could well hide without catching unnecessary attention. After the fall of Antiffler, such betrayals were more than common.

Therefore, the night watchers hiding were just being curious, wondering what kind of important information the two had, but they were not qualified to know.

Walking through the main hall, there was an east-west corridor, along both sides there were many rooms. Some doors were open, some closed.

Through the half-opened doors, Fernando saw many common clerics doing paperwork. Most of them were not even priests.

He finally exchanged a look with Douglas, and they had understood each other through their slightly relaxed facial expressions. Although the Inquisition was still sticking to all the regulations and was equipped with layers of guards and alerts like an unbreakable fortress, this place was still run by human beings, and human beings could get careless and lazy.

The gatekeeper suddenly stopped halfway. He turned to the side and opened one of the doors. The room behind the door had no decoration and the floor was bare. In the middle of the room, there were stairs leading to the underground basement.

At the end of the stairs, there was a gray stone gate that was engraved with simple but meaningful divine symbols, representing ten different crowns that connected to each other.

The great power coming out from the gate made both Fernando and Douglas slightly squint their eyes. The gate was the direct display of the defense circle in the Inquisition, and its power was almost equal to that of a level nine red robe. At this time, the Church was so powerful that only a legendary could become a Grand Cardinal.

Fernando knew that the symbol of the ten crowns was called “Tree of Blessing”.

The gatekeeper gently knocked on the fourth crown while following a special pace. Soon, an indifferent voice asked, “Who? What for?”

“Team no. 2. The ‘Hand of Dusk’, today’s gatekeeper. We have two low-rank sorcerers here for some very important information. I’m afraid they will hide something or lie, so I believe it’s better to have our team leader investigate them,” said the gatekeeper clearly, and his eyes looked sharp and sober. However, if taken a closer look, there was this very indistinct dilation in his pupils.

In most cases, a gatekeeper was only responsible for reporting this to the team leader, who would be the one deciding where and when to investigate the sorcerers. But the gatekeeper’s request was also reasonable. After all, some special divine circles capable of identifying lies were only available in the interrogation room. Also, it was not the first time something like this happened. The night watchers had lowered their alert and decided to ignore some of the detailed rules set up by their predecessors because of the successive victories they enjoyed.

The night watcher guarding this stone gate did not respond immediately, as he was checking them using the core of the divine circle. About thirty minutes later, he said in the cold tone, “Come in.”

The ten divine crowns lit up, and the gate slowly opened.

Douglas was a bit relieved. Although they did have a plan B, which was to mentally control the team leader if he decided to come to the gate to check them himself, this was not ideal as the magic waves would be hard to hide. Once they entered, the situation would be different. As there were many sorcerers in the underground room, their magic spells would not be easily identified.

Behind the gate, there was an endless corridor. In the darkness, there were also night watchers hiding.

Along the winding corridor, there were two lines of candlesticks, but the light came from the divine power.

However, the divine light made the dark and gloomy corridor even more unpleasant by comparison.

Through the corridor, it suddenly became noisy. Many who were wearing black gloves were walking through the spacious hall. Some were wearing red gloves, as they were interrogators, whereas some were wearing big gray cloaks, and these were the executioners.

At the end of the main hall, there were many corridors. Douglas and Fernando could feel the magic or divine power waves. Obviously, some interrogations were going on, or it might be because some of them were practicing.

They did not draw much attention from those people, as they were led by a night watcher, and they had passed the many security checks already.

The gatekeeper led them to one of the corridors and then knocked on a door drawn with a black skull.

“Come in,” said the solemn voice.

Pushing the gate, Fernando saw a middle-aged man whose face was as thin and narrow as a serpent.

“Who are they?” asked the night watcher team leader with a bit of annoyance.

The gatekeeper closed the door first and then repeated the reason.

“Don’t be so reckless next time. Basic interrogation must be done first above the ground,” said the leader, whose tone wasn’t very strict.

He then looked at Douglas and Fernando before asking, “You know where Dark Storm is? And the headquarters of the Union of Sorcerers?”

His eyes now looked watery, and the divine light on the wall started flowing. As Fernando and Douglas had expected, he was using the power of the special divine circle to find the answer.

The night watcher leader was confident even though he was only a level-five grand knight. With the help of this divine circle, even a senior-rank sorcerer would be affected by this power if he was not prepared, so these two low-rank sorcerers would have no chance to resist at all.

Suddenly, Fernando saw a pair of dark eyes, in which there were countless tiny light spots like charming stars.

The team leader suddenly sprang up from his seat and said out loud, “You two do know it!”

The weak magic waves were so hard to notice when the entire space was filled with the flowing divine light and when all kinds of power were mixing together in this underground place.

The night watcher leader walked back and forth. “This is very important. I have to report this to the Executor... and also the Predator.”

The Executor was the leader of this county’s Inquisition, and he was also a senior-rank sorcerer.

The team leader pulled open the door and said to a night watcher, “Go and find the Predator and the Executor. We have important information about the Dark Storm and the Union of Sorcerers!”

The night watcher hurriedly nodded and trotted away. The Predator was here to catch Dark Storm, and he had to be informed of this immediately.

The Predator was “Griffon Vulture”, which was how Douglas and Fernando called him.

The team leader and the gatekeeper led Douglas and Fernando out of the room and walked to the Executor’s room. On their way, both Douglas and Fernando were secretly observing the divine circles, and they came to the same conclusion—this place was like a solid fortress designed to restrain sorcerers.

However, they were already here.

Douglas and Fernando had found their way in. The over a hundred years of victory and peace had made them greatly lower their alert.

At this time, the team leader suddenly stopped and murmured to himself, "Gotta bring the sorcerers who surrendered there as well, so that they can confront each other."

Therefore, he changed the direction and walked to another corridor. Douglas and Fernando followed behind him.

This was Douglas' will. He had mentally controlled the team leader. He had to make sure that the Predator would be in the Executor's room before them so that they could kill them all. After all, the Executor would very likely notice the fact that the team leader and the gatekeeper had been mentally controlled, and if that happened, they had to give up on killing the Predator. Their time for the mission was very limited, so they had to make the most use of it.

In the room, Benson was drinking a glass of strong liquor, and the look on his face was very relaxed. The worry and fear on his face were gone.

Of course, only when he was drunk could he forget his friend's eyes the last second before his friend died.

"Follow me to the Executor. There are sorcerers offering information. Please help us with the identification," asked the team leader politely.

Benson was a young man with a red face. He was quite good looking.

"That's what I should do." Benson smiled.

He took a glance at Douglas standing behind the team leader and did not recognize him at all. After all, he did not know that many sorcerers.

Fernando had changed himself into a rather short man. Benson was even a bit amused by the male sorcerer's height.

It never occurred to Benson that Fernando would dare to come here in person, to the Inquisition!

On their way, Benson did not pay much attention to the two sorcerers, as he was busy talking to the team leader to better get along with him.

The team leader was then told that the Predator had gone to the Executor's room. He accelerated his pace for arriving there late might piss off his superiors.

In the Executor's room, the Predator, who was wearing a set of black leather armor and shadow helmet, was sitting in the dark red armchair.

"They found Dark Storm?" he asked the Executor, who was wearing a set of silver armor.

"They are not here yet. I'm not sure. But Lion must have a reason asking you to come," said the Executor.

Lion was the codename for the night watcher team leader.

Sitting in the darkness, the Predator nodded and went back to waiting quietly.

The footsteps came. Someone knocked on the door.

"Come in." The Executor knew that it was Lion.

The gate opened slowly. The Predator's heart suddenly started beating very fast. He got his current status from countless slaughters, and he had just sensed the great danger and death coming.

"Stop!"

The Predator rushed to the door. His rich experience told him that only by interrupting this could he survive.

However, all he could see suddenly looked very pale, and the world had been deprived of all sounds.

Chapter 860: The Outraged Cardinal

860 The Outraged Cardinal

Time Stop! It was too late!

Before his brain came to a pause, the idea occurred to the Predator. But he had been turned into an insect in a piece of amber in this static world. He was now frozen by time in the air.

The whole world looked like an old painting drawn only in the color of gray, black, and white. Then, he saw that the colors were returning; gold, green, black, and red... and his body was able to move again.

Move?

The Predator could not figure this out? How could he see himself moving?

In fact, he thought that he would be lucky to survive the three to four rounds of attack during the timespan of Time Stop because of the many extraordinary items he had.

But why was he now watching his body falling onto the floor heavily? The colorful light burst out, but it failed to prevent his body from hitting the carpet and making the dull, banging sound.

How?

To his great shock, the Predator looked back and realized that he had turned transparent and was grabbed in the hand of the tall sorcerer.

His soul was pulled out?

Ninth-circle spell?

The Predator realized what was going on. Experienced as he was, although he did not understand what kind of spell it was, the Predator once heard about it and knew that it could pull out one's soul!

None of his extraordinary items could resist such a creepy spell!

That was the end!

He knew that he wasn't able to fight back anymore.

Douglas showed no mercy and no hesitation. The pale flame in his hand burned the Predator's soul and made him give out a blood-curdling scream. The Predator felt that there were countless fine needles in his body and kept churning!

Meanwhile, he saw divine light burst out on the Executer and helped him resist a spell. However, the short sorcerer had also gotten rid of Time Stop and then turned the Executer into a stone statue before the Executer could do anything with a single pointing!

Although Fernando was also affected by Time Stop, he had prepared in advance. Therefore, he took action much faster than Executer.

According to their plan, Douglas' Time Stop was primarily for the Executer, who was level eight. Meanwhile, Douglas would destroy one of his extraordinary items to weaken his magic resistance, while Fernando, after he recovered, would focus on attacking the Executer.

Knights and clerics did not have as abundant methods as sorcerers for keeping themselves alive. Therefore, Fernando was confident that he could kill the Executer within two to three spells!

The most challenging thing in the plan was that Douglas and Fernando had to trust each other without any reservation and had confidence in each other that they could both do their tasks. So far, they worked pretty well with each other, and Fernando started believing that Douglas was quite trustworthy.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

Five silver-black magic missiles flew out of Fernando's hand and hit the Executer, which was now a stone statue. The stone statue then cracked, and the gaps extended inward. Soon, the statue had collapsed to the ground, stirring and raising lots of dust.

It had only been two to three seconds since the door was pushed open, and two senior-ranks had been killed. One of them had his soul pulled out, and the other had been turned into a pile of rubble.

When sorcerers were prepared, they could be extremely horrific!

At this time, Benson had not even realized what just happened. He could only see the colorful light sparkling in front of him. Lion and the gatekeeper were still frozen to the spot by Douglas.

A dim light beam shot out from the tip of Douglas' finger and hit Benson. Instantly, all his spell effects had disappeared, and he could not cast any spells now.

“Antimagic Ray!”

Fernando looked around and roared, “Benson!”

He had abandoned the disguise, and his imposing manner was like the fiercest storm over the ocean.

Benson could not believe his eyes, and his heart was filled with fear and confusion. He kept murmuring, “I don’t... I don’t want to...”

Fernando would not even waste half a second at this time. He summoned flashes of lightning and wrapped Benson into a lightning ball.

When the lightning and sparks disappeared, Benson’s body, which had been burned black, hit the ground. Fernando purposefully kept Benson’s face intact so that those who came later could see the great shock and fear on Benson’s face.

At this time, the night watchers guarding the entire building finally noticed the fight through the divine circle.

“Attack!”

“Attack! Tell the Executer!”

“Report it to the Executer! Activate all the divine circles!”

“The Executer is under attack!”

The night watchers, interrogators, and executioners were all in a great panic and had no clue what they should do as they had never encountered this before. Following their experience, most of them chose to hide first, waiting for a chance to fight back. A few who were relatively calm were also anxiously seeking help as they could not get into contact with the Executer, who had full access to the divine circle.

“The Executer was assassinated! Go find the Predator!”

“The Predator is missing!”

“Who comes next after the Executer?!”

The chaos went on. The entire Inquisition failed to respond effectively after losing its leader. After a while, the Executer’s assistant finally recalled that it was he who had the access.

However, by this time, Douglas and Fernando had already left the Inquisition and were now standing in the air, holding the Predator and Benson’s bodies in their hands.

“Throw them to the entrance of the square,” said Fernando coldly, which still sounded like roaring.

The two bodies were thrown down to the ground like two sacks. Fernando moved his fingers in the air, and the Predator’s blood became the scarlet ink for him to write on the ground.

“Betrayers, die!”

“Predators, die!”

Meanwhile, in the cold rain, Douglas raised his hand, and four meteors in fire fiercely dropped from the sky and hit the two-storey building of the Inquisition.

BOOM!

A horrible explosion took place, and a powerful blast swept across the surroundings. The building as well as its underground constructions had mostly collapsed, and most of the night watchers were forever buried down there. Only a few of them survived.

Since the Inquisition was built underground, and it was separated by the divine circle, in the stormy night, when Douglas cast Time Stop and the spells, the red robe in the church did not notice it. Only when the Executer died did he finally feel something bad.

The red robe was shocked when he saw the meteors falling. For a second, he forgot what he should do. But he soon calmed down. He was going to activate the defense circles in the city, and at the same time, he was about to inform the Radiance Church.

The meteors flew across the sky and fell into the city. Hiding in the rain and darkness in the air, Lauren saw the meteors as the signal. A ring on his finger started releasing electric sparks, which had a strange connection to Fernando's magic circle.

Then the flashes of lightning in the air suddenly joined into one and hit the Inquisition building. Its light lit up the entire city.

Pa!

The thick lightning hit the light shield, which had just been activated. Countless electric snakes were wriggling, which made the functioning of the divine circle slow down by a few seconds.

Lauren didn't even look at the lightning but instantly flew away, heading for the place they previously agreed on. He was flying in the air as fast as he could, and eventually, he started flying lower and lower. In the end, he disappeared in the forest.

Meanwhile, Douglas and Fernando had disappeared as soon as the meteors were summoned.

The rain was still pouring heavily, erasing almost all their traces.

A minute later, another senior-rank in the city, Paphos, arrived at the Inquisition building. He was a radiant knight. Staring at the pit in the ground left by the destroyed Inquisition building, the look on his face kept changing. He was deeply shocked.

“Betrayers, die... Predators, die...”

Count Paphos murmured the words and talked to himself in low voice, “They’re surely crazy, those sorcerers. The Church is going to be outraged. The Church used me like a dog. I’d like to see how they respond to this!”

He took a deep breath and tried hard to control the impulse to laugh. It wasn’t bad being crazy sometimes.

The red robe then arrived. His face had turned pale with rage, as if Count Paphos owed him a hundred thousand Thale.

“Bloody Sorcerers! I’m gonna burn you all!” the red robe kept cursing.

Many nobles had also arrived. They saw the scene, but no one dared to say anything.

“What are you looking at?! Go and find the bloody sorcerers!” roared the red robe.

The nobles all looked down, for they were hiding their emotions in the darkness and pouring rain.

After two minutes, divine light soared high in the church, which was the waves from the transmission magic circle.

A black-haired young man flew out of the church. He was tall and strong, and he had dark blue eyes in which the light and radiance was like a flowing river. He was not wearing any armor, and there was a longsword in his hand.

The look on the red robe’s face slightly changed. He then flew to the man and said in awe, “Your Excellency Kritonia.”

“I’ll find them.” Kritonia looked up at the night sky, and somehow, the falling raindrops suddenly moved much more slowly.

...

When they met each other at the place that they previously agreed on, Lauren said in excitement, "We did it!"

"I didn't expect the Inquisition was on such a weak alert..." Douglas was quite surprised as well.

Fernando grinned, as he was in a very good mood. "The looks on those idiots' faces are gonna be so funny! Those stupid black-clawed dogs!"

Then he became more serious and said to Douglas, "We'll take you to the Union's headquarters."

"I heard that the Union has a damaged floating city?" asked Douglas out of curiosity.

Chapter 861: League, the Deputy Presiden

861 League, the Deputy Presiden

Fernando waved his hands and snorted, “We do, but it’s useless. It falls, so it’s a sheer failure. A failure which will only lead us to the wrong path!”

He obviously wasn’t a big fan of the legendary sorcerer who first built the floating city, as Fernando believed that the sorcerer was just bragging.

A floating city was the shared research object among the three Magic Empires. They tried to put themselves in a city flying in the air and looked down upon ordinary people like gods. However, creating such a city was extremely difficult, especially when it came to how to maintain the floating status. Countless sorcerers had tried.

In the past years, a few legendary sorcerers had claimed that they had successfully built a floating city, but so far, none of them survived. One was involved in the War of Dawn and was shot down by the Church and nobles, while others were quite problematic. The best one floated for more than a decade but finally still crashed.

Douglas had shown his power, so Lauren smiled and said, “We found its wreck. It’s called Allyn, you know, the pretty famous ‘City in the Sky’. But we don’t have the core magic circle structure, so we can’t fix it. It’s just our secret base right now.”

Douglas didn’t care, and he smiled mildly. “We learn things from failures, for they remind us of the mistakes and errors that could’ve been avoided. I’ve always been interested in floating and flying magic and trying to figure the principles out. I hope the Union can give me a chance to take a look.”

“No problem! We’ll talk to the deputy president!” Lauren was very confident.

Lauren knew that the Union only had one archmage who knew

Time Stop so far, and so, having an extra powerful archmage meant a lot to the Union. Also, proud as Fernando was, even he respected Douglas' talent in mathematics, so Lauren also believed that Douglas would become a leader of the Union in the future.

Douglas nodded. "Thanks. So where should we go now?"

"To go to the headquarters, we go to Rentato first." Lauren had a meaningful smile on his face.

Douglas was surprised. "Rentato? The city where Holm Parish is located?"

"Yes, also the capital of the kingdom." Lauren nodded and grinned.

.....

The evening glow of the setting sun was as red as blood. A coach arrived in Rentato before the city gate closed.

Driving through the streets smelling like fish, the coach stopped in front of an ordinary-looking hotel.

"Roasted Fish Hotel..." Douglas got off the coach and read the strange name, feeling a bit amused.

Fernando's voice sounded a bit sharp as he said, "He's good at making roasted fish and only knows how to roast a fish. I'd recommend you to have one, or he'd be pissed. He'll say you don't understand what good food is."

While speaking, Fernando directly jumped off the coach and stepped in a puddle.

After the rain, there were puddles everywhere in Rentato. But different from a small city, streets in Rentato were paved with rocks, so they still looked quite clean.

Seeing this, Douglas was a bit emotional. "Rentato was an important city across the strait to the empire, and the empire indeed had a good job here, but it's now taken by the Church..."

He was born in Antiffler, and he believed that he was from Sylvanas Magic Empire.

“We’ll be back one day!” said Fernando in a low but confident voice.

Lauren, who was the coachman, looked back and said, “Don’t just stand here like statues. Go in there first.”

On their way, he found that Douglas was in fact quite easygoing, for he wasn’t as proud as an archmage usually could be. The only thing was that Douglas kept asking questions, but this was not a big deal.

The hotel was rather small and old. Few tables and few guests were in the lobby.

Behind the counter stood a gray-haired man, who was wiping cups attentively.

“You can’t even see your own fingers! Light the candles!” Fernando said to the hotel owner loudly, “Among all your shortcomings, being cheap is the nastiest one!”

It was already evening. The windows of the hotel were rather narrow. Darkness had seized this place.

The hotel owner looked up. He had a square face, and his dull-green left eye looked completely dead and creepy.

“Being cheap is an attitude toward life that you’ll never understand, you are such a little puppy made of Flame Gel,” the hotel owner, whose right eye was in the color of jade-green and looked very mysterious, said in return.

Fernando didn’t care. He turned around and said to Douglas, “Old Green, the owner of the place, an old knight. His left eye is the result of a failure to melt bloodline.”

In this hotel, there was no taboo on talking about magic or bloodline. The few guests in the lobby completely ignored Fernando’s voice and enjoyed their liquor and fish as if nothing happened.

Fernando pointed at Douglas. "You can call him Douglas. He's a guest from the other side of the strait. He hopes to join us, and he has passed my test. This is the detailed information for League."

He threw a piece of dark-yellow parchment at Old Green.

Old Green was still wiping the cups and mugs, but the speed at which the piece of parchment flying toward him became lower and lower as if it had fallen into a marsh.

Old Green put down a mug on the parchment on the counter and said without any facial expressions, "Young lad, you want honey-roasted fish? This is the best cuisine in the entire Rentato, Great Holm, and even along the strait! You'll regret it if you say no!"

He was pretty eager.

Douglas was warned earlier by Fernando, so he smiled and said, "I'd love to."

"Good, lad. Not many young men know how to appreciate good food now," said Old Green meaningfully before he walked to the kitchen.

"He's a knight from an experiment previously conducted by Fernando's teacher. He has a close relationship with the Hoffenberg family. After the fall of his teacher, Old Green didn't want to surrender to the Church, so he opened this hotel in Rentato as a secret station for the Union." Lauren hurriedly came and added the information for Douglas after he pulled the horses into the stable. "Old Green is gonna report the mission to League, our deputy president. They have to discuss it before you enter the headquarters. But don't worry. There's no way that they will reject you. You'll hear the good news tomorrow."

"Thanks." Douglas smiled and nodded. "I'm actually not in a hurry. Although I'm very interested in floating and flying, I'm still trying to figure out many things."

Fernando looked at Douglas with his scarlet eyes and asked hurriedly, "What else are you working on?"

On their way, Fernando had been discussing with Douglas mainly about mathematics. Although he seemed to despise Douglas' study, he valued Douglas' talent a lot. Fernando wished to know more about Douglas' research interest and hear more inspiring and profound insights.

"Something trivial," said Douglas, who had no intention to keep these as secrets. He pulled out a chair and sat down with Fernando. They started to have a long conversation on various research topics.

The conversation went on for hours. When it was already completely dark outside, Fernando still felt reluctant to leave. They didn't eat the honey-roasted fish, which made Old Green quite unhappy.

When it was midnight, Fernando finally went back to his room to get some sleep, but his mind was full of questions. Douglas entered his room and saw a few stars among the clouds. He suddenly felt a strange but familiar peace.

He should be able to settle down for a while and concentrate on his studies.

He thought so to himself.

.....

When the sky was barely bright, Douglas heard the familiar footsteps that came from Lauren. Lauren knocked on his door.

"Douglas, the deputy president is here. He's an archmage." Lauren was excited about how much Douglas was valued by the Union.

Douglas felt a bit excited as well. "Lauren, please lead me to see the deputy president."

Lauren led Douglas to the secret chamber on the first floor of the hotel's basement. Douglas then saw an old man wearing a black, soft hat. He had black hair and blue eyes. The old man's facial features were sharp, and his nose was slightly hooked. The blue eyes were calm but deep, for lots of secrets were hiding in them.

“Welcome, Douglas,” said League, who was wearing a high-collar coat that was popular in Rentato. He looked like an old and decent noble.

Douglas greeted, “My pleasure, Mr. League.”

Lauren looked around and said, “Fernando’s not here? I’ll go and find him.”

“Don’t bother. I’m here to see Douglas.” League shook his head slowly. “Douglas, you’ve proved yourself by what you did to the Inquisition with Fernando. But your action has brought us huge trouble. Led by Heart of Time, the clerics, night watchers, and nobles have killed more than thirty sorcerers in the Union.”

“The action was to prove to the nobles our true value! I think the killed sorcerers were spotted by the Church a long time ago, but the Church just didn’t take any actions earlier!” Lauren defended loudly.

League took a gloomy glance at Lauren and cut him off, “This isn’t your business.”

Then he turned back to Douglas. “So, although the Union has granted your application for joining, we have decided to give you some punishment. You’ll be sent to Allyn for three years to study the wreck. If you make no mistakes there, three years later, you’ll become the deputy president of the Union!”

Douglas was a bit amused. The deputy president first suppressed him and then threw some hope at him. But Douglas didn’t care. The most important thing was that he could go and study Allyn, the wreck of the floating city.

“I’m okay with it.” Douglas nodded slightly.

Lauren tried to say something, but he failed. His face flushed a bit.

League finally smiled. “Hope you can figure out how to make it fly again.”

Douglas and Lauren left the basement. On their way back, they saw

Fernando walking to them furiously.

Chapter 862: The Meeting Destined to Happen

862 The Meeting Destined to Happen

Lauren said, somewhat a little silly, “Fernando, you weren’t here, Mr. League...”

Fernando directly ignored him and rushed past Lauren and Douglas like a furious cluster of storms. His red eyes opened big. Obviously, he was outraged.

Douglas slightly frowned but soon unknotted his eyebrows. He watched Fernando rushing downstairs to the secret chamber.

“Fernando!” Lauren finally realized, and he hurriedly yelled, “Don’t argue with Mr. League!”

Bang!

Fernando slammed the door of the secret chamber shut and kept the conversation within.

“What shall we do? Fernando will piss off Mr. League!” Lauren asked Douglas for help. Only Douglas, who carried both good manners and power, could stop this argument right now.

Douglas nodded. “If anything goes wrong, I’ll stop it. But expressing himself is Fernando’s right.”

“But he’s challenging the deputy president!” Lauren could not understand Douglas’ attitude. In Lauren’s eyes, Douglas was very powerful, knowledgeable, and especially talented in mathematics, but Douglas’ way of thinking could be quite strange. Douglas was a big fan of asking why, and some of his opinions were quite hard for him to accept. For example, hierarchy, a system which was respected and followed by all sorcerers, seemed to be quite insignificant to Douglas.

Douglas was just smiling but said nothing. At this time, they heard

Fernando's roaring from the secret chamber. The door wasn't enough to keep his fury within. And it was louder and louder, which made Lauren start feeling concerned that the walls might collapse at any time.

He listened carefully, trying to figure out what Fernando was saying. At this time, the door of the secret chamber was pushed open fiercely, and League walked out. His face looked rather unhappy as he walked on the stairs.

"I'm the branch president in Paphos County, so I have the right! I don't need you, old man!" Fernando chased League out and yelled.

League stopped walking and turned around. His voice was as cold as ice as he said, "You're no more."

"So what? When I made the decision, I still was!" Fernando looked right into League's eyes angrily.

"Crazy dog..." League murmured and then kept walking.

Fernando waved his arms and yelled, "You old antique! Even if I'm wrong, this has nothing to do with Douglas! He was only obeying my words! He knew nothing from the headquarters!"

Lauren was shocked as he watched them arguing. Although he knew Fernando's bad temper, it never occurred to him that Fernando would yell at the deputy president! There were only three deputy presidents in the Union, and even the president had to act quite politely to them!

He was about to stop them, but as they kept arguing, Lauren realized Fernando's intention. He wasn't arguing with League for himself, as he had already been mentally prepared for the punishment when he proposed; instead, he was arguing for Douglas, for he did not understand why Douglas should be responsible for this.

At this time, League walked past Douglas. He caught his breath and then said, "Douglas, I forgot to tell you. As a ninth-circle archmage, you're qualified to attend the core meeting that is to be held five days later. So you won't be heading for Allyn until next week."

"Sure," Douglas said. He did not ask anything else and just nodded politely.

"You old thing! If you have guts, you just kick Douglas out right now! Tons of organizations want to have an archmage!" Fernando wouldn't stop.

Those legendary sorcerers were busy protecting themselves, so a ninth-circle archmage should be considered as a top force for every organization, except for Cabin of Palmeira, which was a legendary group. So far, the entire Union of Sorcerers only had two ninth circles. One of them was the president, Arnold, and the other was League. The two deputy presidents were only senior-ranks working on hitting the eighth circle.

League snorted, unwilling to argue with Fernando. He hurriedly walked past Lauren and headed for Old Green's room.

"You old man! You're still thinking about your power and resources when facing such great danger! I joined the Union because of the concept you promoted—to push aside suspicion and bias and accept all groups and sorcerers! Shame on you! A senior-rank sorcerer can go anywhere!" Fernando roared at League's back.

Lauren had cold sweat on his back. He wondered if Fernando had ever worried about a possible vengeance on himself in the future if he kept acting like this.

He would pretend that he never heard such words from Fernando!

League paused a bit, and then he accelerated his pace and disappeared around the corner.

"Fernando, how could you talk like that?" Lauren was rather anxious. "He can just give you a seemingly simple but actually dangerous mission!"

"Unless he can kill me with one strike, or I'll let him know how dangerous a storm can be!" Fernando snorted, "Also, he doesn't get along that well with the president."

Lauren was shocked. He didn't expect that there was a reason behind his friend's angry roaring. Then was the roaring real? Or he was just pretending?

"No wonder you're not afraid of Mr. League..." Lauren murmured.

Fernando paused a bit and said, "This has nothing to do with fear. If it had been the president standing in front of me, I'd have done the same!"

Alright, he was still that Fernando Lauren knew. Lauren felt a bit relaxed, but also a bit sad.

Fernando took a deep breath and combed his hair with his hand. "In such an era, we might die anytime because of the black-clawed dogs or clerics. So we mustn't be afraid of death, as death is our destiny and doomed ending. And if we are not afraid of death, why should we be afraid of a president or deputy president?"

Douglas had been listening to their conversation quietly. At this time, he smiled and said, "Thanks."

"I just don't like how they treat people unfairly!" Fernando looked up at the mottled ceiling.

.....

In the next three days, while Lauren was busy with the tasks allocated to him as a liaison, Douglas and Fernando stayed idle.

Douglas and Fernando, however, didn't mind it. They even enjoyed themselves in the three days that they kept talking and exchanging ideas. And they both agreed that the current magic system did have its fatal problems, which were impossible to be fixed.

Although Fernando spent most of the time listening to and learning from Douglas, his talent in mathematics and magic made his comments rather inspiring to Douglas. Therefore, Douglas was not only teaching Fernando. Together, they had a pretty good time.

Even though it was almost evening, they were still working on a math problem. It was already very dim in the hotel lobby. However, both of them had cast a spell on their eyes so that they could see through complete darkness. They had a honey roasted fish beside them, but the fish was not their focus at all.

A middle-rank sorcerer stayed beside them to listen to their conversation out of curiosity, but the sorcerer soon walked away, feeling rather dizzy.

At this time, the half-closed gate of the hotel was pushed open, and the cool evening breeze had instantly driven away the humid and warm air in the lobby.

“Green, two roasted fish!” The hoarse and deep voice came in first before the person showed himself.

Coming back after finishing his mission, Lauren just sat down. He believed that Fernando now finally had a competitor in terms of roaring.

Douglas and Fernando looked up at the same time because they had sensed that the man was a knight. Was he Green’s friend?

Because of Green, many knights liked coming here, which made the sorcerers here feel quite insecure, but this had also effectively helped them hide from the Church’s search. Also, Green would pick his guests. If a knight was rather hostile to sorcerers or sensitive to topics related to magic, he would find an excuse to get angry and kick the knight out of the hotel forever. If there was a knight in the hotel, Old Green would put a secret sign outside of the hotel so that the sorcerers coming in could be prepared. When Fernando and Douglas arrived, there was no knight in the hotel.

No one would ever expect that a gathering place for knights was in fact a secret liaison station for sorcerers!

Bang!

Hearing the voice, the wood mug that Green was wiping fell from his hands onto the counter.

He stared at the entrance, and his dead green eye released circles of waves that could affect the physical surroundings!

“What brings you here?” asked Old Green.

Meanwhile, he took a warning glance at Douglas and Fernando. They understood immediately and hid their draft paper sheets.

“You want neither title nor treasure. All you want is such a hotel selling honey-roasted fish? Are you going to give up your title as a knight, Fatal Left Eye?” A tall and strong man, who was wearing a tight gray knight suit, walked in. His eyebrows were thick, and his nose was rather high. He looked quite young, but if one took a closer look, the fine wrinkles would be spotted. Only his blue eyes were full of energy, like a teenage boy’s cheerful eyes.

Following him was a young girl, about eleven or twelve years old. She had a pretty face but pretended to be rather serious.

She had a tidy fringe of hair on her forehead, which made her look like a delicate doll. The heavy sword she was carrying was even taller than herself. Right now, she was struggling with dragging the sword with her.

Her eyes were also very impressive. She had silver-gray eyes, and they were cold and sharp.

“So, she is?” asked Old Green confusedly.

The man whose blue eyes looked rather young smiled. “I’m her teacher now, training her to be a knight.”

The little girl squared her shoulder a bit. But her right foot tripped over her left foot, and she then had a bad fall.

“Haha, she can’t even walk. How can she be a squire?” Fernando grinned and commented.

The girl was still dragging the heavy sword. On the ground, she looked up, and her nice-looking eyebrows furrowed angrily. “No one knows how to walk before they learn it!”

Umm? Fernando didn’t get it immediately.

“So she is the descendant of ...” The look on Old Green’s face had become quite strange. It looked both serious and funny.

The man with beautiful eyes smiled. “Yes, I didn’t expect this at all.”

He then turned and said to the young girl, “Alright, slowly get up, Hathaway. You’ll become strong one day.”

Chapter 863: Everyone Has Something They Are Confident In

863 Everyone Has Something They Are Confident In

“Yes!” The little girl named Hathaway wriggled and tried to get back on her feet, but she still did not let go of the giant sword in her hands, as if it were the most important thing for her today. Therefore, it was impossible for her to stand up with only her elbows. After she finally lifted herself from the ground, she fell down again.

Again and again, Hathaway failed to get up, and her knight teacher simply watched without saying anything, as if he were telling her that she could count on nobody else except for herself to become a knight. Gradually, Hathaway’s cold but beautiful eyes seemed to be covered in mist, but she bit her red lips and furrowed her eyebrows hard, not letting out any sound of pain or distress.

Even Old Green found it unbearable to keep watching. He said in a coarse voice, “Sharp...”

Hardly had he called the man when Douglas, who had been observing quietly, opened his mouth and said gently, “Sometimes, you drop things temporarily to better hold them in the future. Do not impose too much pressure on yourself.”

Hathaway raised her head and stared at Douglas with her misty gray eyes, as if she were considering what he meant.

Fernando chuckled. “If you cling to your giant sword, of course you can never get back on your feet. I’ve never seen any kid as silly as you!”

“This is a mission!” Hathaway spewed out her words one after another. She was too angry and did not know how to speak logically yet.

Fernando said, not in a good mood, “Throw the sword on the ground and pick it up again after you stand up. Otherwise, with your body coordination, it's impossible for you to get back on your feet!"

He had seen Hathaway's real problem but pointed it out in the bluntest way. In the meantime, he added to himself, "Your language ability also needs improvement!"

Hathaway's face turned dim and grim again. Nothing could be seen except indifference and stubbornness. Also, she did not follow the subtle suggestion behind Fernando's mockery but kept on trying. She supported herself and fell again and again. Finally, after countless failures, she sat up on her knees and raised the giant sword, slowly rising to her feet while relying on it.

Looking at that scene, Old Green seemed excited. "Besides the color of his eyes, she has the determination in his blood!"

"Yes. Otherwise, I wouldn't have accepted the mission, even though it was given by that big shot in person." Her knight teacher who was called Sharp smiled in consolation and mixed feelings. His blue eyes were as peaceful as a windless ocean.

Hathaway's little face had been contaminated by the dirt, and her hair turned messy. Holding the giant sword, she turned her head and looked at Fernando. She did not say anything or make a snort, but her indifferent eyes alone were enough to darken Fernando's face. He mumbled, "There's a chance to succeed by trying repetitively when it comes to such little things. If it were anything else, such an idiotic approach would've caused a person to be killed in the first few attempts. It's impossible to start all over again."

Her face unchanged, Hathaway turned to Douglas and bowed in respect. "Thank you."

Her voice was both gentle and chilly.

"Determination is a great quality." Douglas praised her before he continued, "However, you need to learn to recognize your mistakes. Persistence does not mean that you have to persist in mistakes. You should always think and handle problems based on facts."

Hathaway nodded her head, half confused. She stumbled to her teacher with the giant sword.

Sharp smiled and said to Old Green, "I'm surprised to see such a philosopher in your place. I've only heard similar things from the cardinal theologians. However, he said the opposite, claiming that persistence means persisting in the truth, and that the truth is the Lord's teaching."

In the past, due to the long lives of many intelligent creatures, they had the spare time to consider the metaphysical questions, and that was how philosophy was born. Then, many common scholars joined them, not giving up thinking just because their life spans were short. They were known as philosophers or thinkers. However, as the War of Dawn went on and the Church dominated the world, the philosophers that they disliked were going extinct.

"As a matter of fact, everyone thinks as long as he lives. That is, if he is not an inferior creature," Fernando interrupted again with his mean mouth.

Sharp turned around and looked at him; the smile on his face was suddenly gone. The atmosphere in the lobby of the small hotel was suddenly frozen, and the sound of seawater surging vaguely came out. Hathaway's face suddenly softened, as if she were looking forward to what might happen next.

"Cough." Old Green coughed and broke the silence. "Sharp, don't be petty with kids. He's always like this. It's nothing personal."

Although Fernando could not reveal his vibe as a senior-rank sorcerer, he still glared back at Sharp impolitely without backing off.

"Hahaha, hahaha." Sharp suddenly burst into laughter. "Interesting. He's very like me when I was young. I used to despise and mock other people; pigheaded and unlikable."

Fernando sniffed and turned around, ignoring the guy. He did not sense anything similar between them.

Sharp sat on a high chair before the wood counter, and Old Green poured him a glass of hard liquor without him saying anything.

“Hu! Only you still have this recipe! It’s been a long time since I tasted such hard liquor!” Sharp drank and chuckled. “I became civilized after I was almost beaten to death by him several times.”

It seemed that he was really of a mind to teach Fernando a lesson just now.

Fernando sniffed but was not mean again, because he knew very well that it was best not to expose his magic capabilities in Rentato unless he had absolute confidence. Otherwise, both himself and his partner might be killed!

Sharp finished the glass of liquor and turned to the little girl, Hathaway. “You can find a seat and wait for your roasted fish with honey. Well, you may put down the giant sword now.”

Hathaway nodded and put the sword on the table. Then, she pulled a chair as deftly as a deer and sat down, before she took out a blue-covered book from her magic pouch.

Turning the pages, she began to read carefully. The indifference on her face was gradually gone, and she curled her lips and frowned now and then.

It enlivened her and made her more like a regular quiet kid of her age instead of a unique one a moment ago.

“Chronicles of Antiffler?” With a pair of sharp eyes, Fernando couldn’t help but read the title of Hathaway’s book. “You’ll get dumber and dumber if you read such kind of books at such a young age.”

Hathaway raised her head and looked at him. Then, without saying anything, she was buried in the book again.

Douglas was amused by that, finding it impossible to understand Fernando’s behavior.

Lauren chuckled and sat next to Douglas. He said in a low voice,

“Do you feel that it is unlike Fernando? Actually, he has always been like this. He’s mean and sarcastic and impatient when it comes to important issues, but he also likes playing with kids and making inappropriate jokes with other people. You’ll understand it better after you get to know him.”

He completely ignored Fernando’s glare.

“It means that he has a young state of mind.” Douglas chuckled. “However, I think kids are better to be encouraged...”

Lauren went on to say with a low voice, “Fernando used to have a sister who ‘accidentally’ died at twelve. So, he has always been fond of little kids, although he never admits it and would rather tease them...”

Pa.

Fernando patted the table hard and interrupted Lauren’s betrayal.

“Hehe.” Sharp seemed to have perfect hearing although he was drinking nonstop. He chuckled in time, suggesting that he heard everything.

Hathaway turned the pages much more slowly, as if she heard Lauren’s words too. Her tightened face was greatly relaxed.

Lauren smiled in satisfaction. It was exactly what he hoped. He hoped that the two parties wouldn’t burst into a fight, and their identities as sorcerers would not be exposed.

Fernando stared at Lauren without blinking, as if he were considering how to deal with the guy tonight.

After reading Chronicles of Antiffler for a while, Hathaway put it back and took out another thick book with a black power, several sheaves of paper, a quill, and a delicate bottle of ink.

Opening the book, Hathaway wrote and drew attentively, emanating the most eye-catching glow of confidence, which was exactly what she lacked most previously!

“Basics of Mathematics...” Fernando saw the title on it.

He was not surprised. Mathematics was the only magic-related knowledge that the Church allowed to learn in public. It was because some nobles wanted to make sure that they were not deceived by their accountants. But of course, most nobles were still proud of their inability to calculate.

Douglas could also see clearly in the dimness. He smiled. “As a matter of fact, there are simpler ways.”

He was too delighted to control himself.

“Really?” Hathaway pursued bluntly, as if she found it hard to believe.

Now that he already said it, Douglas did not back off. He walked to her and sat down. Picking up the quill, he offered her another solution that was creative and convenient.

Hathaway stared at the paper before her in a daze. After a dozen seconds, her indifferent silver eyes were revitalized, and she nodded affirmatively. “It’s real.”

As she spoke, she repeated the method and considered it for a while. Then, she quickly turned the book to a certain page and pushed the book to Douglas. Her face was still nonchalant, but she said with expectations in her eyes, “What about this one?”

Douglas read it. Before he said anything, Fernando, who had approached at some point, already mocked, “You don’t know how to solve such a simple question?”

He introduced the solution quickly.

Hathaway furrowed her beautiful eyebrows first, but after her calculation, her eyebrows gradually relaxed. Then, she quickly turned the book to another page. Without saying anything, she simply looked at Douglas and Fernando.

Chapter 864: A Difficult Mission

864 A “Difficult” Mission

Although the mathematical knowledge that Hathaway was learning was already sophisticated enough for children of her age, it was not really tricky for either Douglas or Fernando. So, Hathaway turned the pages and pointed at the questions on it with her narrow finger without saying a word, waiting for the standard, simple answers. She was not disappointed once.

Sharp, her knight teacher who was enjoying the roasted fish with honey and the hard liquor, was gradually attracted by the situation on this side. He forgot to chat with Old Green anymore. Frowning, he observed Douglas and Fernando carefully.

Perhaps because of her excitement, Hathaway’s face was redder than before. After a long time, she finally closed her books and said in a low voice, “Thank you.”

Fernando was about to mock her when Sharp suddenly put down his glass and stood up from the high chair. He chuckled. “Old Green, I did not know that your guest was not only a philosopher but also a mathematician. I think he is even more knowledgeable than the court teachers...”

His words were directed at Old Green, but his blue eyes were focused on Douglas and Fernando.

Old Green picked up Sharp’s glass and washed it in the sink while he mumbled, “What’s wrong with that? Most guys who are good at mathematics are philosophers to some extent.”

“Yes. Mathematics is the ultimate representation of philosophy.” Douglas agreed with Old Green.

Fernando, on the other hand, sniffed and turned his head, showing that he was unwilling to talk to the barbarian.

Sharp chuckled. Instead of staring at Douglas and Fernando, he strolled to Hathaway and watched her eat the roasted fish, which was getting cold. "Hathaway, how does the roast fish taste?"

"Not bad." Hathaway was taciturn even though he was her knight teacher.

"We need to leave after you taste it. You have to have dinner at home. I cannot let them know that I allow you to eat random food," Sharp said with a smile.

Hathaway took off the handkerchief on the left side of her knight suit and wiped her lips gently. Then, she nodded her head.

"Alright."

"Hold your sword well and never drop it easily, but remember not to let it affect you. The life of a knight lies in their creed, their spirit, and their will, not in their sword." Sharp finally taught Hathaway something about what happened earlier.

Holding the enormous sword that was even taller than herself, Hathaway frowned, as if she still did not agree with the theory. However, instead of arguing, she simply followed Sharp out of the hotel thoughtfully.

The moment she got out of the door, she suddenly turned around. Her face was still expressionless, but her silver eyes seemed gentler than before. Then, she nodded at Douglas and Fernando, as if she was thanking them for their mathematical guidance again.

After they were far away, Fernando said, "Silver pupils and cold eyes. She must be a descendant of the Hoffenberg family, isn't she? What's her relationship with the Sword of Truth?"

He looked at Old Green, waiting for his answer.

The Sword of Truth was the title for Williamson Hoffenberg, who was a legend even more powerful than "Heart of Time" Kritonia, and a knight who rose against the tyranny of the Magic Empire earliest with the Saint Truth. Therefore, the God of Truth had blessed him with a legendary longsword that matched his blood power. It was known as the "Sword of Truth".

“You don’t need to know,” Old Green replied without raising his eyes.

Fernando sniffed. “It’s very easy to investigate. Not everybody thinks that it is a secret like you do.”

Old Green turned a deaf ear to his mockery and focused on wiping the glass.

...

The next morning, Fernando knocked on Douglas’ door. He had new ideas about a certain magic problem after he woke up and came to talk with Douglas in excitement.

“I admit that there were some minor mistakes in my opinion yesterday...” The moment the door was opened, Fernando said sincerely, but he saw somebody else other than Douglas in the room. “Deputy, why are you here?”

Seated in the chair before the desk was Deputy President League, who had been pissed off by him and stormed off a few days ago!

“Am I not allowed to be here?” League touched his hawk nose and asked gloomily.

Fernando chuckled. He was about to mock League’s thick face when Douglas said, “League is here to give me a mission.”

“A mission? What mission requires a ninth-circle archmage? Study Allyn?” Fernando looked serious.

Douglas said peacefully, “I’m asked to become Hathaway’s mathematics teacher in private and measure her magic gifts. If possible, I will direct her to embark on the path of magic.”

“Is her place high in the Hoffenberg family?” Fernando knew the Union’s strategy to attract nobles.

“Her father was Ludwig, the youngest and most loved child of the Sword of Truth, as well as the knight who was likely to become the second legend of the Hoffenberg family. It’s a pity that he died by accident in a certain relic. So, the Sword of Truth has shifted his love to Ludwig's only daughter, Hathaway. He loves her so much that he doesn't care that she lacks knight talents at all." League introduced the situation roughly. After all, Fernando was involved in the "lesson" yesterday too.

Fernando sniffed. "Why didn't you ask me to do that? I think I'll be a great teacher."

He was just saying it. He never really thought of teaching any student right now.

"You? Hehe," League replied without a smile.

Douglas also shook his head faintly. He did not think that the impatient and mean Fernando could be a good teacher.

Fernando snorted. Dissatisfied with their attitudes, he said, "Sharp may be the gold knight. If he recognizes us, the whole Union may be destroyed. Also, the Sword of Truth is a devout believer. I doubt that he will support us even if Hathaway walks on the path of magic."

"A devout believer is always contradictory to a qualified king. It appears to me that the Sword of Truth is more and more like the latter," League said thoughtfully and walked out of the door.

After a brief stun, Fernando said after the guy left, "He's not as stupid as I thought..."

...

The best breakfast of the "Roasted Fish Hotel" was a piece of white bread, a cluster of butter, and a roasted fish. Fernando complained that the menu never changed, but he still devoured the food in the meantime. He always had a great appetite.

After swallowing some of the food, Fernando finally had the energy to ask, "How do you plan to become Hathaway's private mathematics teacher? Since she is so important, I don't believe that Sharp, the 'Blue Demon', will allow her to spend time with a stranger and walk on the path of magic."

He had already figured out Sharp's identity. The man was "Blue Grace", a level-nine gold knight and the deputy captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights. However, he was known as "Blue Demon" among the sorcerers for killing too many of them.

"I need to meet Hathaway first." Douglas smiled after he swallowed the food gracefully. "I don't know the routine of Sharp and her yet, so I cannot make any plan."

Fernando poured ale into his mouth. "You are not as reckless as I thought."

At this moment, the half-closed hotel door was knocked on, and Hathaway, dressed like a little princess, walked in with a blue-covered book. Behind her, Sharp followed with a vague smile.

Hathaway ran to Douglas and Fernando's "table" quickly.

"Same hand and foot..." Fernando was as mean as before.

Hathaway subconsciously slowed down. She reached them, put the book on the table, and turned to a page that she folded before.

She pointed at one of the questions and stared at Douglas and Fernando with her silver eyes, not saying a word.

"About this question..." Fernando opened his mouth first and exchanged a glance with Douglas. Look, you don't need to figure out a way to meet Hathaway. She has brought herself to you!

Sharp asked for a glass of hard liquor from Old Green. Enjoying the drink, he watched the teaching and learning.

The whole morning, Douglas and Fernando answered Hathaway's questions dutifully. She was no longer restrained by the book but dug much deeper. Of course, those questions were not enough to puzzle Douglas and Fernando.

When it was almost noon, Hathaway put back her book, paper, quill, and ink bottle. She thanked them courteously as if they were her real teachers.

"I'll stay here for another month. Feel free to ask questions if you have any. I've rarely seen any child so passionate about mathematics." When they bid each other farewell, Douglas said intentionally.

Hathaway nodded, indicating that she got it.

Sharp, on the other hand, laughed. "Why don't you work as Hathaway's home teacher? I think it will be better than any of your previous jobs."

Instead of waiting for Douglas to answer, he turned around and left as if it were a joke.

After seeing them off, Fernando chuckled. "It's easier than I think. She truly loves mathematics!"

Douglas looked at the corner where Sharp and Hathaway disappeared, deep in thought, not responding to Fernando's comment.

Then, the two of them returned to Douglas' room to continue their communication and learning. They never left the room again except for lunch and dinner.

Fernando did not say goodbye until it was late at night. Douglas finally rubbed his temples in exhaustion and looked at the starry sky out of the window. Even though he was already an archmage, the thinking and communication of such a high intensity were still too much for him.

Looking at the glittering stars in the night sky, Douglas said in a low voice, "It seems that tomorrow will be another sunny day..."

Suddenly, all the stars were covered in hazy blueness as if they were the reflections in an ocean. Then, the noise of a surging tide came from the sky. The ocean was poured over, and a flood descended from the sky!

Douglas reacted quickly enough. An enormous transparent palm suddenly appeared before him and blocked the tide. Then, rings of silver lightning rose from the surface of his body and rushed into the raging ocean.

In the meantime, Douglas had disappeared.

Suddenly, the blue ocean ebbed like an illusion, and Sharp's chuckle came from all directions.

"You are indeed a sorcerer..."

Chapter 865: A Lesson

865 A Lesson

The voice was distant and unpredictable, making it impossible to locate Sharp. In the hotel, Fernando and the other sorcerers who had been alarmed by the collision just now flashed and disappeared.

“Find a way to escape. We’ll meet in Lake Ramrouge!” The moment Douglas appeared in a corner, Fernando’s telepathic bond already stretched over carefully and quickly and informed him of the rendezvous after they split up.

It was not because he was scared of “Blue Grace” Sharp. Now that Douglas, a ninth-circle archmage, was here, he believed that it was possible for them to kill the enemy if they joined their hands. After all, Douglas knew “Time Stop” and was an excellent archmage, and he was capable of many senior-rank unusual spells himself, which could weaken and limit the enemy.

However, they were in Rentato, which was watched over by many experts. Any great noise would have caught attention. If either of the two persons in the Nekso Palace or the Radiance Church came, they wouldn’t make it out alive at all. The “Sword of Truth” Williamson Hoffenberg had gone to the frontline in Aalto at the behest of the Church, and it was Kritonia, the “Heart of Time”, who was guarding the Nekso Palace. It was a name that caused the legendary sorcerers to tremble!

Ever since he distinguished himself, he had followed Williamson Hoffenberg as a young, strong, and vigorous man, killing powerful sorcerers, elves, vampires, demons, and devils one after another and paving a path to legendary with their bodies and blood. Later, he even killed Osseris, a legendary sorcerer known as “Master of Shadows”, and the Faceless, a dark legendary knight. He rose to level two of legendary on their skulls, intimidating all his enemies!

One of the battles happened no more than ten years after he became a legendary knight. In a regular operation, he happened upon Osseris, the Master of Shadows and the Sylvanas Magic Empire's governor in Holm.

He was a powerful sorcerer who had lived at least four thousand years. He was so close to level three of legendary but never made the breakthrough. As a result, he was forced to leave Antiffler and replace Viken, the King of Calamities, as the governor of Holm. Later, he was ambushed by Hoffenberg, the Sword of Truth and a saint in the War of Dawn. He was heavily wounded and went missing.

Therefore, the Sylvanas Magic Empire's territory on this side of the Storm Strait lost the leadership. The few lesser legendary sorcerers did not obey each other. Separated and attacked by the Church and the noble knights, they were killed one after another and contributed to the glory of the Sword of Truth, making him one of the nine level-three legendary knights.

However, after Holm fell apart and the new-generation noble knights grew up, Osseris was back to life and ran into Kritonia.

The aftermath of the battle destroyed most eyewitnesses. According to the few survivors, after the Heart of Time destroyed the phylactery of the Master of Shadows, he announced proudly, "You are too old. Both your soul and your magic are rotten..."

It also answered the confusion of some sorcerers. Generally speaking, sorcerers could suppress knights of the same level. It had never been known that a legendary knight could kill a legendary sorcerer that was above their level in a duel. At first, the sorcerers suspected that it was because the Master of Shadows hadn't completely recovered from the fatal wounds. Right now, they had an even more convincing reason.

Yes. Osseris was simply too old. He was close to the limits of his life. Even his soul had started to decay. Of course, the intensity of his spiritual power had plummeted!

Although it made the sorcerers feel better, they were forced to take the problem seriously, which was that not only was the Master of Shadows old, but even the Magic Empire seemed antiquated and decayed.

During the hundreds of years of war, many young grand cardinals and legendary knights had been born. Many of them were as excellent as “Heart of Time”, such as Rudolf, the Ruling Angel, and the few grand cardinals before they became the pope. In the Magic Empire, a few new legendary sorcerers had appeared. The air of aging and decaying could be clearly sensed.

As a matter of fact, the speed of advancement was the same as before the War of Dawn. However, nobody cared about the slow advancement during peacetime since legendary sorcerers lived long enough. Right now, many people compared the situation to the sunset, which would inevitably disappear and sink into the darkness despite its lingering splendor at present.

Many old sorcerers even sighed. “The old will eventually be replaced by the young. That is the destiny that cannot be reversed. In front of the young and vigorous Saint Truth and nobles, the sorcerers and the Magic Empires are like rotten bodies that will collapse under the first poke.”

For some reason, the thoughts flashed in Douglas’ heart quickly, making him feel unusually sad. Then, he controlled his feelings and planned to jump away from Sharp’s aim with the shadow and help other sorcerers to escape.

“You go first! Don’t mind them!” Old Green suddenly floated in midair and blocked the falling water drops.

His frozen and lifeless left eye became deep, as if a bottomless hole that could absorb all lives was hidden inside.

Douglas knew exactly what Old Green meant. The other sorcerers who hadn’t even reached the senior rank could be sacrificed, but if he, a ninth-circle archmage, was killed, there would be no hope for the renaissance of the Magic Empire. However, he still hesitated for a moment. He also sensed that the previous battle did not catch the attention of the church nearby.

In midair, Sharp's voice came in like the sound of running water. "I've blocked the area before I attacked. Nobody will sense anything. There's something I would like to say to you."

Then, he suddenly appeared in the lobby of the hotel. He walked into the bar and poured himself a glass of hard liquor.

Douglas did not attack. Old Green, Fernando, and he looked at each other as they covered the other people who were leaving. They were filled with intense surprise as well as vague hope.

Sharp had voluntarily revealed the matter and kept it a secret from the Church. Was he planning to cooperate with the Union? Had his operation been approved by the Sword of Truth who was far away in Aalto?

"Remember to pay for the liquor and the house damages." Old Green fell down, resuming the previous stun and depression.

Fernando stepped into the hall and said to Sharp, who was drinking with his eyes closed, "What would you like to talk about?"

Sharp chuckled. "I want to kill someone, but it's inconvenient for me to do it in person. I'm told that sorcerers accept such contracts."

"Who is it?" Douglas pressed his hands, hinting Fernando not to be rash.

His calmness and easiness made Fernando swallow his mockery about Sharp's cowardice and listen to his reply.

Sharp had another mouthful of his drink and smiled again. "Alfonsol. The person I want dead is Alfonsol."

Alfonsol?

There were plenty of people with such a name, but most of them lived in the countries near the Holy City. In Rentato, few people carried such a name, and only one of them was a nuisance for Sharp to attack!

"Alfonsol, the red robe?" Old Green's frozen eyes emitted deep and dark brilliance.

Fernando was also quite surprised. The deputy captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights, as well as the gold knight, was asking the "evil" sorcerers to assassinate a level-nine red robe? That was too weird!

"Yes. He is an extreme worshipper of the Lord. He believes that all the powers go to the Lord, and that nobles are also lambs. So, we haven't gotten along very well." Sharp looked at the three of them with a vague smile.

"Alfonsol is a level-nine cleric, the main assistant to 'Graceful Angel' Francois, and a real giant of the Inquisition of the Holm parish..." Douglas had collected enough intelligence about Rentato recently. "Graceful Angel" Francois was one of the two saint cardinals who was left by the Saint Truth to defend the territory on this side of the Storm Strait. He was an expert whose name could be prefixed with "Saint"!

Old Green lowered his eyes. "Alfonsol barely leaves Rentato. Who can assassinate him under Francois' protection? Unless they do not want to survive..."

The previous attack on the Inquisition had raised too much turmoil. Kritonia had taken over the investigation in person. If they allured Alfonsol to leave Rentato by exposing their tracks, "Heart of Time" would possibly come! He wasn't any easier to deal with than "Graceful Angel" was. Kritonia was known as the legendary knight who was closest to level three!

Even a man as proud and impatient as Fernando dared not accept the contract outrightly. The mission might not be accomplishable even if the whole Union was devoted to it.

"Haha." Sharp raised his head and laughed aloud, as if he were very delighted. Then, he lowered his head and looked at Douglas and Fernando without the slightest smile in his eyes. "Why? Are you scared?"

He rose and looked down at them. "Your strategy is not bad to attract the nobles to resist the Church. However, you've forgotten one thing. This is a game that only experts can play!

“If you cannot kill a level-nine red robe, are you even qualified to play the game of balance? How many legendary sorcerers do you have? How capable are you to resist the Church?”

“If you do not have the capabilities, however many things you do, as long as the legendary sorcerers of Aalto are defeated and the Church is spared, your doom will still be inevitable. No nobles will dare to work with you at all.”

He sniffed. “Keep away from Hathaway. If Green weren’t hanging around with you, I would have...”

Pausing for a moment, he walked to the door with his hands behind his back. “Don’t meddle in the battle of giants if you are just a group of rats!”

Fernando blushed. A terrible storm seemed to be rising in his eyes. If Douglas hadn’t been suppressing him in secret, he would’ve burst out long ago.

Chapter 866: Old Fox

866 Old Fox

After he stepped out of the inn, Sharp broke like a bubble and disappeared into the dark night. Not moving his eyes back, Old Green asked coarsely, “Are you going to accept his contract?”

“Whether we accept it or not, the most important issue right now is that this place is no longer safe. We have to transfer immediately.” Douglas looked rather solemn.

Fernando was also back to himself. He mumbled, “It’s up to those old men whether or not to accept the contract. What we need to do is to get out of here and set up another relay station.”

It was obvious that, even if the Union was to accept the mission to assassinate Alfonsol and build up a good relationship with the nobles such as Sharp, they wouldn’t want to expose the relay station that was very important for the organization to any strangers. If they wanted to communicate with the nobles, a smaller, one-way channel would be better, say, through Old Green.

Carelessness in such matters would mean the doom of an organization!

Then, fearing that somebody might be eavesdropping, Fernando said to Douglas and Old Green in the telepathic bond, “I’ll see you in the underwater relic of Lake Ramrouge.”

“Alright, you go first. I have to leave certain marks to warn the sorcerers to come.” Old Green looked around at the lobby with obvious regrets.

Fernando mocked, “You should be happy to get rid of this eyesore. What’s to be sorry about?”

“As a matter of fact, this is my family business that my great grandfather started,” Old Green said peacefully without the slightest anger, as if he were talking about somebody else.

Fernando was briefly stunned. Looking at his feet and raising his head, he looked at the wine cabinet behind Old Green with his red, vigorous eyes and said, "Maybe this hotel will be preserved. You are a radiant knight, and you are close to many nobles. It may be put into good use, except that not many sorcerers would frequent this place anymore..."

He rambled on without a theme.

"Get lost already, boy! I do not need your sympathy!" Old Green suddenly lashed out and interrupted Fernando.

Fernando blushed and snorted, "I'll sympathize with the black-clawed dogs before I sympathize with a half-dead old man like you!"

He left immediately after that.

Old Green raised his jaw, hinting Douglas to follow him. He then chuckled. "Don't the necromancers always say that your life begins when you are dead?"

"What do those smelly, rotten bodies know about life?" Fernando said without looking back.

"Even my hair is older than you, boy. What do you know about life?" Old Green did not give in at all.

Helpless, Douglas watched the two of them fight until Fernando was out of the gate and into the darkness of the night.

...

Under the starlight, the lakes were glimmering peacefully. Since there were many such lakes, they were scattered on the ground like pearls and connected into dreamy necklaces.

"This place deserves to be called 'Land of Thousand Lakes'..." Douglas complimented while he floated above the lake and took a deep breath of the fresh air.

Fernando asked in surprise, "You know 'Land of Thousand Lakes'?"

“Of course, its fame has been brought to Antiffler by the traveling sorcerers,” Douglas replied.

“Is it beautiful at all?” Fernando murmured in a low voice. Then, he said, “This is Lake Ramrouge. Follow me.”

Douglas looked at the lake, only to discover that it wasn’t huge. One might have thought that it was just a swamp. Could there be any underwater relic in it?

The two of them cast spells and jump into the water, sinking to the bottom of the lake quickly.

Noticing Douglas’ surprise, Fernando explained in a telepathic bond, “Some idiotic sorcerer built this. Perhaps he intended to connect all the Land of Thousand Lakes. However, it is thanks to his idiocy that this relic hasn’t been discovered. The Church would never imagine that such a small and unresourceful lake has a relic.”

A cave was hidden below the cave. It did not seem to be established for human beings but was more like the nest of certain aquatic creatures.

Fernando vaporized his body and crawled in. Douglas followed him without any hesitation.

After passing through a zigzagging “tunnel”, Douglas found himself in the middle of a palace that was crowded with sorcerers. They were quite alarmed about the newcomers, but after they saw Fernando’s familiar face, they turned around and focused on their own business again.

One of the senior-rank sorcerers performed magic to examine whether or not Fernando was authentic. In that aspect, sorcerers, known as “rats in the gutter”, were much more vigilant than the Inquisition, because those who were not vigilant enough were already dead.

“Now, this is more like a place where sorcerers gather...” Douglas said in both relief and comfort.

“Douglas, Fernando, you’ve come at the perfect moment. The president has learned what happened just now and wants you to meet him.” Lauren, who escaped early under Fernando’s cover, came to them.

“Is this the headquarters of the Union?” Douglas found it odd. Fernando did not mention it before.

Fernando also found it odd. “Is the president here?”

“Yes.” Lauren nodded and observed Fernando up and down. “It’s good that you are fine. Mr. President planned to meet Douglas here and hold a meeting if it weren’t for the accident in the Roasted Fish Hotel...”

It seems that they are still wary of me and were reluctant to let me know their headquarters so soon... Douglas thought. However, he was not bothered and simply nodded his head. “Lauren, please lead us to Mr. President...”

“It’s only because the mission they gave was too dumb...” Following Douglas, Fernando cursed.

After they passed a channel made of stone bricks, they reached a palace that was decorated with weird patterns. An old man whose hair was all white but whose spirits were high strode out and greeted them, “Welcome to the Union of Sorcerers, Douglas. You are a distinguished sorcerer, and your studies on curves and irregular shapes are better than ours. I hope I can learn from you sometime.”

Douglas was slightly stunned. Did Arnold, the president of the Union of Sorcerers, also know that he was studying fluxion?

Fluxion was the name that he gave to the mathematical problems he worked on, although he was thinking to change the name at some point.

Douglas was soon back to himself from his surprise. Arnold must have been paying attention to his communication with Fernando. The guy postponed the meeting perhaps to give himself enough time for observation.

As a leader of a fairly-large magic organization, he was certainly not a simple person!

“The research of many great sorcerers in the past inspired me,” Douglas said modestly.

Arnold had a few wrinkles, and his face was still red. He pointed at Douglas and smiled as he said, “Don’t be modest. If your research works out, it will be easier to learn and construct all spells! What a bright future it will be! Alright, let’s focus on the contract of the Blue Demon first. Right, this is League. You’ve met before. This is Ramon, this is Veronica. They are both the deputy presidents of the Union.”

He introduced the few people who came with him. League had plenty of wrinkles and a hawk nose, Ramon was tall and slender with a long face, and Veronica had green eyes that looked like emeralds. They were all in the classic robes of the Magic Empire.

Douglas greeted them and smiled at a brown-haired young man next to Arnold. “Gallos, it’s been a long time.”

With a playful smile, the young man replied, “I did not expect you to do something like attacking the Inquisition. It’s more like Fernando’s style.”

Gallos was the person who introduced Douglas to the Union of Sorcerers. He was Fernando and Lauren’s friend, Arnold’s student, and a sixth-circle senior-rank sorcerer.

“Hehe. Do you envy me?” Fernando certainly would not give in.

Gallos chuckled and looked at his feet without continuing the conversation, but President Arnold asked a question, “What’s your opinion on the Blue Demon’s contract?”

Lauren, who led them here, quietly exited the palace and closed the gate.

League said gloomily, “He’s only warning us with the mission. There’s no need to take it seriously.”

“What if we accomplish it for real? Will he see our value and decide to work with us?” Ramon pulled a long face and objected to League.

“First of all, we need to be capable of accomplishing it!” League and Veronica said at the same time.

The meeting immediately fell silent. Even Fernando did not dare to brag that Alfonsol was not difficult to kill. After all, Kritonia had his eyes on the Union.

Arnold seemed satisfied with the situation. With his smile unchanged, he coughed for a moment and said, “It’s not entirely impossible for us to accomplish the mission.”

“President, you must be kidding!” League said seriously.

“It’s indeed impossible if we count on only our own strength, but what if the other magic organizations cooperate with us? They do not have the attention of the Heart of Time.” Arnold smiled; he was in a good temper. Then, before anyone opened their mouth, he went on and said, “I’ve been busy contacting the other magic associations. As it happens, I’ve invited many magic organizations to visit Arnold and discuss cooperation. That’s why I set the meeting in this place instead of our headquarters, because ‘Allyn’ is also near Rentato.”

He sort of explained why they did not bring Douglas to the headquarters.

“President, are you confident to convince those organizations to cooperate with us?” Veronica brought up the key issue.

Arnold smiled as cunningly as an old fox. “If they know that we are working with the Blue Demon, deputy captain of the Sword of Truth’s Knights, they will be glad to cooperate with us in the mission. It’s not just our strategy to attract the nobles to resist the Church.”

“Since when have we been working with the Blue Demon?” Even Ramon was confused.

Arnold chuckled. “Since after we accomplish the mission to assassinate Arnold with other groups, when he attaches more importance to our strength.”

Fernando’s lips twitched. The president was too sleazy!

“Which organizations will come to Allyn?” League thought for a moment and asked cautiously.

Arnold nodded his head. “Rest assured. The organizations I’ve invited are all slightly weaker than us. They are not the legendary associations such as ‘Cabin of Palmeira’, ‘Scythe of Death’, or ‘Hysterical Dance’. What deserves our attention are ‘Red Eye’, ‘Supreme Soul’, ‘Shadow Singers’, and ‘Tower of Destroyers’, which have one or two ninth-circle archmages. There are also a dozen common organizations that do not have ninth-circle sorcerers.

“Douglas, Fernando, and I will attend the meeting later.”

Chapter 867: The City in the Sky

867 The City in the Sky

“Why them?”

The person who raised the question was Veronica, a blond gorgeous beauty. The sorcerers who were adept at body modifications were often on two extremities. Some of them did not care about their images at all, and they transformed them in the most powerful way.

For example, they could replace their left eye with “Stub of the Eye Demon”, their right eye with the eye of the Servant of Death, and their beard with the tentacles of the Mind Stealer. As a result, their looks could be most horrifying, making them the synonym of “creepy” for the ordinary people. In the meantime, they were also the image of all sorcerers in the Saint Truth’s propaganda. Of course, in the current phase, those sorcerers had to change their appearances before they went out, or they would be moving targets for the night watchers.

The other sorcerers, on the other hand, paid great attention to their looks during their self-modification, so their faces would be more and more delicate and pretty. Veronica was such an eighth-circle sorcerer who was good at bloodline integration and physical modification. For example, her pointy ears added cuteness to her glamor. It was exactly a feature of the elves’ bloodline.

President Arnold chuckled. “The meeting to be held in Allyn is mainly to facilitate communication and eliminate misunderstandings...”

It was obviously the “formalities” that he spoke to the other magic associations. Then, he suddenly changed the topic and said, “Therefore, as the host, we have to refrain ourselves in the meeting. Otherwise, they will be too wary of us to come, and the cooperation will be sabotaged.

“Of the three representatives, I am the president and the main convener. I have to host the meeting. It’s basic courtesy. Douglas is our archmage who recently joined. His presence will let other people sense the attraction and the real capabilities of the Union. Fernando is our most distinguished young sorcerer and the most hopeful candidate to become an archmage. He will show the other groups the bright prospects of the Union...”

Unlike the usual, Fernando did not throw out mockery. The other groups would be awed by the simple, refrained demonstration of strength. The president had completely justified himself. He truly deserved to be the president!

League and Veronica both accepted the explanation. Without any argument, they asked about the details of “Red Eye”, “Supreme Soul”, and the other groups. Although they knew a lot of things about such groups from before, Arnold, who had just visited their leaders, certainly knew better.

Arnold seized the opportunity to introduce those organizations to Douglas. “The greatest feature of the people of the Asso Empire is their red eyes, as can be seen on Fernando. Of course, the redness of his pupils is rare even in the Asso Empire. ‘Red Eye’ is an organization set up by some surviving sorcerers of the Asso Empire, who hope that they can restore their country...”

“‘Supreme Soul’ is an organization of necromancers. It is said that it has something to do with ‘Scythe of Death’...”

“‘Shadow Singers’ is a secret organization that Osseris, the Master of Shadows, prepared for his return. However, it has been too badly struck by the Heart of Time and is not even as strong as us...”

“‘Tower of Destroyers is mostly made of sorcerers of the school of elements. It’s one of the few major branches of the Will of Elements left after it was destroyed by the Sword of Truth and the clerics a hundred years ago...”

Douglas was no stranger to the Will of Elements. After the Master of Shadows was heavily wounded and went missing, the legendary sorcerers in Holm were divided and fought on their own. Some of them founded their own organizations. The Will of Elements was a legendary group that was very active in the period. In its heyday, it could be compared to the “Cabin of Palmeira” which had a long history. However, it was still destroyed in the end. Most of the sorcerers were killed, and the valuable files and items were carved up by the Hoffenberg family and the Saint Truth.

Arnold explained the history, members, and leaders of the four magic organizations in detail. In the end, he sighed and said, “I hope that the cooperation will go well. As long as we kill Alfonsol and intimidate the Blue Demon, I will be able to establish a partnership with the few Excellencies.”

He looked at Douglas solemnly. “The Blue Demon is quite right that we are not strong enough to join a battle of ‘giants’. However, this side of the strait is not entirely devoid of legends!”

He did not mention the possibility that the Church would burst into a fury after Alfonsol was killed and that Sharp would work harder to strike the magic organizations instead of softening his attitude, a possibility that he, League, Ramon, and Veronica knew very well. However, in such a situation, they could only take risks. If they waited until they were confident, there would be no chance for them to take risks!

“Mr. President, how many legends are on this side of the strait?” As a native of Antiffler, Douglas did not know the situation in Holm very well.

Arnold smiled. “Other than those who went to Aalto to join the defense, there are only three legendary sorcerers on this side of the strait. Of course, the legends all have strange ways to preserve their lives. Perhaps some of them were not really killed by the Saint Truth but have only been hiding somewhere.

“There are two legends in Cabin of Palmeira, namely the Witch of Iceland and the Lord of Frigidity. Between them, the Lord of Frigidity is stronger, so he went to reinforce Aalto, and the Witch of Iceland, who is younger, is left to defend the organization...

“‘Scythe of Death’ has a terrible ‘Liege of Death’. He’s a seasoned legend of the Asso Empire, but he is not close to the legends of Aalto, so he did not reinforce them...

“The legends of ‘Hysterical Dance’ had mostly perished, but decades ago, a remarkable ninth-circle sorcerer among them made an advancement successfully. His legendary class is ‘Eye of Curse’, and his name is Atlant Forman. He’s very young...”

Douglas listened carefully and repeated the things that he should pay special attention to in a low voice, “Witch of Iceland... Liege of Death... Eye of Curse...”

“That’s basically everything. Douglas, Fernando, prepare yourselves. We’ll go to Allyn tomorrow.” Arnold nodded his head.

...

The sky seemed to have been burnt up by a fire, and the earth was red but dim. Arnold, Douglas, and Fernando had transformed into fat rats that were common on this plain, running among plants and rocks.

This was a plain northwest of Rentato. It was surrounded by mountains, with a lot of villages scattered on it. It did not look like a place where the stealthy sorcerers would hide at all.

“When the City in the Sky collapsed, it caused a huge hole at the foot of the mountain and an earthquake that buried itself. Therefore, it’s actually below the ground at the edge of the plain.” Arnold introduced the location of Allyn to Douglas.

Douglas, who was currently a chubby gray-haired mouse, said through the telepathic bond, “It must’ve been badly ruined, hasn’t it?”

“Yes. The central alchemical lives are all gone. There is no intact building in it right now...” Fernando spoke instead of Arnold. He was now a red-eyed delicate mouse.

The three rats went deep into the ground along with the real mouse nests. Surpassing many obstacles, they reached the underground channel that the Union of Sorcerers established earlier.

Thereafter, they turned back into human beings and walked down the road that was made of giant stones. There were no commonly-seen murals and patterns on the wall but only uneven rocks.

As he walked, Douglas came to a sudden stop and looked ahead in fascination. He saw something magnificent that was squeezed by mud and rocks.

It was very enormous and made up an upside-down mountain, with a pointy bottom and a flat top. Many symbols were embedded in it in the most astounding way.

However, the magic towers above its surface had all collapsed. Even the best preserved ones had only three to four floors left. Also, deep cracks could be found on the main body, almost penetrating through it.

“Is this the City in the Sky...” His eyes full of passion, Douglas remarked in mixed feelings.

Arnold allowed him to watch for a while and said, “I’ll talk to the leaders of the other magic organizations first and try to reach a common understanding before the meeting. You can go around and make acquaintance with the sorcerers of other groups.”

At this moment, the members of the other magic organizations had come, which kept the sorcerers of the Union and their families who lived in this base rather busy. Of course, the sorcerers in the senior rank and above were all hiding around and entered the place with simulated images in case it was the Union’s trap. It was already their habit to be cautious.

“Alright.” Douglas nodded his head and flew to the City in the Sky that had fallen to the bottom of the ground with Fernando.

After he landed on it, Douglas realized that the sorcerers of the Union had already established and repaired some of the uncomplicated buildings. Also, since plenty of sorcerers from other organizations had come, a market had spontaneously formed at the central square, where everybody exchanged their magic models, knowledge, materials, resources, potions, and recipes.

“Hello, gentlemen, would you like the modified Malzman that I invented recently? It can stimulate the soul effectively and increase the speed of the spiritual power's recovery." Because Douglas and Fernando were standing at the edge of the market, a plain-looking young sorcerer stood up and promoted his alchemical product with a smile.

Malzman was a legendary sorcerer who invented a potion that could help with the growth of spiritual power.

Hearing that, Douglas turned around curiously and stared at the bubbling blue drug. "How much can it increase?"

"It varies between 1% and 5% for different people. I'd tried hundreds of different ratios before I finally came up with this improved recipe by accident," the young sorcerer said proudly.

Nodding his head, Douglas asked cautiously, "Then why is your modification able to improve the effect? What's the mechanism behind it?"

The young sorcerer's expression immediately darkened. "Only real customers are welcome here!"

Chapter 868: Quarrel

868 Quarrel

“I’m not being unreasonable. If you don’t figure out those questions, you will be relying on nothing but experience, instincts, and luck when you modify your drug. It was already fortunate of you to have found out a beneficial change after several hundred tries, but what about later? Are you going to try every possibility and every combination? In such a case, you will never succeed without thousands of experiments...” Douglas replied very carefully.

Solemnly, the young sorcerer pointed at his product and said, “The magic book says that the Crimson Grass plus the Fish Eye Fruit plus the stem of the Soul Wood can stimulate one’s spiritual power. My product is a combination of their natural effects, a summary of the sorcerers’ generations of research, a law of nature, and a truth that is beyond any doubts! I won’t sell my drug to you. Please go somewhere else!”

Perhaps because he was just freed from teachers and magic books, the young sorcerer told him the mechanism of his recipe even though he hated the unreasonable guy. Of course, the specific ratio of the ingredients was his business secret.

Douglas nodded. Right when the young sorcerer held his head high again, he suddenly said, “I know that the Crimson Grass plus the Fish Eye Fruit plus the stem of the Soul Wood can stimulate the spiritual power. It’s an empirical law, but why?”

Fernando tried to hold back his smile and almost blew a whistle. It was very fun for him to watch other people be driven crazy by Douglas’ whys.

The young sorcerer’s face was the best example of “astounded”. Uttering some meaningless sounds, he turned around at the sorcerers nearby and murmured, “What a freak!”

Actually, the sorcerers had summarized the synergy among most materials and gave explanations of different schools. For example, some claimed that it was a representative of the four-element theory, and some said that it was because of the cycle of life.

The young sorcerer knew quite a lot, and he was more inclined to the four-element explanation. However, he did not want to talk to the weirdo at all, fearing that he would be faced with a bunch more whys. It reminded him of the feeling when he could not provide satisfactory answers to a rigorous teacher.

The sorcerers around watched in either gloom or amusement. None of them were interested in meddling with someone they were not familiar with.

Not caring at all that he was called a freak, Douglas said sincerely, "Have you ever read 'Elemental Crown of Magic Potions'? It may explain part of the reasons, and it may be applied in practice, but there is still plenty of self-consistency. I don't think it really answers the questions."

Gritting his teeth, the young sorcerer murmured, "Ignore him! Ignore him!"

He had the feeling that he was surrounded by hundreds of mosquitoes, which made him rather agitated.

Douglas was quite a reasonable man when he didn't ask whys. He shook his head with a smile and said, "I know a thing or two about this field. If you are interested in the question just now, you are free to communicate with me. I am Douglas, and I'm with the Union of Sorcerers. What about you?"

The young man was very handsome and scholarly. He did not intend to talk to Douglas, but something his teacher said to him popped up in his mind.

"You are the most gifted young sorcerer in our organization, but you've been too devoted to books to know how to communicate with other people. We represent the Shadow Singers in the meeting in Allyn. So, I must remind you that you must not be too weak or too arrogant. Courtesy is very important..."

Courtesy, courtesy... The young sorcerer struggled to reply. He said, "I am Owen, from the Shadow Singers."

"I just took a look. Your potion must be very good." Douglas knew better than continuing to pester Owen and left his stand. Owen was greatly relieved.

"You can totally develop a spell named 'Douglas' Whys'. It will definitely stun the enemy." Fernando followed him and made fun of him.

Douglas smiled and did not say anything. He carefully observed the sorcerers who had been gathered in the square. They were from different organizations, and their strengths, genders, looks, and personalities varied. The only thing they had in common was that they were all slightly depressed and overwhelmed.

It was not because something bad was happening, but because their living conditions had brought irreversible psychological changes that had been reflected in their aura.

"Skin of the Blue Dragon! It contains the patterns of dozens of spells and can significantly improve the corresponding magic!" On their way, they suddenly heard a girl peddling "Skin of the Blue Dragon".

The blue dragons were most famous for their supernatural abilities in lightning and water. Their skin was not only an alchemical material but an important focus of the sorcerers' studies.

Therefore, when Douglas and Fernando looked over, the girl's stand had been crowded by sorcerers, who were all observing the incomplete skin of the blue dragon in silence.

For Fernando who was good at lightning and storms, the skin of the blue dragon was most precious. So, he walked to the girl's stand. After confirming the authenticity of the material, he asked, "What do you want in exchange for the skin of the blue dragon?"

The other sorcerers were angry about Fernando who squeezed through the crowd, but nobody said anything. They all wanted to hear the girl's needs.

The girl had flaxen hair and pupils in a similar color. Both pretty and vigorous, she smiled and said, "I want to exchange for the destruction of the Church. Can you do that?"

Before Fernando roared out, she ended the joke in time. "I need all the middle-rank magic books on transformation, body modification, and bloodline melting. Do you have any?"

Her answer was rather vague. It was obvious that she intended to pick a favorite book from the sorcerers.

"I do!" Fernando had always been impatient. He immediately took out many books and floated them in the air, before he looked at the sorcerers around with a "This material is mine and bite me if you are not cool with that" look on his face.

The sorcerers were somewhat angry at first, but somebody said in a low voice, "He's Fernando of the Union."

"The Fernando who attacked the Inquisition?"

"The Fernando who took down the Predator?"

The sorcerers immediately whispered among themselves. Many people who planned to compete with Fernando backed off. That was a brutal and strong man!

Fernando did not realize that he was so famous. He wasn't even as respected as now when he made it to the Cleansing List. He was rather puzzled.

"How about it? Are you satisfied with my books?" Fernando decided to ignore other people and simply asked the girl.

At this moment, another sorcerer stood out. "You may be Fernando, but so what? All the organizations are gathering today. Is he going to steal an item that is being regularly traded?"

Fernando was about to roar at the sorcerer when the girl suddenly said, "I would like to give it to Mr. Fernando! He's my hero! Over the past century, he is the first sorcerer who has the courage to attack the Inquisition and kill the traitors!"

Fernando was stunned. Since when could “reputation” contribute to business-making? Was the girl still so innocent?

The competitive sorcerer dared not argue anymore and left in a hurry.

“As a matter of fact, it was Douglas, the ninth-circle archmage next to me, who killed the Predator.” Fernando would never steal other people’s credit.

An archmage?

The sorcerers around looked at Douglas, feeling even luckier that they did not conflict with Fernando.

“You’re both my heroes! I am Erica. I am a third-circle sorcerer from a small organization,” the girl said with a sweet smile, which was soon replaced by melancholy. “It’s a shame that there are fewer and fewer heroes like you. Everybody is too used to failure and hiding to dream for a victory.”

Her bluntness made all the sorcerers fall into silence. They thought of the immense pressure and the boundless darkness before their eyes.

“What can we do? The Church has so many legendary experts, and the pope is well beyond the peak of legendary. What can we do...” In the crowd, someone said angrily and desperately, “If only Mr. Viken, Mr. Maskelyne, and the rest of them hadn’t gone missing... With so many level-three legends, the Church wouldn’t have developed at all...”

“I hardly think so!” Somebody argued loudly, “The pope is as strong as a demigod. The Light of Stars was killed by him, and the Liege of Death was ‘reincarnated’ with a strength less than level three. Even the two top legends could not stop the pope. Why do you think Maskelyne and Viken could?”

The words that praised the Church immediately invoked curses. People of Red Eye cursed the Sylvanas Magic Empire for being too devoted to internal conflicts at the critical moment, which caused the destruction of the Asso Empire first. The Liege of Death only returned through the forbidden approach, but he was so weakened that he dared not even challenge the Sword of Truth.

The people of Shadow Singers also cursed other sorcerers for not being united. Otherwise, the Church wouldn't have developed at all, and the pope wouldn't have become so strong!

The necromancers of the Supreme Soul were not good at quarreling, but their gloomy eyes were nonetheless chilly. They seemed to believe that the main reason for their failure was that so many sorcerers were unwilling to offer their soul and body. Otherwise, they would've raised an enormous and tough army of servants that would sweep across the Church. The divine power of the Church was most effective on the necromancers, so they hated and were scared of the Church the most.

The elementalists of Tower of Destroyers joined the fight, maintaining that the three magic empires made too many mistakes at the beginning and gave too much room for the Church to develop. Otherwise, the situation today would have been different.

"Perhaps our magic has already fallen behind..." In the middle of their argument, a desperate sorcerer blurted out without thinking, "How many legendary experts have emerged in the Church in the past three hundred years? What about our side? Perhaps the divine power is the future..."

They all fell silent as the moment poked everyone's wound. Then, curses broke out.

"Traitor! You are a traitor!"

"Our magic is much more abundant and mysterious than the divine power!"

"Does the divine power have so many ways to save your life?"

Erica, who was selling the skin of the blue dragon, did not say anything under the noises. She backed off and heaved a sigh before saying to Fernando and Douglas, "How devastating... It's great that we have heroes like you.”

“Desperation calls for changes...” Looking at the remains of the magic towers at the center of Allyn, Douglas’ eyes were deep and thoughtful.

Clang!

A bell was knocked, appeasing the fight in the square, because the joint meeting of dozens of magic organizations was about to begin.

Chapter 869: Cooperators

869 Cooperators

It had been many years since the Union of Sorcerers started to dig the City in the Sky. The central area had been cleaned, and a lot of magic towers and houses had been set up. If it weren't for the research value of the other debris, the first scene Douglas saw would have definitely not been as dilapidated as this. Right now, a magic tower near the relic of the central magic tower sent out the sound of a bell being hit. According to the deal, it marked the beginning of the meeting.

The sorcerers who were having a huge fight in the square reluctantly shut their mouths, unsatisfied that the rare opportunity to unleash their complaints was over. They slowly surged to the five-story tall magic tower.

"Those old men must've exchanged their opinions in private..." Fernando mumbled. The real agreements had almost always been reached before the meeting, and the meeting was only an occasion for announcements.

Douglas watched the sorcerers come from all directions; his eyes deep and thoughtful. It was not until the square was cleared that he finally sighed. "Let's go in."

"Do you feel helpless about their argument? In such a time of peril and despair, they still refuse to let go of their biases and selfishness. To be honest, I have zero confidence in their future after seeing the fight just now." Fernando moved forward while complaining.

Douglas shook his head and said in a low voice, "Everybody is selfish. So, a sincere cooperation is not based on the complete abandonment of selfishness, but on the demonstration of your strength, so that everybody understands that it is in their best interest to fight by your side.

"I don't mean the strength in the regular sense. It means so much more. For example, even if we are not strong enough yet, as long as we can convince other people that our path is hopeful and we can lead them on it, it will also be our ‘strength’.”

He was solemn and did not have the slightest desperation or anger.

“Isn’t it the process to build up their confidence in us through various approaches? It’s a sophisticated skill in the school of illusion,” Fernando derided Douglas out of habit.

Douglas turned around to look at Fernando. “You know the school of illusion very well?”

Personally, he was not good at the theories of the school of illusion. He was capable of a lot of illusions, but he never studied them deeply.

“My teacher was a great scholar. Before he was killed, he had been in touch with many archmages of the school of illusion. So, I know a lot of sorcerers who specialize in that.” Fernando mentioned his teacher but did not seem to be close to him.

Douglas did not keep asking because they had reached the magic tower. A middle-aged man who was wearing the arcana badge of the Union of Sorcerers was waiting by the door. “Are you Mr. Douglas? Mr. President asked you to go to the living room in the wing on arrival.”

He recognized Douglas through Fernando.

“Alright,” Douglas replied politely.

It slightly surprised the middle-aged man, because archmages were mostly very arrogant in his impression, even including someone as kind and amiable as President Arnold.

Many stone chairs had been raised in the hall. Douglas and Fernando stepped into the living room.

“Douglas, let me introduce you,” Arnold greeted him with a smile like a kind old man.

Douglas was as steady as before, but Fernando chuckled in a low voice. Judging from the old fox's good mood, the negotiation must have gone really well.

Hearing Douglas' name, the dozen sorcerers in the living room all looked over. Some were wary, some curious, and some were hostile. Was he the archmage who was capable of "Time Stop" and who killed the Predator?

Arnold put his hands on Douglas' shoulder and pointed at a fat old man. "This is Nielson, leader of Red Eye and an archmage. Even though he looks fat, his body is as sturdy as that of a gold knight."

Douglas immediately understood what Nielson was good at. Perhaps his every body part had been fixed with a certain special ability. His current appearance was nothing but camouflage.

Besides his body figure that left a deep impression, Nielson's ruby eyes were also very attractive. When he smiled, the fat on his cheeks jiggled. "I've always looked forward to Antiffler. The archmages from there are truly remarkable."

He said that he looked forward to it, but there wasn't any earnestness in his tone.

Understanding the feud of the two empires very well, Douglas nodded with a smile, not bothered by Nielson's attitude.

Pretending that he did not hear Nielson's indication, Arnold continued, "This is Amanata, a student to the Master of Shadows and one of the leaders of Shadow Singers."

Amanata, covered in a black magic robe, sat in a shadow in the corner. He merely nodded as a greeting after Arnold's introduction. If it weren't for his male name, Douglas couldn't have even told his gender.

Arnold joked, "Shadow Singers always favor shadows."

Not far away from Amanata, there was a sorcerer whose air was cold and gloomy. He was wearing a black glamorous robe, and his head only had the white skull left, with needle-like dim red fire bouncing in his eyes. He was a classic lich.

“This is Congus, the archmage who single handedly created ‘Supreme Soul’. He was praised by the Master of Shadows in person, who said that he is very likely to become a legendary sorcerer.” Arnold introduced the lich who was no weaker than Nielson or Amanata.

Congus opened his mouth. His voice was so unpleasant that it sounded like someone whetting a rusty sword. “My friends in Antiffler never mentioned you.”

He seemed very close to Antiffler.

“Because there were too many sorcerers stronger than me in Antiffler,” Douglas replied modestly. “Also, I was a weirdo.”

“Still, Antiffler was destroyed by the pope,” Nielson interrupted.

Congus looked at him and said coldly, “At least the empire hasn’t perished yet, but as for Asso...”

“Cough, cough, cough.” Arnold stopped the upcoming quarrel with coughs and introduced the lady who was playing with her red hair in boredom. “This is our beautiful Ms. Priscilla, the controller of Tower of Destroyers and an elementalist who is good at Cracking (Advanced).”

“Hey, Arnold, do you want me to give you one?” Priscilla made fun of Arnold with a vague smile before she extended her fair hand. “‘Time Stop’ and ‘Cracking (Advanced)’ are the best match. It’s a shame that I am incapable of the former. I hope that I can learn from you sometime.”

She was probably the most friendly responder.

“I always look forward to Cracking (Advanced), my lady.” Naturally, Douglas shook her hands courteously.

Fernando followed him and murmured to himself, “Is it really possible to work with those guys who were all minding their own business?”

Arnold then introduced Douglas and Fernando to the leaders of the other organizations, but he did not mention anything about cooperation, as if it were just trivia that had been decided.

Arnold was friendly and humorous throughout the whole process. That was probably why he was the convener instead of any other leader.

“Alright. It’s time for us to join the meeting. Let’s tell everybody the refreshing news.” In the end, he pointed at the gate.

All the experts stood up and walked out while following Arnold.

Because the safety of the meeting was not guaranteed, they had come with clones and simulated images, and they did not bring many sorcerers with them. The hall was not full.

After the leaders came out, the whispers in the hall were gone.

“Everybody, the War of Dawn, as named by the Church, has been going on for more than three hundred years. Many of you probably never lived life when magic was supreme. You were born in panic and depression, you grew in darkness and desperation, and you will probably die in the fire.” After the leaders sat down, Arnold began his speech.

His heavy opening further silenced the hall. The older sorcerers remembered the last glory of the empire, and the younger sorcerers remembered their own experiences, but they shared the common dread against the nightmarish Church.

After a brief pause, Arnold went on and said, “The power of individuals is so weak in the darkness. Only if we help each other can we cut the thorns and embrace the dawn. This meeting is to inform everybody that the organizations present will abandon our internal conflicts and fight together for our living space.”

In such a devastating environment, any good news could be pictured into a wonderful future. Therefore, everybody was excited by what Arnold said. If so many organizations were united, they would probably be able to resist a parish without legends...

Fernando snorted in despise but did not say anything.

Arnold did not say anything about a coalition. He knew that it was not realistic. Without enough power, uniting so many self-involved organizations would only collapse his own organization.

After describing the beautiful future, Arnold ended his speech. At this moment, a sorcerer stood up and asked, “What living space are we going to obtain in the future?”

Now that the excitement died down, the sorcerers were more suspicious and worried. Their experience told them that prudence meant a long life because they barely had any chance to start over if they made the wrong choice.

“Hey, you are not as stupid as I thought,” Fernando mocked in a low voice.

It was impossible for Arnold to speak of the terms of cooperation. So, he merely said, “Our successful cooperation will be an example for other people. More and more sorcerers will join us, even the legendary ones... The Church is definitely not invincible. Many legends have been gathered in Aalto. Also, the Church’s enemies include vampires, dragons, sea clans, elves, demons, and devils...”

The audience’s hope dwarfed their suspicion for now. Also, as elites of their respective groups, they could tell that the leaders had secretly reached an agreement, so they simply narcotized themselves with the beautiful future.

“Yes. We can cooperate with the supernatural creatures and absorb magic elements from them.”

“But can magic really compare to the divine power? At least when it comes to yielding legendary experts...”

After Arnold’s speech, the sorcerers had a lot of random thoughts. Some remembered the benefits of working with supernatural creatures and the development of magic, and some remembered the frustration of magic since the beginning of the War of Dawn... Hope, fear, desperation, and expectation overwhelmed them.

Nielson, Congus, Priscilla, Amanata, and the rest of them gave a brief speech to show support, but none of them revealed the terms of cooperation.

“Since we are partners, allow me to introduce the sorcerer next to me, Douglas from Antiffler. He’s good with ‘Time Stop’, and he attacked an Inquisition with Fernando.” Arnold showed the power of his Union in satisfaction.

People whispered in exclamations. Arnold nodded at their reaction and said to Douglas with a smile, “Why don’t you say something to everyone?”

Douglas stood up gravely. Arnold was rather stunned. Why did he look like that? What was he going to say?

Fernando also noticed Douglas’ strange expression; the man he was not wearing his usual warm and comforting smile. He also did not know why Douglas was like this. As for Nielson and the rest of them who were not familiar with Douglas, they sensed no anomaly at all.

Douglas looked around at the hall, silencing the whispers of the sorcerers, before he spoke in a low but clear voice.

“Ladies and gentlemen, many years ago, the esteemed ancestors of mankind learned how to make use of spiritual powers from dragons, elves, giants, demons, devils, and the other magical creatures. Then, by analyzing their body structures and blood qualities, we melted their bloodlines, modified our bodies, and came up with many meditation methods to build up our spiritual powers. We also created various kinds of magic by copying the magic patterns on their bodies, thereby gaining enormous powers. We drove the demons back into the abyss and kicked the devils back into hell. The giants, elves, and dragons either retreated to the uninhabited mountains, wilderness, and alternate dimensions, or bent before our feet.”

His opening, which was a brief review of the origin and glory of the age of magic, did not make Arnold and Fernando feel easy because Douglas was certainly not someone who would bring it up for nothing. The sorcerers, on the other hand, seemed to have sensed the glory at the beginning. They all looked rather refreshed.

Chapter 870: Speech

870 Speech

While the sorcerers dwelt in the glory of the past, Douglas' voice was even more solemn. "The glorious triumphs made the ancient sorcerers even more determined to pursue power. They initiated conquests in the abyss, the hell, and all the alternate dimensions. After the Saint Truth rose, the three Magic Empires collapsed in just three hundred years. The glory in the past has turned into the bitterness, confusion, and desperation today."

The glory of the past was shattered, replaced by the cruelty of the reality. Owen, Erica, and the sorcerers from different organizations felt that a bucket of cold water was poured on their heads. Although they were somewhat prepared, they could help but sigh in gloom and frustration. They speculated that Douglas meant the same as Arnold and the other archmages by drawing a comparison of the splendid past and the miserable reality so that all the sorcerers would be more hopeful about the cooperation and a bright future.

"But the Church is really too powerful! And they do have angels!"

"The time it takes for sorcerers to grow strong is not lengthened, but it is too long compared to what it takes for the clerics..."

"Will the cooperation really work? We are more likely to be annihilated if we are too big a target! It's possible that we will be safer if we split apart!"

"Only by surviving first can we hope to cooperate with the supernatural creatures, study them, and surpass the limits of magic..."

All kinds of thoughts rolled in the hearts of the seemingly silent sorcerers. Even leaders such as Nielson and Priscilla had similar feelings.

Although they were working hard to develop their organizations, seeking for a chance of survival and cooperating for a beautiful future, it would definitely be a lie if they claimed that they were absolutely confident without the slightest fear!

They were pressing forward with reasonable passion and confidence because there wasn't a second path. People were always more determined when they were left with no choice.

Of course, it was one way out to join the Church and become a night watcher, but for the leaders of those organizations, they were unwilling to give up themselves and become a dog of the Church before the war in the west was settled. What if Aalto beat the enemy back? On the other hand, if Aalto fell and most of the legends were killed, whether they surrendered or not would make little difference.

Arnold thought the same. He nodded at Douglas' speech in satisfaction. Fernando, on the other hand, secretly mumbled, "Was the empty talk all he wanted to say?"

Douglas pressed his right hand to stress his tone. "Dear ladies and gentlemen, it is time for us to calm down. Instead of being bewitched by power, we should calm down and consider certain questions." In the ancient Magic Empire, sorcerer was the only gender. They did not start addressing the audience in different genders until the modern day.

Well? What questions?

All the sorcerers, including the experts like Congus, were briefly stunned. Questions about the coalition? How radical the guy is! But does it have anything to do with being bewitched by power? Is he going to stress that solidarity is power? That must be a joke. All the people here combined are not enough for the Heart of Time to kill!

While they were confused, Douglas' voice suddenly became loud and echoed throughout the hall, "There are certain things that we need to figure out.

"What is the nature of magic?

“Why do creatures have spiritual power?”

“What is the nature of spiritual power?”

“In what form does it exist?”

Huh?

Even Fernando looked at Douglas in shock with his mouth half open. What questions were these?

The ancient sorcerers had always been considering the nature of magic, so the experts like Congus were not surprised. However, wasn't a spiritual power born naturally? Wasn't it a unique feature of the soul? What were those questions about?

They found it absurd and ridiculous when they just heard the questions. If it were a middle-rank or a low-rank sorcerer who asked the question, they would've interrupted the guy rudely, but the speaker now was an archmage who was capable of “Time Stop”. Since the legends were all hiding, that was the strongest power!

So, they listened patiently. Gradually, they discovered in shock that it was impossible for them to answer those questions! Also, after considering carefully, they realized that it seemed really necessary to work on those questions!

The middle-rank and senior-rank sorcerers down below, including Erica, looked at each other in amusement. If they could answer those fundamental questions, they would have become legendary sorcerers a long time ago. Would they need Douglas' reminder at all?

However, the series of questions did slightly shock them. They subconsciously sat straight and stared at Douglas attentively. After all, as an archmage, he might not be a big deal in Antiffler, but he was definitely one of the strongest persons here.

Frowning, Fernando considered the answers to those questions, only to discover that he did not have the slightest clue. He then realized that Douglas unleashed an indescribable vibe. He was no longer as warm as usual but much more intimidating and solemn!

In an even louder voice, Douglas continued his speech magnificently, “Are earth, fire, wind, and water really the most basic elements in the world? If they are, how do they stick together to form everything we know? And if not, what are the real magic elements?”

“What is the nature of the soul?”

“Is the soul different from consciousness? If so, in what form does consciousness exist?”

“Do we need any ‘tools’ to illustrate and build magic models?”

“Does God exist? If God exists, what is His nature and form of existence? In what form does Alterna, the ancestor of vampires, exist? Why can they remain undead?”

“Why do the sun and the moon exist in this world? Why do they rise and set every day? What power motivates them in their operations? Those phenomena seem natural in the material world, but if we ask more whys, we will realize that we haven’t figured out the reasons behind them yet. Are those reasons, laws, and knowledge concerned with magic? Can we combine them with magic and help us explore the nature of the magic world?”

As he raised his questions, both the experts on the stage and the sorcerers down below changed their faces, switching from disdain and amusement to concentrated consideration. The questions about the rise and setting of the sun and moon hit them like lightning. They trembled and did not know how to express their feelings.

Yes. Why are they like that?

Why have I never considered those questions before?

What secrets do those phenomena, which seem to be the unquestionable law and nature of this world, contain?

Fernando clenched his fists; his red pupils full of excitement. He looked at Douglas’ shadow and never felt that the guy was taller!

Similar questions had occurred in the studies of every sorcerer now and then, but having been used to such phenomena, they never considered those questions as something worth paying attention to, and they never asked the questions so deeply. At this moment, when they listened to Douglas' enlightening speech, they all felt that the mist before their eyes was driven away by sunlight. So, our studies on magic and this world are still so shallow! There are still so many whys that need addressing!

They felt that a new gate had been opened before him, vaguely revealing what appeared to be a new field of magic. More and more people were shivering in contemplation. Even Owen, who had been angry about Douglas earlier, no longer found the guy nefarious anymore. He felt that the guy's whys were extremely charming!

More and more questions popped up in his head. What is lightning? Why can't metal stop it when wood can? Why is mankind divided into different genders? Why can't human beings float in the sky instead of being stuck to the ground?

Erica covered her mouth, believing that Mr. Douglas had surpassed Mr. Fernando and become the greatest hero in her mind! So, the magic research beyond battles could also be so attractive and astounding!

"What is up? What is down? Why is the sky? What is the earth..." Fernando murmured, full of doubts about the things that he thought he had understood perfectly.

Holding his forehead, Douglas slightly bowed. "As long as we can figure out those questions, I believe that magic will develop much faster. The mysteries that we figure out will work on us and fortify us. Perhaps our development will be no slower than the Church's!"

After he backed off, the hall was still in utter silence. It was not until one minute later that the warmest welcome that never appeared even when the leaders of the magic organizations spoke burst out!

Douglas could see clearly that the sorcerers down below were excited, if not demented. The ubiquitous despair and depression just now were dissolved. He could only sigh about that. It was the first time he had introduced his opinions publicly and systematically and raised the questions that he had considered for a long time. Back when he was in Antiffler, even his teacher and his classmates were unwilling to pay attention to his thoughts in that aspect, much less other people.

It seems not bad... As a regular human being, Douglas felt delighted.

Owen, Erica, and the other sorcerers started to feel that the darkness around them was fading. They were desperate earlier because they thought that magic had been developed to the maximum but still could not compare to the divine power and the Church. They were hopeless because they could not see the light. Now, Mr. Douglas' questions had opened a boundless world. The development of magic had just begun and was far away from the limits! The future was not entirely hopeless!

Arnold and the rest of them had placed their hope on the Silver Moon, the vampires, the dragons, and the other exterior forces, which more or less boosted the morale, but it was not nearly as inspiring as giving the future to themselves.

However, was it really possible to answer those questions?

After the excitement, worries and suspicions surged in the hearts of the sorcerers, as could be seen from their faces. Douglas was not surprised at them. He never thought that everybody could be gathered after a speech. That would have been a fantasy!

The meeting ended in such an atmosphere. Amanata, Congus, Nielson, Priscilla, and the other archmages looked at Douglas in a slightly different way now.

Douglas rose with a smile and said to Arnold, "Mr. President, I would like to take part in the mission to assassinate Alfonsol. After that, I hope that I can spend some time in Allyn."

Chapter 871: Arrangemen

871 Arrangemen

“That’s not a problem. You are free to do what you want.” Arnold observed Douglas up and down again, not covering his surprise. He seemed to have never known the archmage who was hundreds of years younger than him until now.

At this moment, Priscilla walked over as attractively as a blooming tulip. She said to Douglas with a smile, “You... How should I put it? You have an amazing perspective in the way you think. It’s true that we are as used to certain phenomena in our life as we are to our hands and eyes, to the extent that we forget to ask why.

“After five hundred years, I’ve sensed the shock when I first touched magic again.”

Douglas could not nod at the warm lady’s praise. “One can never cease to explore magic or the world.”

“Alright, let’s not delay.” Without further ado, Priscilla looked at everybody else with a smile. “The most important thing right now is to kill Alfonsol. Let’s stick to our plan after we are back.”

Plan? Fernando’s lips twitched. Those old guys already made a plan when they talked in private?

Nielson, who was morbidly fat, looked at Douglas with his ruby eyes and sniffed. “Are those the questions that the sorcerers of Antiffler have been working on? No wonder the Church vanquished you...”

Douglas did not argue with him. He remembered clearly that the remnant of the Asso Empire was best at bloodline melting and body modification.

“Sometimes, I wonder what the power of shadows is, and where it is from...” Amanata said in an unpredictable voice, before he vanished in the shadow of the room.

Congus, on the other hand, stared at Arnold and spoke in his usual creepy and coarse tone. “Old fox, I’ll do what you asked, but if anything goes wrong with your plan, hehe...”

After seeing the leaders of the organizations off, Arnold picked his nose, not caring about his image. “It’s much more exhausting to communicate with those guys than to fight them.”

“There isn’t any foundation of trust. We can only go one step at a time.” Douglas smiled.

“This operation will be the first step to build trust. We must thank the Blue Demon. Regardless of whether or not he really wants Alfonsol dead, he’s giving us a chance for a joint operation. It will be much easier to plan more operations if there’s a first one.” Arnold resumed his look of a kind old man.

Fernando said, not in a good mood, “But we have to succeed! If we fail, there won’t be a second operation, unless one party is close to doom! Old man, what exactly is your plan?”

Only Arnold and Douglas were here, so he simply called the president old man.

Arnold did not criticize Fernando’s lack of respect. He replied with a smile, “It’s simple. As I said before, Tower of Destroyers will attract Alfonsol, and the other organizations will cover and cooperate with us in the attack. The Church does not know that we have reached an agreement.”

“How is he going to be attracted? Are you not scared that the Church would see through it and send out ‘Heart of Time’? He has been capturing sorcerers of late.” Fernando was not satisfied with the plan. Even if the Church did not know that so many magic organizations had secretly forged an alliance, the decoy might be easily seen through.

Arnold looked at Fernando with a smile. “You are only a seventh-circle sorcerer, and you are of little value in such a battle. Why do you care about the plan?”

As Arnold expected, Fernando, who had been overlooked, said angrily, "I... I will become an archmage very soon!"

"Haha." Arnold chuckled. "It's good to be young. However, this operation does need you. Nobody controls storms better than you do. Rest assured. Alfonsol will see nothing wrong."

Fernando glared at the president, feeling that he had been teased. "How exactly are we going to allure Alfonsol to leave Rentato? I won't take part in the operation if I'm not certain about it!"

"Hehe. That's what I've been expecting you to say. Then, you'd better not take part in it. I was scared that you would want to join in your rashness," Arnold said with a cunning smile. He then went on before Fernando roared, "Alright, it's just a joke. The specific way of allurement can only be decided after we figure out Alfonsol's personality, hobbies, styles, and habits, but the core will be the same. The traitor within the Tower of Destroyers will tell the secret to the Inquisition."

"Traitor within? They are aware of the traitor?" Fernando asked in shock. In the meantime, he thought to himself that the old man was truly a natural-born old fox!

Arnold shook his head. "Fernando, you are too young and too naive. We dare not say that we know all the hiding traitors, but we do know some of them, and we have put them in positions that will not cause great losses. Now, it's time for them to make contributions."

He then added, "Sometimes, the traitors are more valuable to us than they are to our enemy."

Douglas listened with a smile, finding it odd that the president explained it in such great detail. Had he always communicated with Fernando in such a way?

Fernando thought for a moment and basically understood what Arnold meant. He cursed again, old fox!

"As a matter of fact, after Sharp proposed the 'contract', you were automatically involved in the operation, and there's no need to sign up for it." Arnold chuckled. "Right, Douglas, I'm very curious about the questions you talked about. Are you interested in a discussion?"

"With pleasure," Douglas replied without any hesitation.

The three of them returned to the Land of Thousand Lakes and communicated on the questions that Douglas raised, expressing their unconfirmed ideas.

After they entered the underwater relic and revealed their real bodies, Arnold's smile was already gone. He frowned while being deep in thought. "Odd. Your opinions are very odd. It's not right... It's not right..."

While he mumbled, he did not forget to ask Lauren, who came to greet them, to gather the deputy presidents for a meeting.

By the time League, Ramon, and Veronica came in, Arnold had become normal again. He informed them of the discussion during the meeting and concluded, "We are responsible for the two most important procedures in the operation. If we succeed, we will be leading the future cooperation. Between the two procedures, the second procedure is the actual attack. Douglas and I will be in charge of it, and Fernando, Congus, Nielson, Amanata, and other people will cover us. It's already decided."

He spoke of the second procedure and then looked at League. "The first procedure is to distract Kritonia, so that he won't be following us in secret."

Fernando was greatly enlightened. He was worried that the Heart of Time would also come out when Alfonsol was allured. After all, nobody was certain that the guy was only interested in the sorcerers of the Union. The old fox was truly considerate!

"If we take action alone, two consecutive allurements will definitely be seen as part of a scheme. So, we must count on the help of other organizations. Also, if the gap between the two allurements is too short, it will be seen through too. League, I need you to go south and keep Kritonia occupied for a week. As a deputy president, you deserve his attention.”

Arnold stared at League solemnly. “I know that it’s very dangerous. One may be killed by Kritonia after a moment of carelessness. Only an archmage who is good at escaping and hiding like you is qualified for the task. Also, you need to pay attention to the way you expose your traces so that Kritonia won’t be suspicious. You must mislead him into thinking that he is chasing after you.”

The task was so dangerous that even Fernando was more or less scared. He suspected that League would refuse it, but League simply said calmly, “That’s not a problem. It’s my responsibility.”

Douglas knew League too little to feel anything, but Fernando suddenly widened his eyes. This old guy had always been mean and obsessed with power, but he turned out to be reliable and trustworthy at such a critical moment!

For a moment, even League’s hawk nose was not as hideous as before.

Arnold sighed. “We can only march in danger. League, do you want to switch our roles so that I’ll distract Kritonia and you will work together with Douglas to kill Alfonsol? As the president, I should take the most dangerous task.”

League put on a smile. “I don’t think so. Your procedure is even more dangerous. If anything happens, it will be barely possible for you to escape. As for my task, at least everything will be under my control.”

“It’s decided then.” Arnold turned around and looked at Fernando. “Fernando, you have one other mission. You will return to Rentato and collect Alfonsol’s files, including but not limited to his hobbies, personalities, style, and relationships.”

They had never considered assassinating Alfonsol before. So, they only collected the files such as the divine powers that Alfonsol was good at and his previous battle cases. That was certainly not enough for an assassination mission.

“Will a few days be enough?” Fernando asked. League was about to go south and would take action in a couple of days, which gave him five days at most to gather the intelligence.

Arnold smiled. “All you need to do is to collect the side information to confirm the main intelligence that you obtain from the Blue Demon.”

“Huh?” Fernando was stunned again.

“He’s the one who gave the task. He must have a deep understanding of Alfonsol. Do you have a better source?” Arnold asked in a vague smile.

“B-But...” Fernando was full of concerns. At this moment, Douglas interjected, “Go now. There won’t be a problem.”

He seems to understand the president’s meaning between the lines? Fernando looked at Douglas and then at President Arnold. But why did he not understand?

Suddenly, he felt that he was somewhat silly before the two of them...

Before he left, Douglas went to Fernando with a few black books and notebooks. “A kid so interested in mathematics is hard to come by. Here are some files of mine from the past. Please give them to Sharp and ask him to forward them to Hathaway. There isn’t anything about magic in them.”

Fernando nodded. “Right, I need to offer her a few mathematical books too.”

Chapter 872: Intelligence

872 Intelligence

The Roasted Fish Hotel was as old and unpopulated as before in the late night. It seemed unchanged, but Fernando did not have the courage to approach. After leaving a mark in the agreed-upon area, he went into a slum not far away and hid on a tree, staring at the ragged houses down below.

When the moon rose to the apex, a person approached the ragged houses by stepping on the silver brilliance on the ground.

Confirming that nobody followed the guy, Fernando drifted down from the tree and said with a low voice, "Old man, you are not dead yet!"

"I'll be alive even after you are dead!" The newcomer was Old Green.

As per President Arnold's order, he stayed in the Roasted Fish Hotel and kept in touch with "Blue Grace" Sharp, but he was no longer involved in the relay and communication of the sorcerers within the Union.

Fernando snorted. "Old man, tell Sharp that we have decided to accept the mission to assassinate Alfonsol. We would like him to provide all the files he has on Alfonsol."

"What? You've truly decided to kill Alfonsol? Has the president contracted your madness?" Old Green couldn't be more surprised. In his eyes, it would only infuriate the Church, and there was not the slightest chance of success. If anything, the whole Union might be destroyed!

Fernando looked at Old Green in mockery. "Cowards do not understand the significance of risks."

"You seem confident." Having lived for almost two hundred years, Old Green had plenty of experience. He noticed the change in the situation from Fernando's mockery.

"Cowards are also sensitive." Fernando did not have the virtue of respecting the old at all. However, as a sorcerer who made it out of death and blood alive too many times, he did not forget to remind Old Green. "Don't let Sharp know that we are kind of confident."

He stressed "kind of", not telling the whole truth even though it was Old Green he was speaking to.

Old Green scorned. "Do you think I am as reckless as you? However, why are you asking Sharp for the files? Are you not scared that he'll set you up or secretly report you to the Church?"

"By the time we allure Alfonsol out, Sharp will have noticed that we've accepted the mission and are taking action. He can still report it to the Church by then. So, we might as well show him some trust right now. It is the foundation of cooperation and will save our time in intelligence collection." At first, Fernando was quite bothered by that himself. He only decided to come because President Arnold and Douglas said it was okay. However, after considering carefully, he felt that he had found the key, although he was still not as confident as the old fox.

Perhaps the old fox kept something to himself, and that was why he trusted Sharp?

Old Green nodded. "Sharp has been staying in the Roasted Fish Hotel recently. He seems to be waiting for your reply. I'll forward your words to him right now."

"Right, those mathematical books and notes are the gifts of Douglas and me for Hathaway." Fernando handed over a dozen books with black covers to Old Green.

"Do you really want Hathaway to embark on the dangerous path of magic?" Because of his relationship with Hathaway's father, Old Green had never been glad about that.

Fernando chuckled. "Hey, is that something we can control? Old man, just drop your concerns. You should find a lady and have your own children while you are not dead. Don't devote your redundant love to someone who doesn't need it."

He hid his vague caring in mockery.

Old Green was silent at first. He then heaved a long sigh. "I remember that you were such a lovely, vigorous, and stubborn kid when you just came to the magic tower. You even secretly cried when your teacher criticized you. Why is your tongue so rotten nowadays?"

Fernando blushed when his dark history was revealed. A terrible storm brewed in his eyes, but before he roared, Old Green had already vanished into the dark and returned to the Roasted Fish Hotel.

"What a wretched old man!" Eventually, Fernando could only curse in a low voice, fearing that somebody in the neighborhood would be woken up.

About ten minutes later, Old Green returned and said to Fernando solemnly, "Sharp agreed to provide Alfonsol's files. They will be given to you tomorrow at this hour."

"What's his reaction when he learns that we've accepted the task?" Fernando asked cautiously.

Old Green couldn't have neglected such details. He answered quickly without thinking, "He was a little bit surprised, but then he kept a smile of relief. Well, he also cursed, 'What a bunch of arrogant rats who do not know how weak you are. I'll watch how you get yourselves killed!'"

Fernando pictured the scene in his mind and noticed no anomaly in Sharp. So, he nodded his head. "I'll hide in your hotel and secretly observe how he delivers the files."

One couldn't be more careful at such a moment. Fernando was not an inexperienced young man.

"Right. Here's a letter from Hathaway to you and Douglas. It must've been written a couple of days ago. Sharp has been carrying it.” Old Green took out a thick envelope from his pocket.

“A letter to us? What did she write?” Fernando did not believe that Douglas and he had become Hathaway’s best friends after only talking with her twice. He was rather stunned.

After examining the letter with magic, he unfolded it carefully. The handwriting was enjoyable and feminine, but there was not a single word other than the copied mathematical questions!

“Hehe...” Fernando could only chuckle dryly about that.

.....

The next day before sunset, Fernando snuck into the Roasted Fish Hotel and hid in the kitchen behind the counter.

About half an hour after dinnertime, Sharp, who seemed to have a lump on his nose, came alone and threw a sheaf of crinkled paper to Old Green. “All the details I’m aware of are on it.”

He was no stranger to assassinations, and he knew what files were useful. After all, it was not uncommon for the knights to work with the clerics to kill sorcerers during the rise of the Church.

He snorted heavily when Old Green stared at him without saying anything. “If you question the veracity of the files, you can test them yourself. I am a customer, not a servant.”

Then, he opened his hand. “Where’s the letter?”

“What letter?” Old Green was briefly stunned.

“The letter to Hathaway. The odds that they fail are very high. If I don’t get a letter back from him one of these days, I will never get a letter from him.” Sharp despised Fernando and his colleagues’ capabilities just like before. Fernando, who was peeping from the kitchen, clenched his fists in fury.

Old Green took out the letter that was full of answers and gave it to Sharp solemnly. “You really want to kill Alfonsol?”

He keenly sensed the earnestness and the pretended I-don't-care in Sharp's attitude because they had known each other for years. Fernando, for one, couldn't notice it at all.

"What do you think?" Sharp asked back without giving a straight answer. Then, he took out another letter from his pocket. "These are Hathaway's questions after yesterday's learning."

Fernando did not need to read the letter to know what was on it.

After Sharp had a glass of liquor and a roasted fish and was about to leave, he suddenly winked at the wall of the kitchen.

"He discovered me..." After a while, Fernando walked out of the kitchen and said at the darkness where Sharp disappeared.

Old Green chuckled. "When we were on adventures in the past, he was always best at discovering the hiders. Or maybe he has special tricks. I forgot to tell you earlier."

Fernando had no time to roar at him. He read the intelligence provided by Sharp carefully.

.....

"Based on Sharp's files and other sources of intelligence, it can be seen that Alfonsol is a very tough man who loathes sorcerers. He is rigorous if not ferocious. He's good at battles, with many famous cases. He's very unfriendly to the nobles. It is because of his contradictions with the Violet family that the pope dispatched him to our place..." Two days later, in the underwater relic, Fernando briefed Alfonsol's situation to President Arnold.

Besides them, Douglas was the only person in the heavily guarded chamber. Ramon and Veronica, who were not involved in the operation, had been kept out for the sake of confidentiality.

Arnold browsed through the files and listened to Fernando. In the end, he nodded. "The intelligence is very valuable. The operation will begin probably in a day or two. You should not go out anymore. Optimize your status and wait for my message."

“Alright. I haven’t noticed anything wrong about Sharp so far.” Fernando tailed and observed Sharp in the past two days. He was rather proud that he was not discovered.

In the next two days, Douglas and Fernando exchanged knowledge and items with other people in the underwater relic like the other sorcerers did, showing no sign that they would take part in an important operation soon. However, when they were free, they did not discuss the exhausting questions anymore but kept themselves ready for battle.

After midnight of the third day, Fernando and Douglas received Arnold’s order through Whispering Wind. They left the relic and entered the woods nearby.

“Mr. President is here.” Douglas discovered Arnold earlier than Fernando did.

Before his voice died down, Arnold walked out of the darkness with a grave face; his usual smile gone. “Alfonsol has left Rentato with at least seven senior-rank red robes and divine knights. He did not ask for the cooperation of the nobles.”

Douglas nodded first, but then he slightly changed his expression. “This is...?”

It was not until then that he realized that a man covered in a black cloak was standing in the shadow next to Arnold. Vague black mist surrounded the man, making him look creepy, and he was holding a long scythe in his hands. Douglas did not sense the man at all previously!

Fernando was even more surprised. He did not realize the mysterious man with the intense air of death until Douglas reminded him!

“It’s my servant of death, a supernatural creature that equals to level nine. It is best at stealth. To be honest, I barely used it before, and few people in the Union know it. However, this operation is too important. I can only bring out my trump card first, hoping that we can finish Alfonsol in one battle...” Arnold’s graveness was gone, and he introduced it with a smile. He also told Douglas and Fernando how to cooperate with himself and the servant of death.

Douglas and Fernando both nodded in relief, glad that the president was trying his best without any reserve.

“Let’s go to Sherwell County in the north.” Arnold turned his eyes to the north.

Chapter 873: Everybody's Trick

873 Everybody's Trick

In a forest on the border between Sherwell County and Rentato, the bright fog had covered the vast territory, suppressing the sorcerers' spiritual powers and the knights' instincts.

In the last years of the elves' reign, because of the "scheme" of the Will of Abyss, many space gaps appeared on the ground. Some were tiny and disappeared on their own before long, but some further collapsed and connected different floors of the abyss, turning into the channels for the demons' invasion. Later, thanks to the help of the elven tree, the elves sealed most of the similar cracks. However, space disorder still lingered in some places, and this forest was one of such places. So, it became a good shelter for the sorcerers to hide in.

In a valley deep inside the forest, an "invisible" magic tower was enshrouded in the thick fog. This was a very important base of "Tower of Destroyers". Thanks to the environment and its mobility, even though the Church knew that plenty of sorcerers were hiding in the forest and sent many people to search, nobody had ever discovered it.

Of course, it was also because the Church was not doing its best. Right when they were tired of searching and was about to erase the forest, the war in the west broke out, and the main forces were mobilized to the front line in Aalto. So, the plan had to be put on hold.

"Cracking (Advanced), plus your 'Time Stop', will finish the battle quickly." At the edge of the valley, Priscilla, who was in a red magic robe, gave Douglas a scroll and looked at Arnold. She said with a faint smile, "It's very difficult and costly to create the scroll even for me. Old fox, I get to pick the trophies first after the battle."

Then, she paused and said, "Also, I have offered my 'Tower of Destroyers'. If the plan fails and it's destroyed by the Church, hehe...” She had a “you know what I would do” look on her face.

The magic tower, which could move and become invisible, was exactly what Tower of Destroyers was named after. After their headquarters was changed to someplace better and it was no longer useful, it was relocated here.

Fernando couldn't have seconded the way Priscilla called Arnold more. To this moment, he hadn't figured out why President Arnold was confident that Sharp would not betray them. Was it only a wild gamble? What an old fox!

Arnold said with a smile, “Although it's been almost three hundred years since you became an archmage, I am still a senior who watched you grow up. Please show me some respect.”

His evasive answer certainly did not satisfy Priscilla, who snorted heavily. “A senior? Who proposed to me at the beginning only to be refused?”

Ha.

Fernando burst into laughter when he learned the president's dark history that he did not know. He knew that Priscilla had a husband who was killed by the Church, but he did not know that she was with someone else before!

Blushing, Arnold said, “I was in my prime years back then, not nearly as old as I am right now...”

Priscilla had prepared her own way of escape. So, instead of further pursuing the question, she looked at the servant of death next to Arnold gravely and asked, “Who is this? I can tell that he is strong, but something is not right...”

“He's my servant of death, a supernatural creature equal to level nine...” Arnold explained again.

“A servant of death. No wonder it gives me the feeling of the dead.” Priscilla nodded in relief. Congus, who was behind them, said coarsely, “Old fox, after the operation succeeds, you have to lend your servant of death to me for a while. It is not normal. Perhaps it contains the mysteries of death.”

Led by Priscilla, everybody called Arnold “old fox”.

“I’ve noticed it too, but I never know why.” Arnold opened his eyes, neither declining nor accepting Congus’ request.

Congus’ eyes flashed. When he was about to continue asking, fat Nielson opened his mouth and said coldly, “Alfonsol is probably coming, and you are still in the mood of chitchatting? Are all the sorcerers of Sylvanas as unreliable as you? In that case, I would have to reconsider the dangerousness of our cooperation.”

“Hehe.” Congus shut his mouth.

Looking at Amanata who stayed in shadow quietly, Priscilla nodded. “According to the news from the south, Kritonia is still after League. So, we will stick to our plan.”

She turned around and flew back to the Tower of Destroyers. After all, Alfonsol would notice something wrong if no sorcerers were inside it.

Nielson and Congus flew in different directions, so far that it was beyond what Alfonsol could search and notice. It was also out of the range for them to reinforce the Tower of Destroyers immediately.

Amanata had long disappeared from the shadow too.

“Fernando, you set up the magic circle and keep this place in a storm, preferably for two hours.” Arnold led Douglas and Fernando into a crypt nearby and completely melted into the shadow with a weird spell.

He speculated that Alfonsol would arrive in one hour because the traitor was given a wrong location, which would mislead the enemy but eventually bring them to this place.

Boom!

Thanks to Fernando’s arrangement, bolts of lightning struck the trees, setting them on fire.

Hualala.

Clouds were gathered, and rain poured, making the place look like the end of the world. Nobody could sense anything.

Arnold was not scared that Alfonsol might discover that the storm was manipulated. After all, this place was an important base of the Tower of Destroyers. It was perfectly normal that such stealth and interference circles had been established.

Time went by one second after another. The Tower of Destroyers, in the storm and the darkness, was more and more like a monster that was about to swallow the world. Arnold and Douglas both remained absolutely calm with the spells such as Mechanized Mind.

Fernando, who did not need to attack, looked at the dark forest anxiously. If anything went wrong in the operation, half of the magic organizations in Holm would be paralyzed.

“The target is here...” The blowing wind brought Amanata’s gloomy, unemotional voice.

Even Douglas couldn’t help but stand straight, clutching the scroll of Cracking (Advanced) in his hands.

BOOM!

Several minutes later, a pillar of light enshrouded in fire descended from the sky, illuminated the darkness, and hit the Tower of Destroyers overwhelmingly.

Symbols and patterns glittered around the transparent magic tower, constructing defense magic circles that blocked the pillar of light.

At this moment, an old man in a red robe appeared in the sky. His wrinkled face was full of hate and satisfaction. Around him, several red robes and divine knights were providing protection in battle formation.

In the forest nearby, bishops, reverends, and night watchers in black gloves emerged, blocking the way and killing the hiding sorcerers.

Arnold and Douglas did not attack immediately but waited for the feedback of the other archmages.

“Hiding gold knights detected...” Congus’ voice came first from the storm.

Nielson gave a feedback very soon too. “Several senior-rank night watchers have set up a divine power circle and are ready to activate it at critical moments.”

“There are enemies in the shadow...” Amanata said simply.

“Alfonsol is rather cautious. He has brought more men than we thought. He must’ve planned to counter-ambush the enemy in case of an accident,” Arnold said to Douglas in the telepathic bond.
“Let’s do it!”

Far away, Congus, in his glamorous black robe, suddenly flew out from below the ground. The skull glistened in coldness under the bolts of lightning, and his teeth opened, letting out invisible howls.

Wu!

Above the trees, behind the rocks, and in the bushes, clerics and night watchers dashed out, screaming. Their skin began to fester, and their eyes were flashing in redness. They lunged at their companions who were struggling to resist!

After only a brief moment, they had been turned into specters!

In the meantime, skulls rose from the softened mud. Zombies and ghouls declared the arrival of the kingdom of death.

Before the hiding gold knight was able to react, he was already surrounded by the undead!

Congus did not decide to fight with his life. Naturally, he chose his spells accordingly.

On the other side, Nielson also flew out of his shelter, but his appearance had greatly changed. His fat was now tightened, filled with the patterns unique to the frost giants; his left eye popped out, turning into a brown Eye Demon with stubs floating around it; his right eye was gray and dim, and whatever it saw became a stone quickly; and pale tentacles grew out of his head and his body, as if he were a dehydrated octopus.

His mouth collapsed, baring his tusks; his right hand was full of maggots, and the incomplete fingers carried the intense stink of death; his left hand was covered in fish scales, which were mixed with electric arcs; his back had a pair of bat wings that were similar to vampires'; and the lower half of his body turned into four furry horse legs...

He looked like a monster from the worst nightmare!

Dragon breath, bolts of lightning, petrification, freezing, death summoning, ray shooting, mind stealing... Even though he was by himself, Nielson charged like a whole army of sorcerers, bringing unimaginable trouble to the night watchers, reverends, bishops, and divine knights. The divine power circle they established in secret was immediately sabotaged.

The clerics and night watchers on other directions were even more intimidated. They heard their companions scream and saw them disappearing into the darkness, but they could not find any enemy!

After Arnold gave the order, Douglas immediately tore apart the scroll of Cracking (Advanced) toward Alfonsol!

Generally speaking, Cracking (Advanced) should be performed after "Time Stop". However, since Alfonsol was confident to come and destroy the Tower of Destroyers, he was very likely to have brought extraordinary items that could resist the effect of Time Stop. Therefore, Douglas intentionally changed the order.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

Under the sudden attack, different lights burst out of Alfonsol's body, as splendid as fireworks.

He does have items that can resist Time Stop! Douglas keenly sensed it.

At this moment, an enormous shadow appeared before Alfonsol. Arnold's servant of death, dragging the long scythe, slashed at Alfonsol, forcing him to defend himself with divine power.

The intense fog of death around the servant of death blocked the subconscious attacks of the other red robes and divine knights.

Without any delay, Douglas cast "Time Stop" after the cooldown.

The spell was cast successfully. However, he discovered, to his surprise, that it was not anxiety or panic on Alfonsol's face, but a casual smile!

Chapter 874: Unexpected

874 Unexpected

Time Stop took effect. The brightness of the moon faded, the darkness was gone, the bolts of lightning were frozen in the sky, and the rainwater crystallized into peace. The whole world had nothing but vague grayness left. Alfonsol was like a bug frozen in ice when he was in the range of the spell, keeping the weird posture.

Right then, a crack passed through the stopped time and entered Douglas' ears. Then, the grayness broke inch by inch like shattered glass. The world immediately fell apart.

“Who is it?” Ever since he picked up the ninth-circle spell, Douglas had never met such a situation when he performed Time Stop. An external force had broken the effect of the spell! Even though he was good at controlling himself and had enhanced himself with many spells, he was still quite shocked.

The pieces of ice flew away, and Alfonsol was back to normal. However, the bolts of lightning were still slowed down, and the rainwater was still almost stopped. The only thing new was a glittering river from the sky that ran as unstoppably as time.

The overwhelming river of time woke everyone in the effect of Time Stop and broke the ultimate silence. Covering the forest within dozens of kilometers, the ripples made everything hazy as if they were below the water.

Arnold, Douglas, and Fernando, who were near, and Nielson, Congus, and Amanata, who were further away, all seemed to have been thrown into a transparent amber. They moved toward the river of time at the center slowly but surely. Their faces were different, with some angry and some shocked, but none of them could control themselves, just like no intelligent creature could resist the passage of time!

“Kritonia!”

Priscilla, who was in the Tower of Destroyers, was in better condition. She discovered, to her shock, that the source of the river of time was a fuzzy young man. His black hair danced crazily, his hands and his longsword were all watery, and he was looking down below with his blue eyes in mockery and pride. It was exactly “Heart of Time” Kritonia!

But according to the intelligence, Kritonia was still being distracted in the south!

After his sword slashed, the servant of death ahead of the river of time was cut from the middle without a sound, and the rotten pieces of flesh turned into ashes. His skull, hands, and ribs fell apart.

One attack of his sword was already so intimidating!

“Heart of Time?”

“Kritonia!”

“How could this happen?”

“How could he be here?”

Congus, Nielson, Douglas, and the rest of them all looked at Arnold. Hadn't he sent League to distract the man in the south? Wasn't he confirmed to be in the south from various sources?

While they looked at Arnold, they were also performing magic to free themselves. However, under the influence of the river of time, their movements and their minds had been slowed. They couldn't cast any spell quickly!

For a moment, everybody was grasped by fear, confusion, shock, and desperation.

“It's you?” Priscilla almost heard a long sigh from Arnold.

“It's me.” Someone showed up behind Kritonia. He was wrinkled with a hawk nose. It was League, the deputy president of the Union of Sorcerers, and the archmage who was dispatched to distract Kritonia!

His face was as gloomy as before, but he now put on a vicious and delightful smile. His voice echoed inside every soul. "I only sold some intelligence for my benefits, and I never thought to destroy the organization. However, you sent me on such a dangerous mission. You are to blame for your situation right now!"

"Haha. Thanks to League's intelligence, there's finally a chance to completely destroy your organizations!" Alfonsol laughed cruelly and gloatingly. The red robes and divine knights nearby quickly approached and protected him.

"Goddamn traitor!" It was the first idea that Priscilla, Nielson, Congus, and Amanata had in mind.

Fernando even roared aloud, "Old man, filthy traitor!"

Time saturated the valley and the forest like water. All the sorcerers within the range had so many mistakes casting their spells that they could not escape at all. They were devastated and frustrated. The senior-rank sorcerers like Congus began to prepare to destroy themselves in order to be resurrected in other places.

After chopping Arnold's servant of death and limiting everyone's operation, Kritonia raised his long sword again, and everybody heard his clear voice. "It's a pity that there are only a few archmages..."

Faint pride could be felt in his tone. He did not consider Arnold, Douglas, or any of them to be important at all.

Everybody looked gloomy as if death was at hand, except the lich who only had bones. The intimidation of a level-two legendary knight was not to be underestimated!

Hardly had Kritonia finished his remark when a face suddenly erupted from the darkness behind him. The face was enormous and covered in a black hood. His eyes were two pale fires, and he opened his mouth letting out syllables that nobody else could hear, as if he were the God of Death reincarnated!

A black swirl emerged from the bottom of Kritonia's feet and enshrouded him and League.

The swirl was as blurry as smoke. Dozens of clerics and night watchers below the senior rank did nothing except to watch it, but their bodies quickly decayed into skeletons at a loss!

The bones of the servant of death that Kritonia minced just now exploded and released pale smoke that instantly consumed the forest and the valley. The skull, on the other hand, sprang and fell at the center of the enormous face, forcing a tall, slim figure with a long black robe behind in midair. The faces of souls surrounded him and cried miserably, as if they were praising and singing for him!

The figure was very similar to the servant of death just now, except that the black scythe had been raised, as if it was ready to reap lives.

“Ahh!!!”

In the pale smoke, a red robe suddenly screamed. His soul was extracted from his shell and melted into the smoke.

The souls of many other reverends, bishops, night watchers, and divine knights also flew out and joined the carnival of spirits in the smoke. Trees withered, and creatures decayed. Except for the sorcerers and few clerics, the place was already a lifeless realm of the dead!

The pale smoke began to constrict, and the fuzzy faces of pain and fear drifted in it, constructing a cage that trapped the black swirl.

A crack suddenly appeared on the black swirl, and the watery ripples spread out. In the meantime, a red robe and a divine knight behind Alfonsol suddenly went on a rampage. One of them summoned a firestorm, and the other destroyed himself. Alfonsol, caught unprepared, was shattered into pieces.

“You?” Alfonsol, who was still gloating, did not see it coming at all. Vague shock was left behind even though he was dead.

Kritonia, with the longsword of time, broke out of the black swirl and happened to catch the scene. League, however, had been transformed into a dry corpse that did not have any water. He fell from the sky, and none of his life-preserving spells proved useful. Disbelief and fright were frozen on his face.

“Brain Scourge, Memory Meddling, Death Storm, Fog of Spirits...” Kritonia mumbled something first before he looked at the mysterious person outside of the mist in solemnity and surprise who was being “admired” by the souls. “Tannanois...”

While he talked, his body became fuzzy, and he flashed forward unpredictably with his longsword, as if he were traveling in different spaces, to avoid the blockage of the Fog of Spirits.

The changes happened so fast that Priscilla, Nielson, and the rest of them did not realize what was happening at all until they heard Kritonia’s words.

“The Liege of Death!”

Nielson couldn’t have sounded more delighted.

“The Liege of Death!”

Congus, Priscilla, and Amanata, on the other hand, were so surprised that they found it hard to believe.

Douglas was the first to come back to himself, but he did not intervene a moment ago because he realized he wasn’t capable enough to be involved at all!

At this moment, he looked at Arnold in confusion, amusement, and shock. How did his servant of death turn into “Liege of Death” Tannanois, who was the top legend in the past and the last consul of the Asso Empire? How many things had the guy kept a secret?

“Old fox, what is this all about?” Fernando roared, feeling that he had been tricked. His participation in the operation mattered little!

Arnold did not seem surprised at all. He coughed and said, “Let’s get out of here first. Or maybe, do you want to be involved in a battle of legends?”

As he spoke, a colorful rainbow flew out of his hands and exploded into brilliant fireworks in the sky.

Having no time to inquire and “beat” Arnold, Priscilla glared at him and let the Tower of Destroyers run. Congus, Nielson, and Amanata turned around and left on their own for the rendezvous that they agreed upon earlier.

Douglas and Fernando followed Arnold to escape through the forest. Suddenly, they sensed something and raised their hands, only to discover that a gap was ripped in the sky of the battle, and a slim old man walked out with his eyes closed. From the north, a cold and beautiful girl who looked like an ice sculpture was also approaching.

“Mental Storm!”

“Aurora Wall!”

Two sophisticated voices came from far away. Fernando glared at Arnold. “So, the real target of the operation is actually ‘Heart of Time’? What was League all about? Has the Liege of Death been restored to level three?”

“Cough. As I said before, sometimes, the traitors are more valuable to us than they are to our enemy.” Arnold looked at him with a smile.

Chapter 875: 875 Arnold's Wish

875 Arnold's Wish

Fernando felt that he was almost choked and could barely breathe at all. The old fox had deceived them all! To make things worse, he even gave a clue in advance. It seemed that the guy was watching them to be misled as if he were enjoying a play!

No wonder he was not worried at all that "Blue Grace" Sharp would regret and turn them in!

Holding back his fury, Fernando flew out of the forest with Arnold. The aftermath of a battle of legends could very likely destroy this place!

"Has the Liege of Death recovered the strength of level three?" Douglas repeated one of Fernando's questions. At this moment, he cared about the strengths of the two parties more than anything else, and the details could be left for discussion when it was over.

Light and shadows were changing deep inside the forest, as if countless phantoms were wandering inside. It was most intimidating. Arnold narrowed his eyes and looked back, smiling like a real fox. "The Liege of Death was heavily wounded by the pope. His body, his soul, and his phylactery were all broken, and he almost completely perished. Fortunately, it was not God's Arrival that the pope used.

"Later, the Liege of Death was revived as an alchemical life through the soul core that he preserved through legendary arts and by melting the soul pieces of other people. Then, he reshaped his body."

In the telepathic bond, he told them about the Liege of Death unhurriedly, as if he did not have any doubt about the outcome of the battle at all. After all, the Liege of Death used to be a top legend who commanded a legion of the undead. Even though he was not as strong as before, it shouldn't be a problem for him to deal with the Heart of Time who hadn't reached level three yet.

“However, the main consciousness was prone to the conflicts of the soul pieces. Most of the magic models were incomplete. As a result, he failed to recover his peak strength for a long time.

“A dozen years ago, based on his research and understanding of the soul, Tannanois finally absorbed the other pieces and regained the strength of level-three legendary. Perhaps he will return to the peak in a few decades.”

“Then the battle shouldn’t be a problem...” Fernando said subconsciously.

The conclusion was based on reality. After the prolonged War of Dawn, everybody knew clearly that sorcerers were stronger than knights and clerics of the same level. However, the time it took for sorcerers to grow was much longer. That was why they were left behind.

Also, necromancers, who represented death, resurrection, and life, were among the sorcerers with the highest combat abilities thanks to their profound understanding of the soul. They were also more fatal and unpredictable!

Therefore, even though Kritonia had the mutated bloodline of the dragons of time, there was no chance for him to defeat a necromancer who was one level higher than him. All it remained to be seen was whether or not he could seize the momentary opportunity to flee.

Arnold smiled and did not respond to Fernando. Instead, he offered to explain the operation to them. “As a matter of fact, when I contacted Red Eye, Supreme Soul, and the other groups, I attempted to greet the three legends and received a satisfactory answer.”

They had already reached the edge of the black forest. So, they turned around and looked at the battlefield of the top legends again.

At this moment, in the middle of the fog where countless souls were struggling, a hazy flickering light dashed out. All the obstacles on its way seemed illusory and could not stop it at all, as if they were in different spaces.

“The power of space and time is indeed remarkable...” Douglas remarked in the telepathic bond.

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when the sky, which was slightly brightened by the snow, dimmed again. An enormous dragon hovered and descended. All its muscles were rotten, and pus was flowing everywhere. He was also breathing pale fire.

It was a “dragon lich”, a legendary undead creature!

The dragon of death unfolded its wings and covered half of the forest in absolute darkness. The fading light of time was consumed. It could only be vaguely seen that the light was still struggling and falling apart.

In the sky around, two gigantic shadows emerged again. One of them was a mummy that was covered in brown cloth. It was so strong that Douglas and Fernando could perceive it clearly from far away. The other was a monster that had only skeletons left. It was even more gargantuan than the dragon lich, like the bones left by the legendary monsters in the Boundless Ocean.

The two undead creatures that were undoubtedly legendary joined the deep darkness that the dragon lich created. Therefore, the last haziness of the light was eclipsed.

In the forest, zombies, mummies, ghosts, spirits, skinless dogs, and other undead creatures climbed and covered the darkness like a surging tide.

“A legendary necromancer is truly horrifying, particularly one who grasps the tough legion of the undead. Kritonia is doomed...” Knowing a lot about necromancy, Fernando was quite astounded by what he saw.

For the other legendary classes of the school of necromancy, like the Great Master of Paleness or Demigod-lich, although they also had plenty of “helpers”, they could not compare to the Liege of Death. Those two classes were more focused on mysterious skills and soul attacks.

If the pope hadn't destroyed the Liege of Death's main legion, he would have resisted most legends of Holm on his own. It must be noted that he had two level-three servants of death in his prime days!

The forest was absolutely quiet without any noise. It was both weird and terrifying, making it impossible for them to know the progress of the battle. Therefore, Fernando could only move his eyes back and continue, "A satisfactory answer?"

Did the old fox not mention that only by winning the support of nobles could the organizations that had three legendary sorcerers be convinced to join? Was it another lie?

Arnold looked at him and Douglas and said calmly, "Although His Excellency Tannanois is unsatisfied with the empire's decision and unwilling to go to Aalto to help, as one of the top experts in the world, he understands the situation very well and knows that this is the final chance to save himself!

"While the main force of the Church is stalled by Abel, Dracula, Danisos, and the other legends in the west, he has to save himself! After everything is settled, he will be no better than a rat in the gutter!

"This is the last chance. It is either death or a better life. Everybody knows it very well. Even if I did not greet them, they would've taken some action recently."

Then, Arnold chuckled. "They did not pay much attention to us at the beginning, but Sharp's contract inspired me to plan this operation. The real target has always been Kritonia since the very beginning."

"No wonder you were so enthusiastic about Sharp's random contract without much confirmation!" Fernando felt even more frustrated that he did not see that. In retrospect, he realized that the old fox was too passionate!

Arnold smiled and did not say anything. Douglas, on the other hand, nodded his head. “Even we were convinced that it was meant to kill Alfonsol. How could Kritonia have suspected us?”

“But what if League was not a traitor, and the Heart of Time did not come?” Fernando already knew that Sharp’s contract was only a disguise to cover the real target, but he still had doubts.

Arnold grimaced like a fox that had just stolen a chicken. “Then, our real target would’ve been Alfonsol. By killing him, we will raise the contradictions between the nobles and the Church to win a living space for ourselves.”

Huh? Fernando looked at Arnold in shock, having trouble following his explanation.

Arnold chuckled. “First of all, you need to remember our path— attract the nobles and sow discord between them and the Church. Therefore, either attacking the Heart of Time or killing Alfonsol is for the purpose, although the former is more effective than the latter.

“If the former cannot be accomplished, the latter will be our Plan B. It’s much more than a disguise.”

Fernando listened attentively and felt that he grasped something essential. For the first time, he wanted the old fox to talk.

Arnold turned his eyes to Douglas and smiled. “In order to achieve a purpose, you cannot create a plan that is so delicate that any accident in any procedure will result in failure because there are too many accidents in actual operations.

“The key to any operation is hiding, pretending, and lying. Hide your real purpose and pretend it to be something else that will actually help you accomplish your real purpose. That’s the only way to avoid your failure because the enemy’s sabotage will only indirectly help you. Both pretending and lying will require the support of detailed intelligence...”

Flying out of the forest, he talked eloquently with his hands behind his back with the utmost ease. Fernando was so stunned that he cursed to himself, This is truly an old fox!

However, why was he not so elaborate before?

Douglas listened carefully and shared similar feelings as Fernando. Until the battle of Antiffler, he had been focused on research and rejected by other sorcerers. He barely had any experience of making plans and arranging operations. He picked up something during his escape, but he was still immature. After hearing Arnold's interpretation, he immediately felt that he understood a lot of new things.

Realizing something, he asked, "Mr. President, are you teaching me a lesson?"

He called the man respectfully.

Arnold turned around and looked at the forest that was still covered in absolute darkness, before he said with mixed feelings. "However strange your questions are, you are the sorcerer with the greatest potential of leadership in the Union. Fernando is smart enough, but he is too impatient and reckless. So, I need to tell you some of my experience before I die."

"Old fox!"

"Old fox!"

"Mr. President..."

Arnold raised his hands and stopped them before he went on, "In the war that devastates the sorcerers, so many legends have passed away. Why do you think I am safe? Maybe I'll be killed by grand cardinals, legendary knights, or night watchers at some point. I am not any luckier than other people. Or maybe in another hundred years, I will die of old age. This is a natural law that cannot be broken unless I become a legendary sorcerer.

"My greatest wish right now is to see the sorcerers back to the supreme place of this world and reestablish a glorious magic empire."

His eyes did not leave the battlefield of legends, and he said in a low voice, “I wonder if I can live long enough to see that...”

My only wish is to watch you return to supremacy when I am still alive!

His back was slightly hunched, and his white hair was so obvious.

At this moment, an unimaginably dazzling light burst out in the darkness and illuminated the world.

Chapter 876: Cooperation

876 Cooperation The dark curtain was dissolved, and brightness leaked through the sky. Surging ripples spread out as if they came from the ancient times, wiping all the dust on the way.

In front of time, everything was dust!

In the middle of the ripples, a person passed through the wall made of aurora like a slippery fish and broke out of the heavy siege before the fog of spirits regathered.

The power of time was everywhere!

The person was much dimmer than before, and the pride and confidence could no longer be felt. The moment he left the absolute darkness, he hurried to turn into many hazy rays of light and opened the barrier of space and time, teleporting far away.

Right then, a black enormous scythe, carrying the deepest and heaviest death, slashed from the sky abruptly, as if it had been waiting for the opportunity all the time. It hit the hazy light in the center brutally.

“Ahh!!!”

The miserable screams echoed on everybody’s heart as if they were from the future, making their body tremble.

The light was cut from the middle into two parts.

The former half leaped into the space-time gap that was just torn open without considering anything, and the latter half exploded violently, miring the scythe of death in the thick ocean of time. It was slowed to the minimum.

“Hooooooooo!”

A dragon roared, and a pale fire followed the light and shadow into the gap. Then, the gap was closed, and the space and time were back to normal, except that painful moans were still echoing in the sky.

“He’s not dead?” In the place that they agreed upon, Priscilla found it impossible to close her mouth.

During her escape, she had been paying attention to the battle of top legends. She knew what great powers were trying to kill Kritonia. There were one level-three legendary sorcerer, two level-one legendary sorcerers, one undead creature that equaled level-two legendary, and two undead creatures equaled level-one legendary. Even if the saint in the Radiance Church were here, he would’ve also perished. However, Kritonia had successfully escaped!

Even though he was heavily wounded, he should be proud of himself for being able to escape!

Not far away from her, the needle-like redness in Congus’ hollow eye sockets was bouncing intensely. “Is the power of time so remarkable?”

He ascribed the result to the space-time tower that was in the highest place in magic. It had to be noted that the former pope did not use God of Truth when he “killed” the Liege of Death. At that time, nobody knew that the Saint Truth had such a terrifying divine power. It was not until Aflora and her partner, Danisos, two primordial dragons of time, attacked Lance at the invitation of the consul of the Sylvanas Magic Empire that the world finally witnessed the godly power that surpassed everything.

The result was that Aflora, who only backed off to the Dark Mountain Range and never gave in even during the heyday of the Magic Empires, completely perished, and Danisos was heavily wounded even though he only took to the aftermath.

The battle demonstrated the power of God’s Arrival, but it also proved the formidableness of the power of space and time, which had forced the former pope to perform God’s Arrival.

After that, the former pope and the current pope had each used

God's Arrival once, and their opponents were the god of the Sun Church and the Light of Stars. Both of them were the experts of space and time. The Light of Stars, in particular, had the help of the defense of Antiffler that was perfected for almost ten thousand years. He was believed to be the most likely person to resist God's Arrival. However, after one attack, he was killed, and the city was destroyed. All the living sorcerers were intimidated from the bottom of their hearts.

Looking at the closed space-time gap in the sky, Amanata suddenly appeared from the shadow, unable to hide perfectly anymore.

"This... This doesn't make any sense..." Nielson, who was from the Asso Empire, could not believe that the Liege of Death failed to kill a level-two legendary knight with the help of another two legendary sorcerers!

Besides their shock, they were also disappointed. They thought that Kritonia, a nightmare for the sorcerers of Holm, would end here today, but his capabilities were truly beyond imagination!

Douglas, who was not far away from the meeting place, looked at the sky in slight confusion. He also found it more or less unacceptable. Although he was prepared that Kritonia might escape after the battle, he felt that it was rather unreal after it did happen.

Fernando even exclaimed in shock, "He escaped? Which legend started the research on the space-time bloodline?"

He couldn't have admired the legend more for developing such a cheating blood power.

"It's said to be Viken, the King of Calamities. He was definitely among the top three legendary sorcerers who studied bloodline melting. Of course, rumors have it that he was not very good at the power of space and time, and it was co-developed by him and Maskelyne. However, the space-time bloodline never distinguished itself until the mutations in Kritonia, which let people know the preciousness of the space-time blood power..." Arnold explained. He was as casual as before. He was not surprised at all that Kritonia broke out of the siege.

“So, it was Viken and Maskelyne...” Fernando repeated. Before he invoked their titles, he looked at Arnold suspiciously. “Old fox, you don’t seem nervous and disappointed, right?”

“I am very disappointed and nervous,” Arnold replied with a smile.

“I don’t see it.” Fernando glared at Arnold and speculated, “Actually, you intentionally let go of him, didn’t you? Or maybe, did something else happen in the darkness?”

“Haha. How would I know? I wasn’t there,” Arnold said with an innocent look on his face.

Douglas nodded, deep in thought. “In any case, Kritonia also belongs to the nobles, and killing him will raise the panic and counterattack of nobles. It may be better to...”

“Hehe.” Arnold smiled but did not say anything. Pointing at Priscilla who was at the entrance of the cave far away, he said, “Let’s go and talk to them first.”

At this moment, Priscilla also saw Arnold. Immediately, scorching fireballs emerged and flew around her before she grimaced. “Old fox, come here and explain what happened. I promise I won’t beat you!”

“We can already talk well over such a distance.” Arnold scratched his beard and took a step back.

“You owe us an explanation.” Congus flew over. Since he only had bones, it was difficult to tell what was on his mind.

Arnold’s smile was gone. He told everybody what he said to Douglas and Fernando earlier solemnly and sincerely.

“Do you mean that the few legends are willing to work with us? To what extent?” As the leader of an organization, Priscilla had already recovered from the fury of being deceived and began to consider the situation carefully.

Arnold looked at them. “It depends on our negotiation and the countermeasures of the Church. However, it shouldn’t be a problem to reach a preliminary agreement.”

“Yes. Now that a level-nine bishop is killed, the Church will definitely hunt harder. The two grand cardinals and the few legendary knights will all be deployed. We have to stay away for now.” For the first time since he came to the party in Allyn, Nielson spoke in a rather friendly tone and attitude.

Since even the Liege of Death was willing to cooperate and forget the unpleasant experience in the past for now, it seemed unnecessary for him to cling to it.

The moment he finished his sentence, the darkness around suddenly split, and a necromancer with an enormous black scythe floating on his head walked out. He was entirely covered in a black robe. The only thing that could be seen was the two red spots in the shadow of his hood.

Behind him, fuzzy souls were screaming, moaning, and crying around him, as if they were expressing fear and submission.

“You are the dominator of death and the will of immortality.” Arnold, Nielson, Priscilla, Douglas, and the other sorcerers all held their chests and their foreheads while they recited the tributes for the Liege of Death.

Remembering the tributes for every legendary sorcerer was a mandatory subject for every magic apprentice. Thankfully, there weren’t too many legendary sorcerers.

“‘Escape’ is better than death...” The voice of the Liege of Death sounded like from a distant past—weary, gloomy, and lifeless. However, before he finished his sentence, he raised his head abruptly and looked at the sky before he vaguely said, “It has begun...”

It has begun? Including old fox Arnold, all the sorcerers looked at the sky after him.

They saw that the sky, which had been dim and starless previously, turned clear and bright at some point. A dazzling, dreamy silver moon struck the sky with a chilly brilliance.

Then, it was drowned by an infinite light.

“That was...?” All the illusions were gone, and the sky became dark and gloomy again. Having vaguely sensed something, Arnold asked half in panic and half in expectation.

Douglas seemed to have returned to the nightmare in the past. He asked at a loss, “God’s Arrival?”

As far as he knew, God’s Arrival couldn’t be seen by people in other places unless it attacked a target who was at very high altitudes. According to the records, the demigods such as the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss could not attack across the continent. However, there was one exception. The battle with the demigod could be seen wherever the silver moon could be seen. That was Alterna, the God of Silver Moon.

“Have the demigods finally been involved?” Priscilla felt that so many things had happened tonight that they did not seem like a coincidence at all!

Fat Nielson asked in a hurry, “Mr. Tannanois, has the Silver Moon blocked God’s Arrival?”

The Liege of Death heaved a long and soft sigh. “The moon has fallen...”

Chapter 877: Reaction

Chapter 877 Reaction

“The moon has fallen?” Both Arnold and Douglas were greatly surprised by the Liege of Death’s sigh. They both raised their heads and looked at the dark sky. Their eyes glittered in different colors with magic, which allowed them to see through the clouds and catch the chilly, hazy moon!

The moon hadn’t really fallen!

The sorcerers were greatly relieved and canceled the vision effect provided by magic. If Demigod Alterna, who allegedly would never die as long as the moon was high, was killed by God’s Arrival, they would not stand a chance at all!

However, according to what the Liege of Death said just now, even the Silver Moon failed to block God’s Arrival?

Even a demigod could not resist an attack of God’s Arrival?

After feeling lucky briefly, they were grasped by intense disappointment and confusion. Priscilla, Nielson, Congus, and the other sorcerers were very frustrated. Was the pope so powerful? Was it possible at all to defeat him? Did the Liege of Death feel frustrated too? In his prime years, the pope never bothered to perform “God’s Arrival” on him, not to mention right now!

“Let’s go back now and discuss other things after the Church’s counterattack is over.” A hazy mist rose before the Liege of Death. After the mist faded, he vanished.

Arnold calmed down and resumed his smile. “Whatever the pope does, we have to do what we have to do. Maybe he has to pay a high price to use God’s Arrival... Doesn’t he? We must lie low and do not take any action for a while. However, we must pay attention to the relationship changes between the nobles and the Church.”

“We aren’t that stupid although we have indeed been fooled once,”

Priscilla snorted. "You said that the grand nobles such as the Blue Demon would be inclined to help us. I hope that we can see something soon!"

She was bewildered by the beautiful prospect before!

Looking at the other people who obviously wanted to beat him up, Arnold smiled dryly. "Rest assured. There won't be a problem. We will observe and contact Sharp closely."

"We will be on our way." Priscilla held herself back from throwing a giant fireball at the man. She raised her head and looked at the sky while sighing gloomily. "I don't know when we can see the dawn..."

"After the dawn, there will be a surging tide..." Nielson's ruby eyes carried vague depression and sadness. His tone was different from Priscilla's, as he was concerned about the Church's retaliation.

Arnold chuckled. "Even Mr. Tannanois is not anxious. Why should we be? He will be the primary target for the Church after all this."

The Liege of Death's attitude just now made him feel that things might change, and the Church's counterattack might not be too strong.

"I hope you are not lying this time," Priscilla said casually and flew back into the Tower of Destroyers that had already turned transparent.

After the other sorcerers left, Douglas finally opened his mouth. "Could League have revealed the place where Allyn is buried?"

"No!" Arnold replied without any hesitation, as if he had been following League and knew everything.

Sensing his confidence, Fernando was greatly enlightened. "Brain Scourge and Memory Meddling... Since a long time ago, League has... Old fox, you lied to me again!"

He was too young and inexperienced, and his smartness could not make up for his personality flaws yet. So, he could not help but feel he was too naive to believe the old fox's explanation!

"If you still get tricked by me more often now, few people will be able to trick you in the future." Arnold looked at him gently. "Look at Douglas. He sensed something earlier, but he pretended that he did not know it because it did not affect him at all. Instead of unveiling me, he asked questions when he needed to."

After Fernando's teacher passed away, he had been learning on his own, but he also received a lot of guidance from his teacher's good friend, President Arnold. Otherwise, he wouldn't have become a seventh-circle sorcerer at such a young age at all!

Of course, he was only young compared to other senior-rank sorcerers.

"The day will come when I listen to your lies and enjoy them as jokes," Fernando admitted that the old fox had a point, but he was reluctant to openly acknowledge it.

Douglas smiled warmly. "I'm relieved after confirming that. Mr. President, I will stay in Allyn for the time being. If you have magic questions or any experience in plan-making that you would like to teach me, please come to Allyn. Of course, if I have questions, I will also write to you."

He had basically figured out Arnold's personalities. Not as restrained as before, he made fun of the guy.

"The youngsters nowadays have fewer and fewer manners. I have to come to Allyn in person?" Arnold intentionally sighed. Although Douglas was rather old, he was still a young man compared to Arnold who had lived almost a thousand years. "Fine. Just don't tear Allyn down. I'm planning to study it when I have time."

Then, he turned around and looked at Fernando. "You keep in touch with Old Green and watch over Sharp. Whether the Church kills him or not, the situation will still be in our favor. Hehe, Fernando, if there's a chance, you should turn into a girl with that belt and work as Hathaway's governess."

“Get lost!” Fernando roared angrily. He vaguely understood why Kritonia was let go of. However, he couldn’t have gotten out of this so easily, could he?

...

In the forest where the fog was lingering, the Liege of Death roamed with the black scythe floating above his head. He had returned to the place.

“How is the Silver Moon?” He suddenly spoke to the dark, rotten forest where nobody was around with his usual voice that sounded like from a grave.

“Based on the blood ties, I sense that the wounds are not fatal, but the recovery will take a long time.” The empty darkness suddenly rolled and gathered into a person. He wore a red shirt and a black jacket with a collar that reached his head. His silver hair dangled to his shoulder. His eyes were as attractive as the moon in the sky. His face was flawless and even more beautiful than the ladies’. One might even say that it was eccentric.

He looked at the Liege of Death with a smile and said regretfully, “Why does every legendary sorcerer of the school of necromancy make themselves so creepy and hideous? What a pure and innocent young man you were when I just met you...”

“How is the pope?” The Liege of Death had long learned to ignore the guy’s meaningless topic.

“After Tria was occupied, he returned to Lance. Maybe we can look forward to certain situations.” The silver-haired man shook his head. “Abel is dead, and I am very sad, but I am even sadder about your current look. What a shame...”

“Abel is dead? Dracula must be very happy...” The Liege of Death was briefly stunned.

...

In the Radiance Church in Rentato...

“The Liege of Death joined hands with the Witch of Iceland and the Eye of Curse? He has recovered to level three?” Same as all the other men of the Gusta Empire, ‘Graceful Angel’ Francois had a thick beard. His face had been worn out by time, but his green eyes did not age at all and remained profound and sacred.

He seized the key of Kritonia’s report very quickly.

Kritonia coughed. “Yes. Without him, neither the Witch of Iceland nor the Eye of Curse would’ve caused any trouble. Most of my current wounds were made by him.”

His body had been cut from the waist, with only half left. The flesh was wriggling and growing, trying to recuperate, but it only decayed into stinky, yellowish pus nonstop.

Francois performed ‘God’s Healing’ while he asked about the details of the battle. In the end, he nodded his head. “You were the only one who could’ve escaped by bursting out the power of space and time. If it were me, I must’ve died already.”

The red robes who were summoned were astounded first and then infuriated. The sorcerers, who were being chased after like stray dogs, were bold enough to set up Alfonsol and attack the Heart of Time?

They were outraged now that their sense of superiority was broken. They shouted, “Lord Francois, we must let the sorcerers know that the world belongs to the Lord now!”

“My lord, order the legendary knights in all countries to take action! All the sorcerers involved in this must be judged!”

“Let’s restore the previous rules. Nobles or not, all the suspects should be captured and burnt!”

“Sharp must be sentenced for betraying the Lord and conspiring with the sorcerers to kill Alfonsol!”

“Lord Francois, please send me to capture Sharp!”

They urged, trying to vent their fury and judge the blasphemous nobles and sorcerers.

Looking at them calmly, Francois did not open his mouth until they all calmed down. "It was only Sharp's random contract. He hoped that the sorcerers would leave after realizing the gap between them and us. There's no evidence that he was directly involved in the operation to assassinate Alfonsol."

"But in any case, it was blasphemy and betrayal that he did not kill the sorcerers on the spot! He deserves to be burnt!" A giant of the Inquisition shouted.

"He's a noble and one of the Sword of Truth's most trusted subordinates," Francois said at ease.

Another red robe said regretfully, "So what? Without us, they would've been the sorcerers' dogs. It is the Lord who gives them a new life and their current position, and this is how they are repaying the Lord? We must let the nobles know that the Lord is supreme and that they have no privileges before the Lord! Lord Francois, ask for the help of His Holiness. Since some of the nobles are untrustworthy, we should purge them at the same time."

He also knew that they were short of hands to accomplish the mission, so he encouraged Francois to ask for the reinforcement of saints from the pope.

"I can absolutely understand your fury. I want to judge the Liege of Death and Sharp as much as you do," Francois said peacefully before he suddenly changed the topic. "However, there is something that I have to tell you. Last night, Abel and Dracula, two top legendary vampires, attacked the pope together, and the Silver Moon took action, too..."

Huh?

Everybody was shocked. They looked at Francois in confusion. Had His Holiness died?

His face unchanged, Francois said, "Having no choice, His Holiness used God's Arrival twice in a row. He killed Abel and heavily wounded the Silver Moon. However, due to his poor conditions, he has returned to Lance, and the war westwards has been stuck in Tria.”

Then, he sighed. “It’s possible that we will have a new pope very soon.”

Chapter 878: The Change of the Nobles Attitude

Chapter 878 The Change of the Nobles“ Attitude

Rentato's night was no different from any other cities'. Except for the cathedrals and the district of nobles that were illuminated by the everlasting light, the other places only had the light of the moon or the stars. Therefore, at such a pitch-dark night, Rentato was particularly cold and gloomy. The only thing that could be seen was the occasional lanterns.

“Blue Grace” Sharp stood next to the window in his bedroom and looked at the darkness outside attentively, as if the darkness that had nothing worth appreciating was the greatest significance of his life.

He raised his right hand and touched the lump on his nose. His vigorous blue eyes carried slight uneasiness. Other people might not know that Alfonsol, a giant of the Inquisition, had already left to hunt the sorcerers of the Tower of Destroyers. However, as the deputy captain of the Sword of Truth's Knights and one of the king's most trusted subordinates, he had enough sources for him to learn the fact. Therefore, he was waiting for an outcome.

Dum, dum, dum.

Somebody rushed close fast, with the thudding noises of iron boots and the clinking noises of his armor.

“Captain...” The knight who came to deliver the message breathed heavily. It took him only one minute to reach Lord Sharp's villa. “The Heart of Time is back, heavily wounded. Alfonsol and all the clerics and night watchers he brought were killed!”

“The Heart of Time?” Unusually, Sharp failed to control his face. He was puzzled why Kritonia was involved in all this.

“The message is from the Radiance Church, but the details are unknown.” The knight said in a hurry, “Captain, Kritonia accuses you of conspiring with the sorcerers to kill Alfonsol. He said that he came late and could only save his own life. He apparently wants you dead!”

The royal family had bribed a lot of bishops of the Holm parish, who were not strong or prominent but could deliver intelligence at the critical moments.

“Alfonsol saw through it. Or maybe somebody sold the operation plan to Kritonia. However, if he was involved, why is Alfonsol still dead, and why was he heavily wounded...” Sharp was in such confusion that he forgot he was in danger himself. He could not figure out the reason at all.

The knight suddenly fell on his knees; his armor bashing into the floor heavily. He cried, “Captain, you should run! The Church won’t let go of you! They need a scapegoat for their failure! They will set you on fire! As long as you hide until His Majesty is back, you will be innocent again!”

After a brief silence, Sharp held back his confusion and worries and said to his subordinate with his usual leadership, “If I run, it will mean that I admit my crimes. I don’t believe that the Church will sentence a duke to death with no evidence except for the jibber-jabber of the sorcerers, which would chill and terrify all the nobles.”

It was one of the scenarios he had in mind in case the operation failed and a sorcerer confessed after being captured. He had been prepared for that and believed nothing would happen to him under the king’s protection. The only thing that bothered him was that the accusation was from Kritonia, another duke and a legendary knight. It was much more powerful than he imagined!

Clang!

The window quivered, and a cluster of fire penetrated through, turning into a brawny, tough-looking man in short hair.

“Captain, run now! Some red robe proposed to capture you!” He was “Demon Igniter” Gourcuff.

Sharp clenched his right fist, but he was still calm. “Don’t worry. It’s just regular capture and interrogation. They have no evidence. I’ll be fine. If I run now, I will never be able to explain myself.”

“My lord, you cannot trust the Church. In the past, they judged many nobles that they were only suspicious of and sentenced them to death!” While Gourcuff admired the deputy captain for being so calm and steady in such a dangerous moment, he was still quite anxious because Francois might be on his way!

Sharp shook his head and grabbed the hilt of his longsword. “They are all nobles below the rank of an earl, and I am a duke accoladed by His Majesty in person.”

“My lord...” Gourcuff almost decided to drag the deputy captain to flee, but Sharp’s determined attitude made him hesitate. “Why don’t you hide in the Nekso Palace for now? I don’t think the Church dares to break in. You can wait until His Majesty returns.”

“About that...” Sharp was tempted.

At this moment, a bolt of lightning struck in the sky, and a young man who had few strands of hair, which were all standing, appeared in his bedroom. He was surrounded by silver electric arcs, and his pupils and his skin were in the unusual silver colors. “My lord, the Radiance Church has decided not to capture you. Instead, a red robe is sent to appease you.”

He was another one of Sharp’s deputies, “Argent Punishment” Cesc.

“What?” It was Gourcuff and the knight who came earliest who exclaimed in shock.

“Did something happen?” Sharp, as their leader, was equally astonished, but he still pretended to be cool on the surface.

Cesc shrugged. “I don’t know. We haven’t received any updates yet. Maybe they just decided to respect the nobles...”

His words were full of intense sarcasm.

Very soon, a red robe indeed came and forwarded Francois' comfort to Sharp. He was told that the Liege of Death set up a trap, heavily wounding Kritonia and killing the clerics including Alfonsol, and that the evil sorcerer intentionally disseminated that the two of them were in cooperation. It was an attempt to sabotage the relationship between the Church and the nobles, but the Graceful Angel was a saint favored by the Lord. Smart and righteous, he was not affected by the rumors at all. Sharp was asked to trust the justice of the Lord.

After seeing the red robe off with a smile, Sharp went into the bedroom, his face graver than ever. He said to his subordinates, "Something else must've happened! Find out what it is!"

He had basically understood that the operation was the sorcerers' trap and that their target was not Alfonsol at all but the Heart of Time. Even the Liege of Death, a top legend in the past, was involved. It was dozens of times more serious than he anticipated! So, he couldn't have passed it so easily without the other factors. There must have been something great that was much more important than what happened here last night.

After the three subordinates left, Sharp paced back and forth, not even in the mood to appreciate the dark night anymore. His vague anxiety spread out beyond his control.

The sky suddenly flashed with a flash of lightning, and Cesc appeared in the bedroom.

Holding back his agitation, Sharp tried to maintain his image as a leader. "What have you got?"

"A great battle took place in Tria. His Holiness used God's Arrival twice in a row. 'Silver Moon' Alterna was beaten back and heavily wounded, and Abel was killed..." Cesc said in shock.

"What?" Sharp exclaimed aloud, unable to retain his image. The Silver Moon took action and got defeated?

Having no time to repeat himself, Cesc went on, "However, the pope returned to Lance due to poor conditions. Legendary sorcerers, vampire princes, and primordial dragons flew past Tria and directly launched an attack at Lance. The battle was quite intense.”

It was more detailed than what Francois said because new intelligence had come from Lance.

“That explains a lot...” Sharp said in a low voice. He then comforted Cesc who was in a panic. “Unless a demigod takes action, it is not so easy to break into Lance. After the Excellencies in Tria return, the situation will be steady again, except that it remains to be seen how badly hurt His Holiness is...”

Very soon, Gourcuff also returned. “Captain, The Angel King arrived in the Holy City and resisted the attacks of Danisos, Dracula, the elven queen, the Sun King, and the other legendary experts with... with God’s Guard.”

This “Sun King” was only a level-three legendary expert and wasn’t Thanos.

“Captain, His Majesty, Saint Griffith, Saint Ivan, the Shield of Truth, Rudolf and other people have returned from Tria and beat the sorcerers’ attack.” The first knight came last with the latest news.

“His Holiness did not take action. It seems that he is really in bad condition...” Sharp analyzed in a low voice. Suddenly, he burst into laughter. “No wonder they let go of me so easily. At this moment, this side of the strait is in desperate need of the aid of nobles, and so is the war in the west!”

“Yes, congratulations, captain,” the first knight said in delight.

In a great mood, Sharp looked at his trusted subordinates and said, “Not having to be judged is not the happiest thing for me. Do you know what I’m happiest about?”

“The dilemma in the war of the west?” Gourcuff replied in uncertainty.

“The Silver Moon is heavily wounded?” The first knight still admired the Church, the pope, and God’s Arrival.

After a brief silence, Cesc said, “Captain, are you happy because the two incidents demonstrated the power of nobles that even the grand cardinals have to be wary of and treat carefully?”

“Yes.” Sharp turned back and looked out of the window. Too many secrets were hidden in the darkness. “It is not until today that I know how strong we are. Even though I am really to blame for Alfonsol’s death, there is nothing they can do about me.”

Now that their deputy captain had openly stated his attitude and confessed his crime, the three knights looked at each other and all fell on one of their knees. “Nobles are supreme!”

...

“Abel and Dracula set up a trap and attacked the pope. Then, she used herself as the bait to consume the pope’s ‘God’s Arrival’. In the end, she asked Abel and Dracula to kill the pope who had been weakened. It was a sound plan. However, the Silver Moon’s heart is much softer than I thought. Was she not scared that she would be erased by ‘God’s Arrival’? Or maybe, was she so confident about the demigods’ immortality? Also, why was she so certain that the pope could not perform God’s Arrival twice in a row?” After hearing the simple but effective plan from the Silver-Eyed Count, the Liege of Death asked tentatively with mixed feelings.

The gorgeous vampire known as the Silver-Eyed Count replied with a smile, “Because she knows a thing or two about the power and the sequela of God’s Arrival. The Primordial Ancestor observed the battle of Antiffler the whole time even though she was not involved, and she spent a lot of time there afterward. It’s a pity that she still misjudged a bit.”

Chapter 879: Arnold's Arrangemen

Chapter 879 Arnold's Arrangemen

In the underwater relic in the Land of Thousand Lakes...

After he returned from the forest, Douglas did not immediately go to where Allyn was buried but stayed with Arnold and Fernando for news from Rentato. Only after he learned the intensity of the Church's counterattack and the ending of Sharp could he study the City in the Sky in peace, knowing that none of the sorcerers who were in the meeting was captured and revealed the location of Allyn. Since the city had crashed, it was barely possible to move it away without causing great noises.

"Mr. President, the Heart of Time has left the Radiance Church and returned to his villa in the city. The Church did not arrest the Blue Demon." A sorcerer reported to Arnold about the situation in Rentato. They had no spies in the Church and among the big nobles, so they could only learn the surface.

Scratching his beard, Arnold nodded. "Kritonia learned everything from League. He must've told it to Francois. However, it is quite weird that the Church did not arrest and interrogate Sharp, or even execute him directly. Something must've happened. Perhaps it's a ramification of the battle between the pope and the Silver Moon..."

He tried to figure out the reason, but this place was too far away from Aalto, Tria, and Lance. Unlike the Church, which had deployed divine power circles that could transmit voices among the important cities, the sorcerers had limited intelligence. So, they could only propose speculations.

"Whatever the reason is, the Church at least made a compromise to the nobles this time. It is important to help their ambitions grow," Douglas said peacefully and delightedly.

"That's why I said that we would be benefited whether or not the Church kills Sharp," Arnold said with a smile. Then, he turned to Fernando. "You should stop going to Old Green's for now. Sharp must've known that we took advantage of him. It's better to leave him alone while he is angry."

Then, he grimaced and said, "Fernando, Earl Paphos happens to be in Rentato. You can go ask him if he has figured out where the nobles' position comes from and how strong they are. Also, you can ask him about the situation in Aalto and figure out the outcome of the battle between the pope and the Silver Moon."

At such moments, the nobles had much more abundant sources of intelligence. Who could have provided more information than them?

"Earl Paphos?" After a brief stun, Fernando frowned. "Do I need to put on that belt again?"

Arnold laughed. "Why? You don't like it? I think you were quite interested in it before. You were even studying how to improve the belt."

Fernando cackled dryly. "Life is so short compared to death. So, why not try different experiences in the finite life?"

"However, even the most interesting experiences will become boring in the end. Only the mysteries of the world and magic are always attractive." Douglas did not know anything about the gender-transitioning belt and therefore simply offered his view.

Arnold laughed aloud and did not say anything else.

.....

It was the middle of a night, but Earl Paphos' villa was as lively as during the day.

Many knights came and left, taking advantage of the darkness of the night. They exchanged their intelligence and confirmed each other's attitude, not resting at all. It was only because what happened tonight was too appalling for them to take any break. Who could've thought that Duke Sharp would assassinate Alfonsol with sorcerers? Who could've known that Kritonia learned it in advance and attempted to kill all the sorcerers? And who could've foreseen that the formidable “Heart of Time” would be caught in a trap and suffered the most brutal failure since he distinguished himself?

A tornado would definitely be raised after such an incident, and the common nobles like them risked losing everything. So, how could they not be panicked and ask for the attitudes of their lieges and higher nobles?

That was the reason why Earl Paphos’ house was so lively.

Fatigue appeared on Earl Paphos’ face as he watched a few subordinate nobles leave. For a radiant knight like him, it was nothing to deal with a few sleepless nights. What exhausted him was his mind. He had to adjust his stance according to the latest intelligence, the Church’s attitude, and the other grand nobles’ response, in case things went bad in the emergency.

“My lord, since the Church sent a red robe to appease Lord Sharp, I don’t think anything bad will happen. This is the grace of the Lord. The scheme of the evils won’t work out.” The last noble in the living room bowed and was ready to leave. He was Earl Paphos’ trusted subordinate.

Earl Paphos did not hide his exhaustion before his subordinate. “The outcome would’ve been different if it weren’t for the battles in Tria and Lance. We are strong, but we are also weak.”

The noble, who felt exactly the same, sighed. “Yes, my lord. The Church’s compromise makes us feel strong, but the real reason for their compromise only makes us feel weak. If... If His Majesty and the rest of them indeed crush the army of sorcerers, vampires, dragons, and elves, we...”

He stopped, fearing that night watchers might be hiding around, and bid his farewell.

Looking at the slowly closed gate, Earl Paphos had a lot of mixed feelings. Without the enemies such as sorcerers and vampires, was it necessary for the Church to respect or keep the nobles? The changed attitude of the clerics in the past hundred years had proved everything! It was just like what the hot beautiful sorceress said.

Sorcerers were the nobles' enemy, but the nobles' status also boiled down to sorcerers!

Suddenly, he turned around and looked at the darkness out of the window. "Come in now that you are here."

"I can't without the host's permission." A magnetic female voice echoed, and the glass on the window protruded inward, as if someone invisible were crawling out of the bubble.

But very soon, a petite girl in a red magic robe walked out, and the glass was back to normal.

Earl Paphos was not in a great mood, but the girl was as bright as fire. He said solemnly, "Why are you here?"

"Hey, do you not know why I am here? I don't remember that you are such an idiot, are you?" Fernando felt that his sarcasm had turned milder after he transformed into a female. "We talked before. Now, I would like to know if you have figured out the source of the nobles' status and how strong you are."

Earl Paphos' eyes had the unique gold vertical pupils resembling those of dragons. He looked at Fernando and said slowly, "My answer is not important. What matters is that you are too weak. Even though the Liege of Death recovers, you will still be weak. I will not go after anything that will inevitably fail."

What happened today completely showed him the position and power of the nobles. However, although he had realized it, he was unwilling to share his answer with the sorcerers, and he pointed out the central issue straightforwardly.

Fernando was quite satisfied with his attitude. It at least showed the Earl Paphos was willing to communicate with him, which was a good sign for cooperation. He smiled. "We are weak, but the coalition army of sorcerers, vampires, dragons, and elves is not. If the nobles drift away, the Church will only be able to preserve itself. Of course, we do not need you to risk working with us for now. We only hope to get a bit of help so that we will have time to grow until you realize that we are not too weak to cooperate with you.”

“It takes much more time for sorcerers to grow than it does for clerics,” Earl Paphos said without giving an answer.

Sensing Earl Paphos’ concerns, Fernando did not pursue the topic further but asked, “I’m told that battles took place in Tria and Lance?”

“Yes, the Silver Moon, Abel, and Dracula attacked the pope together...” After considering briefly, Earl Paphos told him everything he knew.

Fernando was surprised and excited while he mocked in silence. Providing intelligence was exactly what he meant by “a bit of help”. Although the earl did not agree to the cooperation openly, his action showed that he already did.

.....

“The pope did not take action, but the coalition army was still unable to break into Lance. Only one grand cardinal and one legendary knight were killed before they were completely suppressed. The Church is truly appallingly powerful...” Arnold received some intelligence through other sources and confirmed what Fernando had learned. Even so, he was still very shocked, finding it hard to believe that the Church was already so strong!

Except for clerics and nobles, most of the legends in the world had been gathered, but they still could not defeat the Church that had lost the pope, even though the Church had left plenty of grand cardinals and legendary knights in Holm, the Boundless Ocean, and other places in case the remaining sorcerers and ocean legends stir trouble.

It was truly a devastating fact!

“If the pope recovers, or if the new pope is crowned, the coalition army will probably collapse when God’s Arrival is available again,” Douglas said in concern. The Church was insurmountable right now, and the situation would only be worse when the pope was involved.

Arnold nodded. "We can only hope that the Silver Moon recovers before the pope does or the new pope becomes a demigod. Then, a balance will be forged again."

"It's not something we can control," Douglas said with a self-mocking smile. "It seems that the counterattack this time won't be too strong. Only the remaining legendary knights and grand cardinals will be gathered at most. Mr. President, I'll go to Allyn now."

"Alright. Don't be lazy. Try to figure out something!" Arnold told him as if they had known each other for a long time. Then, he looked at Fernando. "I hope that you can go to Aalto and Tria to figure out the situation and who between Griffith and Ivan is more likely to be the new pope. Also, I would like you to find some talented young sorcerers and convince them to join us. After all, they are not qualified to participate in a war of legends."

Chapter 880: Different People

Chapter 880 Different People

The half mountain full of cracks was squeezed by rocks and mud, and almost none of the circuits and symbols on it were complete. The buildings were also broken except for those that were constructed later on.

A dozen sorcerers lived inside the city that seemed to have completely been destroyed. They were so few that they did not bring any liveliness to the place, which was still as quiet and grim as a graveyard.

“Allyn...” Floating in the middle of the mountain, Douglas called it using the Sylvanasian tongue. Even though he had seen it once, he still felt the insuppressible shock, excitement, and eagerness.

He flew to the ground of Allyn. Under the direction of a few respectful sorcerers, he walked to the central magic tower, where only one third of the building still stood now. Through the long pathway, he went deep into the City in the Sky, where the cores of all mysteries and the power source of the flight lay. Of course, they were all too seriously destroyed to show what they looked like at the beginning.

“My research has begun.”

Douglas said to himself when he went to the underground world. One of the important reasons why he came to Holm instead of Aalto was the floating city that he always dreamed about.

The questions that haunted him for years both when he was awake and in his dreams would be best answered here.

Stepping on the gray stone stairs, he went down slowly, and his back disappeared into the darkness at the entrance. Everything fell silent again.

.....

The night before the dawn was particularly dark. There did not seem to be any light.

Kritonia sat in the hall of his villa with the longsword flashing on his legs.

After being treated by Francois, he had already got rid of the lingering curse and recovered his body. However, his blood power was so weak that even the common knights could see it. It would take some time before he returned to his peak state.

“Kritonia, isn’t the Liege of Death old?” A wind passed by, and a mocking voice echoed.

The invisible wind landed and gathered into a tall, slim man. His hair, his skin, and every line on his body gave the feeling of the blowing wind. Both his hair and his pupils were in weird transparency.

“Raymond, he is old, but do you dare to fight him again?” Kritonia replied casually.

The legendary knight was “Ceaseless Wind” Raymond, the grand duke of the Duchy of Calais, which used to be part of the Asso Empire. Therefore, he had the deepest reverence for the Liege of Death. When he was told that the Heart of Time, who hadn’t been close to him, was heavily wounded by the sorcerer, he mocked him on purpose.

“Hehe.” Raymond sat on the couch. “Francois asked us to take action and teach the hiding rats a lesson that they will never forget.”

He came under the instruction of the Graceful Angel. The other few legendary knights were on their way over too.

“He did not ask you to take action; he asked you to work for me.” Kritonia raised his head proudly while a vague disdain appeared on his young face. “I am the one most favored by the Lord and the strongest knight on this side of the straight other than the king. That’s why the Lord adores me and the Church trusts and lets me command you.”

“Are we not favored by the Lord?” Raymond said back. He knew that Kritonia was arrogant, but he never knew that the guy could be so unfriendly.

“This is the Graceful Angel’s order. You have no choice except to obey!” Kritonia was completely on the Church’s side, treating the other legendary knights as his subordinates.

Raymond always considered himself a knight of manners, but he still said angrily, “Who do you think we are? Puppies under your command?”

“Not puppies, but lambs of the Lord. We, the servants, will rein you however we see fit,” Kritonia responded as arrogantly as before.

“Good, very good! Don’t forget that you are a noble knight too!” Enraged, Raymond almost wanted to kill the jackass.

Kritonia scorned at him. “I can become a divine knight at any moment.”

“You!” Raymond decided to defend his dignity and honor with battle.

At this moment, the gate was opened again, and a cluster of darkness that seemed to contain infinite disasters surged in.

“Hehe.” Raymond held back the urge to fight again.

.....

Inside the Radiance Church where the transmission circle was deployed...

Francois had been staying in the place to get the messages from Lance as soon as possible. He was also ready to return to the Holy City.

“They will definitely hide after they kill Alfonsol and heavily wound Kritonia. Therefore, as long as we don’t mess up, the situation will be steady for the time being,” Francois said to Kanunell, the red robe who took over the Inquisition recently.

Kanunell lowered his head and said respectfully, “Yes, your prediction is very accurate. I just received the intelligence from someone important. The order from the Liege of Death to the Union of Sorcerers, the Tower of Destroyers, the Supreme Soul, and the other magic organizations is to lie low until the counterattack of the Church is over.”

“Very good.” Francois nodded his head and kept looking at the transmission circle where holy light was surging out.

.....

Amid a tall magic tower was the black fog where transparent, hideous faces were emerging. The magic tower was pitch black like a tombstone. There was only shimmering light on the top floor.

The light came from a silver candlestick. Tannanois, the Liege of Death who was covered in a cloak, looked at the unopened book before him quietly. The words on the cover suggested that it might be from the Meshkate Empire.

“The Secret Research of Previous Sorcerers on the Original Body”.

.....

After a long journey, Fernando finally landed. He was close to Tria in the northwest of the Holy City. It was the area with the most legendary experts. Therefore, he dared not fly in the sky carelessly.

This was a narrow, long territory. The Holy City lay in the southeast, the North Province of the Holy Heilz Empire lay in the northeast, Aalto—the last camp of the Magic Empire—lay in the southwest, the battlefield of Tria lay in the northwest, and the heresies who worshiped the Mother God of the Earth lay in the north. Further north, it was the Schachran Empire that was completely controlled by the Saint Truth.

“The Angel King, Griffith, Ivan, and Rudolf are four top legends. Plus the Sword of Truth and the Shield of Truth that are as good as top legends, as well as five seraphs and more than eight level-three saints, the Church is terrifyingly powerful to resist all the other forces combined, not to mention that they have the aid of the allies...” Fernando traveled in the area in the form of a mouse and recalled the intelligence he obtained recently, both frustrated and somewhat angry.

He didn’t even count the saints, the grand cardinals, and the legendary knights that did not participate in the war!

“Is it impossible to defeat the Church without letting in the devils from hell and the demons from the abyss?” Fernando thought. His heart was in a mess.

Suddenly, he discovered that the tallest building in the city up ahead was trembling violently. In the places governed by the Church, the tallest building could only be the cathedral!

“What’s going on? Have the legends launched another attack?” The coalition army had been driven back to Tria by the forces of the Church after they were gathered. That was why Fernando speculated as such.

.....

“You have the intelligence on the headquarters of Red Eye?” Kritonia looked at the night watcher before him solemnly.

The night watcher lowered his head. “Yes. It’s from reliable sources.”

He knew that the legendary knight before him had just been trapped. So, he introduced his sources and the specific content carefully.

Kritonia picked up his longsword and said in a hurry, “They must be evacuating. I’ll go and block them now. Inform Raymond to come with me.”

“Yes, Your Excellency,” the night watcher replied, not surprised at all.

The hazy light moved among the clouds and soon reached a plain-looking city.

Kritonia shouted, "Evil sorcerers, die now!"

He turned into an overwhelming river of time and fell at the center of the city.

Nielson, who had yet to evacuate, thought that he was doomed when he saw the light.

However, after the time washed him like water, he was still living in this world, and so were the senior-rank sorcerers next to him. Only an eighth-circle sorcerer was killed. Of course, the Red Eye sorcerers further away from him had all collapsed to the ground. They seemed to have been dead for years!

"Has the Heart of Time been weakened into a non-legend now?" It was Nielson's first thought, but very soon, he saw that Kritonia turned around and shouted at the outside of the city, "You can never run away!"

What? Nielson suddenly realized what was going on. He dragged the senior-rank sorcerers next to him to escape in a different direction. That was the Plan B of their evacuation.

Soon after they left, Raymond and the other legendary knights arrived. Kritonia said to them expressionlessly, "We're late. The leaders have run away. Only the dozens or so low-rank sorcerers failed to escape."

.....

The Liege of Death put down the thick book in his hands and took out a mirror that was covered in deep darkness from his magic pouch.

He touched the mirror, and it gradually became clear. The scene on it was a room that had a cross.

In the Radiance Church, where Kritonia was treated, the shadow in the corner was suddenly enlivened. It was dark and twisted, just like the curse on Kritonia's wounds back then.

The Liege of Death extended his right hand and pressed the mirror. His body blurred and melted into it.

The shadow wriggled and stood up. It became the Liege of Death that was fully covered in the cloak.

Red lights flashed on his fuzzy face, and he locked onto Francois who was near the transmission circle.

.....

After the end of a session of research, Douglas returned to the ground and sat on a rock while watching the sky turn dark.

"The sun rises in the east and sets in the west, but why?" Douglas was still murmuring. He was too fascinated by everything.

In the west, the setting sun dyed the horizon red.

Chapter 881: Hades Right Hand

Chapter 881 Hades“ Right Hand

Inside the Radiance Church...

The Liege of Death, having turned into a shadow, did not attack immediately. After finding out Francois' location, he backed off to a dark corner outside of the room while waiting for the shift of night to day and the moment when the gate of the cathedral was opened. That would be the moment when Francois was most relaxed and careless.

If he were to cast a spell right now, Francois could possibly sense danger and defense in time.

Since they were going to fight in a cathedral, he was not confident that he could defeat Francois when he hadn't recovered to his peak status yet.

Even though the cathedral was protected by the God of Truth, and lights were on all night, there was still darkness where the lights could not reach. The Liege of Death stood in it as if it had been melted into the darkness.

In the hall where the transmission circle was deployed, Francois stood up and waited for the message impatiently. Other people might be unaware of it, but he knew very clearly that a result concerning his future, if not the situation of the world, would take place tonight!

Holy light suddenly surged and glowed in the circle, illuminating the whole room and making it as bright as day. The air of divine power covered everything.

"Is there a result?" Francois immediately stared at the circle.

At this moment, two red spots suddenly emerged in the darkness. The Liege of Death had sensed the best opportunity to attack. The waves created by the transmission circle could cover all the traces before a spell was cast, particularly when Francois' attention was fixed on the message.

He raised his right hand, and the black long sleeve of his magic robe moved backward naturally, revealing a pale hand that was completely dry. Every inch of skin and every streak on the hand was different and brimming with death. As they gathered into the runes of immortality, vague black air popped up, and intense desolation was manifested. It seemed that the realm of the dead had been recreated by the palm.

Tannanois curled four fingers and left only the index finger. The withered fingernail glittered in the mysterious black and gray.

As he let out the rough sounds that other people could not hear, spiritual faces appeared around him, writhing and raging, but they were all thrown into the desolate darkness at the tip of the index finger, dying it pale.

The Liege of Death's body gradually turned transparent and was no different from the spiritual faces. Then, he was absorbed by his own index finger, leaving nothing but a pale and gray finger on the spot.

“Ahh!!!”

A miserable cry suddenly burst out, and a fuzzy face flew out of the tip of the finger with its mouth wide open. It covered the distance instantly and lunged at Francois' back!

“Assassination?” Francois looked at the transmission circle in confusion. He did not understand why he would suffer an assassination in the heavily-guarded Radiance Church.

Brilliant light burst out of his body. Extraordinary items were triggered and tried to stop the face from leaking in.

However, the finger, which had already turned black, white, and gray, suddenly emerged before Francois. Passing through the defense that was almost broken, it tapped his forehead softly.

The initial attack was the Liege of Death's most powerful and unique spell that he had named “Death Resonance”. The other sorcerers had given it a nickname—God of Death’s Call. His “finger” in the second wave of attack was the only legendary item the Liege of Death had—”Hades’ Right Hand”—which could only be used once!

Francois’ confused and shocked face was frozen, and his body quickly turned black and gray.

...

Fernando quietly flew to midair, only to discover that the cathedral in the city trembled violently as if it had an earthquake. After only one moment, the earth cracked, and a gap where red magma was flowing consumed the cathedral like the mouth of a monster.

The air of a legendary divine power burst out in the cathedral, and a holy light rose to the sky. However, it was enshrouded in a black ball and pulled downward. Flying more and more slowly, it began to descend instead of rising after only three seconds, falling right into the boiling magma.

Then, the crack of the earth closed, and there was no sign of an earthquake except for the missing cathedral as well as the clerics inside.

“The earth control of such an extent...” Fernando felt that it was the most unbelievable superpower of the earth class he had seen. Of course, the best he had seen was only the similar spells of the ninth-circle sorcerers. “Also, the attack is directed at the Church...”

From that, he concluded that it was done by a friend instead of an enemy. So, he slowly landed and waited for dawn so that he could sneak into the city and find out what happened.

...

In the Bright Hall in Lance, the Holy City...

The old pope’s beard and hair were entirely white, and his wrinkles seemed to be falling from his face. He was too old to be a living human being. Wearing a sacred crown and holding the platinum staff, he looked at the grand cardinals and the divine knights down below with eyes that were as clear as before. “Except for the members who are obliged to watch over the fortresses, all the grand cardinals are here.”

His voice was solemn but benevolent. After a pause, he raised the platinum staff and announced seriously, “The Lord has appointed a new pope in an oracle. As for me, I will return to the Lord’s arms in Mountain Paradise tonight.”

All the grand cardinals lowered their head and said respectfully, “That is the Lord’s grace. Your contributions to the Church are as vast as the Boundless Ocean.”

The old pope nodded softly. “Our contributions are exactly our gains. I hereby announce the Lord’s oracle. The new pope will be...”

His eyes passed on the faces of a few grand cardinals. Satisfied with their tranquility and devotion, he raised his voice and said, “Griffith!”

“Your kingdom come, your will be done, on earth as it is in heaven.” A middle-aged man in a clean robe walked out and fell on his knees piously. His skin was dark, and his face was plain. The only thing that differed him from peasants was that he did not have as many wrinkles, and his every movement was full of charm.

“Only Truth lives forever!” All the other grand cardinals fell on their knees and drew crosses on their chests.

Then, everybody stood up and watched Griffith walk on the seven stairs.

As Griffith took each step, the holy and everlasting songs, the ivory and sacred light, and the sand-like angels appeared one after another, making Griffith seem to be walking in the realm of the God of Truth.

Lance was covered in overwhelming holy light. All the clerics and believers knelt and prayed.

The projection of Mountain Paradise appeared in midair, casting a streak of holy light on Griffith, which looked like a halo.

Griffith walked up to the last stair and took over the platinum staff from the old pope solemnly and respectfully. Then, he turned around to the grand cardinals and raised the staff high.

At this moment, a sacred and intimidating voice descended from the infinite heights.

“Your holy name will be ‘Gregory!’”

The old pope smiled. His body suddenly turned transparent, as if he were the purest holy spirit. Then, he crumbled into countless holy spots of light that flew into the projection of Mountain Paradise.

Griffith drew a cross on his chest and declared with a voice that echoed throughout Lance as all popes did when they were crowned, “From today on, I will be Gregory!”

All the grand cardinals fell on their knees again. “Only Truth lives forever!”

At the front of the grand cardinals was a golden-haired man in a white robe. His face was chiseled, and he was tall and handsome, except that his rising nose was a bit intimidating.

At this moment, he was more focused and devoted than any other grand cardinals on the spot.

Behind him, some of the grand cardinals further lowered their heads, preventing other people from seeing their faces.

...

“What? This place has been taken over by the Mother God of the Earth?” Fernando had pictured a new scenario where he might run into some powerful sorcerers, or someone had summoned a Devil Duke, or the primordial gold dragon attacked unexpectedly. Little did he expect that the place would become the territory of the Church of the Mother God of the Earth!

He did not need to investigate at all. After he snuck into the city, many priests of the Mother God of the Earth were delivering the fact to the believers.

“It was the Mother God of the Earth who killed the grand cardinal last time? That makes sense. Only the top legend who is best at spells of the earth class could’ve killed a grand cardinal who was under the protection of the cathedral so easily...” Fernando was greatly enlightened.

As a matter of fact, Douglas, Arnold, and he had all speculated that the heretic religion, which rose against the Magic Empire with the Saint Truth since the War of Dawn began, would eventually turn against them after the Saint Truth grew too powerful. The previous cases had proved that, like the Sun God who was killed by God’s Arrival. However, he did not expect the Mother God of the Earth to revolt so suddenly!

“The outcome might’ve been different if the Mother God of the Earth betrayed during the attack of Lance...” Fernando soon accepted the fact that the Mother God of the Earth had betrayed the Saint Truth, but he did feel sorry that it happened too late. He thought to himself, Maybe because of the suppression of the Saint Truth without the pope, the coalition army finally decided to make significant compromises to the Mother God of the Earth.

Standing outside of the church of the Mother God of the Earth that had just been established, Fernando hesitated for a moment but decided not to come in. After all, there were many sorcerers among the night watchers, and the priests of the Mother God of the Earth must be too sensitive right now to trust him. He might as well go to Aalto as soon as possible and look for friends he was familiar with.

“Antec always told me that his classmate Stanis had remarkable talents and was about to become a legendary sorcerer. Hehe. I’d better meet him in person.” Fernando tried to get out of the city when he remembered his correspondences with his friend.

When he passed by two priests, he suddenly heard one of them speaking to the other in a low voice.

“Griffith has succeeded as the pope. His holy name is Gregory.”

“The new pope has been born?” Fernando was briefly stunned.
“What does Ivan think?”

He had to go to Aalto immediately to find out!

Chapter 882: Mean Good Friends

Chapter 882 Mean Good Friends

It was the middle of the day. The ancient and magnificent Aalto City stood next to the Bellen River, looking down at the villages around it.

The wall of the city was not in black, which was what most sorcerers would have liked. It was in dark yellow because it was as old as the everlasting sky.

Although Fernando dared not to fly, he still reached the central city of the empire a couple of days later since he did not rest at night.

He cleaned his clothes and walked to the city gate, which was defended by a dozen sorcerers. Their leader revealed the unmistakable air that he was an archmage!

It was the scorching noon, but peasants, dealers, and citizens going in and out of the city were not reduced at all. One could not help but sense the liveliness and exuberance of Aalto.

“Stop!” A middle-rank sorcerer stopped Fernando in wariness. In such an eventful period, nobody wanted to be killed by the night watchers.

Because Fernando was wearing a red magic robe, all the sorcerers shifted their attention to him. All of them looked grave except the archmage, as if they would attack him relentlessly if anything went wrong.

Fernando said loudly, “I am from Holm. I’m here to look for my good friend Antec. He’s a student of the King of Nightmare.”

Antec was merely a senior-rank who just made it to the sixth circle. He couldn’t have been known by a lot of people. So, in case of an accident, Fernando simply brought up the name of his teacher, the legendary sorcerer “King of Nightmare”.

The destination of their class was exactly “King of Nightmare”, like Maskelyne who used to rule the city in the past. His “Book of Astrology and Elements” had only two legendary classes, “Prophet” and “Lord of Elements”.

To obtain more legendary classes, one would have to make enough contributions to the empire to enter the “Tower of Gods”, the library of the empire in Antiffler, to study them. In the heyday of the Sylvanas Magic Empire, the sorcerers were so confident that they believed that legendary experts were mortal gods and that different classes were the gods of different realms. So, the library of the empire was named “Tower of Gods”. However, the rise of the Saint Truth made the “gods” fall into dust.

“The King of Nightmare?” Now that the name of a legendary sorcerer was mentioned, the archmage at the gate was much more serious and friendly.

Fernando nodded. “Yes, but I do not know him. I’m only familiar with his student Antec.”

He was too proud to fake connections with a legendary sorcerer.

An oddly honest fellow... The sorcerers could not understand Fernando’s pride and only presumed that he was silly because he had been too devoted to his research.

The archmage at the gate smiled. “I know Stanis, another student of the King of Nightmare. I heard the name Antec from him before. So, you may come in.”

Huh? Fernando was surprised at his privilege. He was let in so easily? They did not even ask his name!

The archmage mistook Fernando’s stun for not remembering Stanis or believing what he said. So, he said in a low voice, “Stanis is the King of Nightmare’s best student. Antec must’ve mentioned him before, right? His cognitive world has half-solidified since half a year ago, and he is considered a half legend. Hehe. Perhaps we’ll see two Kings of Nightmare in one city someday.”

“His cognitive world has half-solidified?” Fernando had thought that he, who almost reached the eighth circle, was the best of the “young” sorcerers in his generation. He did not know Stanis, who was not much older than him, had already reached such a level.

“Yes. He might try to make a breakthrough before long. He’s a real genius at illusions and dreams.” The archmage’s envy was obvious. The boundary between the ninth circle and legendary was slim, but the differences were too huge.

Instead of nodding, Fernando said eagerly, “I know a thing or two about illusions too.”

He was implying that he could communicate with Stanis and see if this “real genius” deserved his name. He would never praise, envy, or look up to anyone!

The archmage, however, thought that a sorcerer who was good at illusions had come to ask for the guidance of Stanis and the King of Nightmare. That was not rare, particularly when he was familiar with the King of Nightmare’s student.

“How should I call you?” After Fernando mentioned the King of Nightmare, he felt that it was necessary to make acquaintance with this senior-rank sorcerer. “I am Reece Brown. You can call me Reece.”

That’s the right protocol! Fernando thought. “I am Fernando Brastar. I prefer to be called Fernando.”

Reece paused and asked in hesitation, “Your last name suggests that you are from the Asso Empire, aren’t you?”

Fernando nodded. “Yes, but my teacher is a sorcerer of the empire.”

Reece did not further confirm his identity, as if he were certain about Fernando’s truthfulness. He said with a smile, “Fernando, come on in. Antec is already waiting for you. We should talk about magic knowledge sometimes.”

“What? Antec is waiting for me? I’m already allowed to go in? You don’t need to examine my identity? Are you not afraid that I have surrendered to the Church and become a night watcher?" Fernando felt that he had more and more questions after he knew Douglas.

With a weird smile, Reece said, "Rest assured. There are no night watchers in Aalto. Look, isn't Antec over there?"

Following his finger, Fernando saw a young man in a monocle. He was slim and pale, with messy hair, rising cheekbones, and an untrimmed beard. The disgusting smell from him suggested that he hadn't been out of the meditation room or the laboratory for a long time.

"You look as terrible as before," Fernando mocked Antec straightforwardly. "And you don't know how to sort yourself out at all."

With a bitter expression, Antec said, "Whether or not I sort myself out, no beautiful sorceresses will ever like me. Only someone as handsome as you is worth sorting out."

There were hints of envy and jealousy in his tone.

"Have you considered modifying your face?" Fernando did not consider Antec's feelings at all.

Antec, however, thought about it carefully and said, "Few people in our magic tower are good at physical modification, and I don't trust other people, fearing that I will become even uglier."

"Hehe. You are still a coward who doesn't dare to try and trust! You shouldn't have studied after the King of Nightmare, and you should've gone to the Tower of Misfortunes!" Fernando was particularly mean today.

The Tower of Misfortunes was the demiplane of "Lord of Misfortunes", a legendary sorcerer who had already perished in Antiffler.

Antec was not so cowardly in front of his friend whom he had known for years. He said proudly, "My teacher said that I am very gifted at dreams, and I'm most suitable to hide in someplace safe and manipulate dreams."

“Yes. It’s indeed suitable for cowards,” Fernando said.

Antec suddenly smiled. “Fernando, let me tell you a story.”

“Huh? A story?” Fernando failed to follow Antec. He suddenly felt that his friend had something he could not understand since they last met ten years before.

Antec led Fernando through the gate into the crowded market area. The vampires under their parasols, the elves who embraced the sunlight, the dragons who stopped on the roofs, and the human beings who were coming and going made the place diverse and charming.

“The Lord of Abyss, my teacher’s good friend, is one of the best experts in bloodline melting and body modification. When he was young, he was often mocked by his good friend for being too hideous. However, he has plenty of mistresses right now,” Antec said in a calm tone.

Fernando was not envious at all. “He’s a legendary. Nobody can refuse him.”

In the Magic Empire, legendary sorcerers had great privileges. As long as they did not kill anyone too important, they would only be fined for murder.

Then, he chuckled. “So, that’s what you used to encourage yourself? How inspiring!”

“That’s not important. The important thing is that when the Lord of Abyss was only in the seventh circle and not as strong as his friend, he ambushed and killed his friend after having enough mockery, before turning his friend into a demon dog.” Antec suddenly sounded delighted.

Fernando was stunned for the first time during his interaction with Antec. He said with his face frozen, “Do you want me to thank you for not killing me?”

“Yes, but I dare not do so,” Antec replied with a smile. He was already satisfied to see the look on Fernando’s face.

Fernando was about to roar when he saw a vampire fighting an elf in the avenue up ahead. The blast of the senior-rank supernatural powers had demolished a lot of buildings.

“Nobody is going to stop them?” Was Aalto so unregulated? Then, perhaps the Church did not need to attack them at all; they would kill each other after a while!

Antec suddenly sounded extremely weird. He asked, both in amusement and confusion, “Fernando, have you pretended to be a girl?”

“How did you know?” Fernando was rather shocked. How could such a thing have been spread to Aalto?

Antec pointed at his side. “She’s right here.”

Shocked, Fernando looked at his right side, only to discover a petite red-eyed beauty was standing next to him shoulder to shoulder, except that she looked rather fuzzy.

He was lost at first, before he said in great enlightenment, “Is this Aalto City my dream?”

“No, it’s OUR dream,” Antec replied with a smile. He was much bolder when they talked about that.

“Our dream, as well as theirs?” Frowning, Fernando pointed at the human beings, elves, dragons, vampires, and dwarfs around them.

Antec nodded his head. “This place is based on the dreams of all the living creatures in the real Aalto. Now that you have come to this place, you’ve naturally joined the dream. It’s barely possible for traitors to hide in such dreams.”

“This is... too remarkable for your teacher to accomplish! Has he reached level three of legendary? It’s impossible for even the level-three legends!” Fernando had a profound understanding of illusions and read a lot of books on the battles of legends.

Antec chuckled. “Have you forgotten that Prince Dracula is in Aalto?”

Chapter 883: A Date

883 A Date “Him? No wonder...” Fernando said in a low voice.

Although “Real Dream” was a naturally-endowed spell of vampires, Prince Dracula, who was a top legendary vampire, was the only one who could connect the dreams of so many people without depriving them of their thinking abilities. Abel, who had perished, was stronger than Dracula in overall, but he was not as good as Dracula in terms of Real Dream.

It was said that other than connecting everyone’s dream, Dracula could also substantiate his dream with his talents. The creatures in it looked real and could think and communicate, but they did not know that they were fake and part of a dream.

Antec continued to explain for Fernando, “Dream Aalto covers the real Aalto in case of the Church’s sudden attacks. Also, there are a lot of contradictions among vampires, elves, dragons, dwarfs, and human beings. Greater conflicts may burst out if they are suppressed all the time. It’s better this way. Since it’s only a dream, they are free to unleash their hate however they want, and they’ll be resurrected after they are dead.”

Then, he smiled proudly. “Most of the power of Dream Aalto came from Prince Dracula, but my teacher, Stanis, my other classmates, and I are making our contributions. That’s why I sensed your entrance and came to pick you up so quickly.”

Fernando stared at his timid friend and discovered that he finally emanated his confidence. He sniffed and said, “I don’t think your contributions are greater than a fingernail.”

“That’s right. I haven’t advanced into the senior rank for long.” Antec was actually quite proud of that. To become a senior-rank sorcerer was his childhood dream. As for the higher ranks, he did not even dare to dream about it back then.

Fernando clicked his tongue and focused his attention on the battle. The more he watched, the more shocked he was. He could not tell that the talents, abilities, and weapons of the vampire and the elf were fake at all. Even the aftermath of their battle was so real.

“This ‘Real Dream’ is not half as bad as I imagine,” he admitted unwillingly.

Antec knew his friend’s personality very well. He simply opened his mouth and chuckled.

Fernando was not angry about that. He suddenly remembered something else. “Dracula is in Aalto? Shouldn’t he be in Tria or somewhere near Lance right now?”

Had the coalition army’s counterattack been completely suppressed?

“A couple of days ago, Griffith became the new pope and was renamed Gregory. The same day, the five top legends, namely Prince Dracula, the primordial dragon of time, the elven queen, the Mother God of Earth, and the Master of the Boundless Ocean, as well as the Sun King, the Stellar Mentor, the Lord of Elements, the Tower scholars, the Master of Summoning, the Master of Transformation, the King of Devils, the Demigod-lich, the primordial red dragon, and Prince Sate and more than ten level-three experts, attacked Lance again. They were the greatest forces in the main plane except for the ‘Mastermind’ in the Dark Mountain Range.” Antec was gloomy all of a sudden as he introduced the situation of the coalition army to his friend.

Same as the Sun King, the “Stellar Mentor” was no longer the legend who created the school of astrology.

“Was the Master of the Boundless Ocean involved too? And it still failed?” Fernando asked solemnly.

Antec nodded. “The master of the Boundless Ocean had to take part in the battle. If the Church won, the ocean would never be in peace. So, the nine sea generals as well as other sea forces attacked the Church’s coast cities at the same time, stalling the saints, grand cardinals, and legendary knights. As for himself, he came to Lance in secret for the battle.”

After a pause, he said rather sadly, “The Church was prepared for that. Also, Gregory showed the capabilities of a real demigod. Together with the help of the Angel King, Ivan, Rudolf, Felix, Hoffenberg, and Orvarit, they defeated us without any loss. If we had not retreated in time, many of us would’ve perished.”

“As strong as a demigod immediately after the succession... It seems that the new pope is a demigod whether or not the old pope died in advance because of God’s Arrival,” Fernando mumbled. It was certainly a harrowing fact. Then, he asked earnestly, “Did any top legend perish? Was ‘God’s Arrival’ used?”

Antec was in a better mood. “Well, the new pope did not perform God’s Arrival.”

“It seems that he has to get used to it before he can grasp God’s Arrival. Otherwise, he could’ve crushed the confidence of the coalition army by killing a top legend with God’s Arrival.” Fernando had always despised all the clerics, including the pope, believing that they could lose their strength as easily as they got it.

“Not necessarily,” Antec argued subconsciously. “If the pope kills another top legend with God’s Arrival, the rest of them will definitely be scared and work even harder to wipe out the threat. How many more times of God’s Arrival could the pope perform?”

“If they were all sorcerers of the empire, that’s a possibility, but Dracula, Danisos, the elven queen, the Mother God of the Earth, and the Master of the Boundless Ocean had their own conflicts. Some of them were even mortal enemies. Who would’ve sacrificed themselves to take the pope’s second ‘God’s Arrival’ so that other people could kill the pope when he was weakened?” Fernando pointed out Antec’s illusion quickly.

Antec stuck to his opinion. “It’s not up to them who was to be sacrificed, but the pope. If they were to back off, they would only be killed by the pope one after another in the future. They could only take their chances.”

“Hehe. How naive. The pope is still a demigod without God’s Arrival,” Fernando mocked before he looked at the sky. “Unless the Silver Moon recovers before the pope can use God's Arrival again."

"Yes. That's the best scenario," Antec said hopefully. "If there's no choice, we'll just..."

Then, he suddenly paused and looked ahead, as if he were attracted to the battle that was about to end.

"You'll just what?" Fernando pursued in confusion. He realized that the sorcerers must've had their own plans too.

Antec chuckled. "We will retreat into the Dark Mountain Range. The environment is complicated there, and we won't fear the Church anymore."

"Hehe. A lying coward," Fernando remarked briefly.

"Really. That's really what I think," Antec said sincerely.

Fernando revealed the fact mercilessly. "I don't think other people think the same as you do. However complicated the Dark Mountain Range is, the Church will leave no place for you to hide in after it presses forward bit by bit."

"Hehe. You will know it by then." Antec kept it confidential. "Alright, I'll lead you into the real Aalto, although it would be great to live in such dreams."

"Don't be addicted. The illusionists captivated by their own dreams will lose their minds sooner or later," Fernando reminded him.

Antec nodded and did not say anything. He put his hand on Fernando's shoulder as waves spread out of his body.

The scene before Fernando's eyes suddenly shivered and blurred before it fell apart.

Darkness faded away, and Fernando saw sunlight again. The ancient Aalto City was right before his eyes. As it turned out, he hadn't entered the gate yet.

Next to him, Antec surfaced, talking to him and leading him through the heavily-guarded gate, which was meant to prevent the special night watchers who were immune to dreams from entering the real Aalto.

The real Aalto was empty, without a single soul or any noise. It looked like a pale land of ghosts.

“Most people are sleeping.” Antec pointed at his head. “The food they eat in their dreams is from Prince Dracula’s power. It can directly fill their energy.”

“I don’t think ordinary people can live in such dreams for long,” Fernando said solemnly.

Antec nodded his head. “Three years at most. They are woken up on a regular basis to help their recovery. Well, Fernando, I want to ask you a favor...”

He suddenly stammered and blushed, unable to say anything after a long time.

“A coward who cannot even ask for a favor.” Fernando looked at him in despise.

As if he had been stimulated by that, Antec suddenly spoke fast, “Your transformation belt seems to be very effective. I cannot notice anything wrong at all. I’m hoping that you can pretend to be my date at a dinner. Those guys always laugh at me for not bringing a date.”

He said without any pause, almost unable to catch his breath.

“Poor lad.” Fernando eyed him up and down and finally observed with mixed feelings.

Antec was much more at ease after he proposed his request. He said with what he learned just now, “Aren’t you trying to attract a bunch of talented sorcerers? It will be easier if you appear as a beautiful lady.”

“Do you think all the talented sorcerers are male? I think a lot of female sorcerers will be into my current look. Of course, what matters more are our capabilities and our prospects,” Fernando said with contempt.

Antec pursed his lips. “However, the talented sorcerers in the dinner tonight are all males. Well, there are a dozen ladies with reasonable magic knowledge, but their leader likes girls. If you convince her, the other ladies will certainly follow you.”

“Fair enough.” Fernando nodded his head, feeling that he had been convinced. After all, he did not reject the transformation belt.

Seeing that Fernando was about to say yes, Antec suddenly became unconfident. “Would your transformation be seen through? Their eyes are all attached with certain magic effects.”

“It wouldn’t. I’ve modified this belt. After I use it, I will become a complete female in every body part. Even a legendary sorcerer could only tell that my body has been magically modified at most, but they can never tell what the transformation is from. However, there are still flaws. I cannot get pregnant...” Fernando introduced the belt and spoke of the matters related to it.

Antec was relieved. “That’s great.”

He had the common sense that taking off the transformation belt would not mean the loss of the magic effect. The way to use a magic item was through the pivot of spiritual power, not by putting it on, although it would accelerate the activation.

When he was proud that he finally had a date, Fernando suddenly said, “Wouldn’t it be very humiliating if your date flirts with other people right in your face?”

Antec was stunned. “Fair enough...”

Then, he hurried to say, “I think we’d better drop it.”

“No, I’m already interested in the party.” Fernando stared at the front.

Chapter 884: Be

884 Be The sun was glowing like fire in the west, making the real Aalto even more like a graveyard. Except for the sorcerers who were watching the walls of the city in different areas, few people could be found on the street.

On the empty road, a wagon rode fast without raising any noises of hooves or wheels, as if it were an envoy from the Silent Hell.

The wagon was so quiet because it did not have any wheels. The four horses running ahead were all as hazy as if they were made of pale mist. However, an intense fire was burning on each of their heads, and two red spots were bouncing in their eyes.

“Is this the famous ‘nightmare’?” Inside the carriage where the window was half open, a magnetic and enthralling female voice echoed.

Antec’s magic robe had turned into a formal suit with a collar that reached the back of his head. It was quite fashionable, but he was very unused to it. He kept pulling different parts of the clothes, as if he had trouble catching his breath. “Yes, these are special horses that my teacher created. They can directly enter dreams. They are made by melting the ghost horse and ‘Dream Controllers’, a type of demon with special abilities.”

There were so many kinds of demons that even the most knowledgeable legendary sorcerer could not declare confidently that they could recognize all. Also, knowledge sharing was not a trend in the Magic Empire. Nobody would give away their knowledge without getting something important in return. Therefore, even though some kinds of demons had been discovered, it was possible that only a few people knew them. For example, Fernando had never heard of “Dream Controllers” before.

“Since ‘nightmare’ is dragging our wagon, is the party in a dream?” Fernando, who appeared as a gorgeous girl, was greatly enlightened.

Antec smiled dryly. "Not exactly. I borrowed it on purpose. Now that I have a date, I'd better be serious."

"It seems that you are not entirely hopeless," Fernando praised him in a unique manner. The red and bright eyes on his delicate and pretty face were as attractive as the flashes of lightning in a dark night.

Antec held his head high for a moment, but his back was soon hunched again. He sighed in grief. "It will only be more miserable when I am mocked later. 'Look, the date that the idiot found through all the trouble and brought here with a nightmare has been stolen so easily. A loser is always a loser'."

The latter half of his sentence was so vivid that he was obviously mimicking a companion who always laughed at him.

"It's better than when you don't have anyone to be stolen." There was no telling whether Fernando was comforting him or mocking him.

Antec thought for a moment. "Fair enough... It's good to make progress every time. After all, I have never dreamed to find a real date. After I become an archmage, I will have as many dates as I want in my dream."

"Don't mistake illusions for reality," Fernando reminded his friend solemnly. After so many years, he realized that Antec seemed more and more addicted to dreams.

"Why can't illusions be the reality? Why can't dreams become a real world?" Antec was rather excited after suppressing himself for a long time. "It's the wish of all the sorcerers of the school of illusions."

"So, your highest achievement is to deceive yourself?" Fernando was much meaner than Antec.

Antec shook his head. "No, it's not deception, but dreams really become reality..."

Before he finished, the "nightmare" already stopped. It was a gloomily-decorated villa ahead of him.

“We’re here. Hold that thought on illusions.” Antec pulled his collar again and walked out of the wagon. Then, he turned around, extended his hand, and helped “her” to get off according to the etiquette that Fernando taught him. Fernando was much more experienced than him in that aspect.

“There’s still hope in you.” Fernando nodded and took Antec’s hand with the professionalism of an actor. Since he was rather short, he was a good match for Antec who was slim and tall.

Antec immediately blushed, and his left hand moved unnaturally, as if he sensed certain firm and elastic parts below Fernando’s neck.

“Are... Are... Are they real?” he stammered. His body was so tightened it appeared as if he had been attacked by a serpent.

Fernando said proudly, “Don’t question my magic expertise. Even a legendary sorcerer couldn’t have actualized such a perfect effect without my belt.”

“But I still feel it is weird...” Antec led Fernando to the gate rigidly.

“Hehe. You don’t even get to enjoy ‘weird’ on other occasions. Seize the opportunity,” Fernando said with a brilliant smile.

Antec realized that Fernando’s meanness was something that he could only look up to. So, he could only shut his mouth and climb the stairs.

“Do you think the demigod capabilities that Pope Gregory showed in Lance were real, or did he count on the divine power facilities in Lance?” Fernando suddenly asked something else.

“Huh, what?” Antec was not on the same “frequency” with Fernando at first. He wasn’t back to himself until a while later. “I’m not clear, but according to my teacher, he was undoubtedly beyond the peak of legendary back then. However, he hasn’t left Lance since the battle.”

Fernando nodded his head before asking another question that

Antec could barely follow. “Will Stanis be at the party tonight?”

It was a small party. Most of the participants were students of legends.

“Huh, what?” Antec expressed his confusion in the same way. He then said, “He’s not in Aalto recently. He’s out searching for materials.”

Many sorcerers had been gathered in the cities like Aalto, but materials would not follow them without a reason. So, sorcerers had been taking turns to leave the cities for forests and the Dark Mountain Range to collect resources. Some of them even went further into the north where gems were more abundant.

That gave the night watchers and the clerics an opportunity. Assassinations and sieges happened many times. The sorcerers, unwilling to swallow it, also set up traps and killed the personnel of the Church instead. So, although the cities were in peace, the areas around them had already become hot spots.

Some of them were traps trying to attract the legends to attack, but neither party secured great achievements.

Therefore, Stanis’ journey might be really meant for material collection, or it might just be a trap.

Fernando had learned a lot about the situation. He nodded. “I’ll talk about illusions and dreams with him after he’s back.”

“Alright. You can spend a few more days in Aalto so that you can look for the sorcerers who are talented and willing to go to Holm,” Antec said delightedly as Fernando was one of the only three real friends in his life.

Fernando grimaced. “Then, my nickname will become ‘Antec’s Humiliation?’”

“On second thought, I think you should go back as soon as possible... You’ve known the general situation after all.” Antec looked at his right hand sadly.

“Hehe. I need to know more about the details and collect the files of grand cardinals and legendary knights for future battles. So, I’m afraid that you have to be humiliated for a while,” Fernando said unconcernedly.

At this moment, the villa door was opened automatically, and a shrieking male voice echoed, “Hey, Antec, where did you find a date? Did you hire her from the ‘Pink Mill’?”

Sorcerers, dark knights, dwarfs, and ordinary people all have biophysical needs, so there was still room for prostitutes to survive, and “Pink Mill” was one of the places in the trade. Of course, they mostly provided their service in dreams.

“This is my good friend that I met in Rentato, Nando,” Antec introduced anxiously, fearing that other people realized that Fernando was a male.

Fernando said with a brilliant smile, “So, Antec does not have a girlfriend in Aalto.”

He sounded so pleased that Antec was almost stunned.

“Hehe. First of all, somebody needs to appreciate him...” The shrieking voice went away.

Antec secretly raised his thumb at Fernando, complimenting his performance. “He’s Beto. He likes to mock me most. His teacher is the Lord of Elements.”

...

In the villa, dozens of sorcerers, holding strange beverages, roamed in the hall. They were vaguely around four men and a woman.

Before the four men and the woman, a water curtain was floating and displaying the scene before the gate.

“Hehe. Antec turns out to have a female friend that he knows since childhood.” The shrieking voice was made by a man who had a mustache. He seemed angry at being embarrassed.

“Well, isn’t she pretty?” The woman, who was holding a strange drink, clicked her tongue. “Red eyes and red dress, bright and passionate, how appealing!”

She was tall and looked like a proper lady, but her words were unbelievably rude. However, those around her seemed to have already been used to it.

Beto sniffed. “Furan, it’s just a cheesy woman from the countryside, rude and stupid.”

He tried to speak evil of Fernando.

For the sorcerers of Antiffler, Holm was exactly a barbaric, underdeveloped village.

“However, you cannot deny that the countryside girls who are not corrupted by the luxuries of Antiffler and Tria are innocent and shy.” Furan, the beautiful girl, chuckled.

A gloomy, golden-haired man next to her snorted. “Are you planning to embarrass Antec? He’s also a legend’s student, and he is close to Stanis.”

“It’s all about our feelings toward one another. Why is it an embarrassment? Hey, just because you like me doesn’t mean you get to interfere with my life.” Furan scorned. She was just saying it randomly just now, but now that she was stopped, she was tempted to try in her anger.

The gloomy man closed his mouth, hoping that he could forget the pervert as quickly as possible.

Sensing something, Beto intentionally said, “That countryside girl has known Antec since childhood. Their bond must be strong. Furan, you wouldn’t succeed even if you try.”

“Is that so?” Furan knew that Beto was deliberately provoking her, but after seeing Fernando’s face on the water curtain, she still said, “Should we have a bet?”

Chapter 885: Who's the Prey?

885 Who's the Prey? "What do you want to bet on?" Beto was very talented in magic and had always been his teacher's favorite. However, he was also snarky and competitive for the same reason, and his social skills were no better than those of Antec, who only liked to hide in dark corners and manipulate dreams. So, he asked Furan, showing no lack of confidence.

Furan touched the sapphire brooch on her chest, and her white dress was dyed in dreamy colors by the hazy brightness. "Don't you always like my 'Mermaid's Tear'? If I lose the bet, it will be yours."

It was a level-eight senior-rank item. Even though Beto was a legend's student, he couldn't help but swallow hard. "Really?"

His teacher, the Lord of Elements, was good at alchemy, but he certainly did not create items for the students often.

Beto indeed had several senior-rank items, but none of them could compare to the brooch, Mermaid's Tear. Not only did it boast powerful spells, but it could also significantly improve the effects of meditation and the performance of water element users. Beto had been yearning for the brooch for a long time!

However, Furan's teacher was the famous "Stellar Mentor". It was barely possible for him to steal it.

"Have I ever not fulfilled my words?" Furan was peaceful and beautiful, but she talked like a man.

"What if I lose?" Although he was delighted, as a sorcerer, Beto still asked cautiously.

Furan snorted. "You're like a chick. So petty."

"You!" Because of an accident in body modification, Beto's voice was high and did not sound like a regular male. There was no way to heal it for now. So, he hated it most when other people mocked him for not being a man.

Furan combed her hair. She couldn't have been more beautiful and charming when her ice fingers brushed on her soft black hair. She looked at the front and said, "If you lose, you will announce in the next meeting of our teachers that you love me."

The legendary sorcerers who were close to each other had been meeting often to discuss the situation and exchange magic knowledge. Sometimes, they also brought their favorite students, both to show off and to broaden the students' horizons.

Beto gasped hard. It would be very humiliating to announce that he loved Furan in front of so many legends. All of them were aware of Furan's sexual orientation, but they did not really care about it.

"Then, I will decline you brutally." Furan smiled brilliantly. "How about it? Do you want a bet? You should be better than the coward Antec, shouldn't you?"

Stimulated by Furan, Beto snorted. "My humiliation in exchange for a level-eight item. The bet seems in my favor. Furan, are you so confident in yourself?"

"It's just a countryside chick who hasn't seen anything. She's easy to be captured." Furan sipped the strange beverage. She was glowing now that she found a target.

Dewey, a student of the Lord of Abyss, who had a crush on Furan, turned around and talked to a pair of twins, turning a blind eye to his two self-willed companions.

At this moment, the gate was opened, and Fernando walked in holding Antec's arm.

Antec's face was red, and his back was straight, perhaps due to his excitement, or maybe because it had been rigidified. In Beto's eyes, he was just being cocky.

For the first time, Antec enjoyed the introduction part. "This is Beto, you've already met him. This is Furan. She's the Stellar Mentor's student, and she's good at divinity."

He was hinting Fernando to not cross the line in case Furan noticed anything.

“This is Dewey, the Lord of Abyss’ student. His body has been completely modified into an amalgamation of demons. Johnny and Kavins are twins. They are both the Demigod-lich’s students.” Antec introduced the central persons in the group.

Johnny and Kavins looked very familiar. They seemed to be only teenagers. Black-haired and black-eyed, they couldn’t have looked more innocent.

Fernando secretly crossed the names that Antec just introduced in his heart. They were all legends’ students. It was unlikely that they would leave their teachers for Holm at such a moment. Therefore, he might as well pay attention to the sorcerers around who were talented but did not have a great background.

As the student of a legend, Antec only introduced the people who deserved his introduction. In the end, he pointed at Fernando and said, “This is Nando from Holm. She’s a senior-rank sorcerer good at elemental spells.”

“Is this your date or fiancée-to-be?” Furan suddenly interjected. Her voice was crisp and sweet, but her tone was not exactly expected of a lady.

Antec choked on his own saliva. Coughing for a moment, he said, “We grew up together...”

The indirect answer fitted his usual image very well, so nobody was suspicious. Johnny chuckled. “What a beautiful lady.”

He appeared to be a boy, but his voice was old and coarse. A rotten soul seemed to be residing inside the elven body.

“Thank you.” Fernando bowed with a brilliant smile intentionally, and as he expected, he caught Furan’s glittering eyes.

After some chit chat, Fernando brought up a new topic. “I’m told that your teachers were all involved in the two battles of legends. I wonder, how is ‘God’s Guard’ like exactly?”

As unworldly as I thought... Beto mocked in his heart and said, "God's Guard should be a space-time defensive spell. By twisting space and time, the target to be protected is placed in an intangible place. If the attacker does not understand the mystery of space and time, they cannot hit the target however powerful the attack is. At that time, my teacher..."

The intelligence of such an extent was not anything confidential in their circle. So, Beto, Johnny, and Furan added the things they learned from their respective teachers.

Fernando, on the other hand, listened so attentively that his red eyes glittered.

"Look, it's just a countryside chick. Innocent, naive, enthusiastic, and simple," Furan said to Beto in the telepathic bond with a smile.

Beto snorted. "However, it also means that she is conservative and not easy to seduce. Don't play tough."

"I always know how to deal with such inexperienced countryside chicks. All I need to do is to let her feel the strange happiness before she realizes it." Furan moved her fingers, as if she were in a great appetite.

"Don't lose your reputation," Beto said and thought that he could mock Antec even if he lost the bet.

Under Fernando's intentional direction, the details of the two legendary battles were extracted and saved in his head. Suddenly, Furan rose and stretched her arms gracefully and charmingly. "It's not fun to discuss those things at all. This is a party. We need to dance."

The moment she said that, the other female sorcerers who had been watching her immediately created warm melodies with magic.

She walked to Fernando with a smile, and with her eyes glittering, she said, "Nando, don't hang around those boring men. Let's go dance, shall we?"

Huh? Fernando did not expect Furan to be so active. He looked at Antec next to him subconsciously, which further convinced Furan, Beto, and the rest of them that he was a countryside chick who had never experienced anything before.

"I would like to invite your date to dance. I'm sure you are okay with that, aren't you?" Furan looked at Antec with a faint smile.

Antec seemed scared of her. He nodded. "Of course."

"Then, beautiful lady, let's dance." Furan took Fernando's hand and ran to the center, bold and straightforwardly, not asking for Fernando's permission at all.

Then, she grabbed Fernando's waist, forcing him to dance right next to her.

"Are you not scared that Furan will steal your date?" Beto asked, grimacing.

Antec smiled in embarrassment. "Nando is not that kind of girl."

The song was hot, and the two bodies that were next to each other were even hotter. Fernando had never experienced a female body in such a way before. His clumsiness made Furan giggle nonstop. Then, her mouth stopped next to Fernando's ear, and she said in a low voice, "You are really beautiful!"

"So are you..." Fernando replied sincerely.

Then, he sensed a shivering ecstasy from his ear, as if he had been electrified. After that, his mouth was sealed by the pink lips.

Hehe. Very fresh, pure, and easy to provoke! Furan kissed and thought gloatingly.

Then, she sensed that Nando's hands were holding her tightly and responded passionately.

I won!

She thought delightedly at first, but her libido was immediately ignited by the passionate beauty in her arms. She tried very hard to calm down and say, “Let’s go to my room.”

“Look at that!” Beto almost whistled. “Nando is not that kind of girl.”

He quoted Antec’s words to mock the guy.

Blushing, Antec was more than angry. “Furan is also a girl. What’s to be scared of?”

It remained to be seen who would suffer losses in this one!

“Haha.” Beto laughed and thought that Antec had found the most terrible excuse. When was Furan a girl in their eyes?

“You’d better stay in your dreams as you usually do. You can always find a date there!” Beto scorned blatantly.

...

In the room, the dresses were all over the ground, and a weird smell occupied every inch of space.

On the bed, two naked bodies were entangled. One session was just over.

Furan touched Fernando’s back and giggled. “I can sense your lack of experience. Is the euphoria unique and strange like you never had before?”

She was referring to Fernando’s pureness.

“Yes, I did not expect it to feel like this,” Fernando admitted honestly. That was what a girl’s body felt like! It was truly different from a guy’s!

Furan smiled in satisfaction. The ecstasy of victory filled her with desires again. “Nando, did you mention that you came to Aalto to look for talented sorcerers?”

“Yes.” Fernando’s hands began to move subconsciously too.

“Haha. It’s useless. If we fail here, Holm will not end well either. Why bother taking risks there?” Furan said ambiguously. “Let’s continue our happiness!”

.....

On their way back, Antec looked at Fernando angrily. “Didn’t you score a bit too easily?”

It was a great humiliation for him!

“The feeling was great and fresh. I couldn’t stop.” Fernando had no intention to apologize. “She’ll come again tomorrow. She said that she would introduce to me a few sorcerers whose lives here haven’t been very good.”

“Furan is only into girls. If she learns of your real identity...” Antec tried to scare him.

Before he finished his sentence, he suddenly raised his head, sensing that Furan was approaching quickly. “Are you serious?! I was only talking!”

Furan stopped by the window. There was no lust on her innocent face anymore. She looked at Fernando very solemnly. “Has the Liege of Death recovered his capabilities?”

“Huh?” Fernando did not understand what she meant at all.

Chapter 886: Progress

886 Progress Seeing Nando's reaction, Furan reviewed what she did and decided that she was being too hasty. She had come straight after learning the message from another sorcerer on the road. It did not occur to her that it was impossible for Nando, who should have been away from Holm for a while, to learn the intelligence earlier than she did.

"Has anything happened?" After a brief moment of being stunned, Fernando immediately realized that new intelligence had been delivered from Holm to Rentato, so out of concern, he asked in a low voice. It was much easier for the legends to communicate than it was for the common sorcerers. For example, the two Excellencies of Cabin of Palmeira talked almost on a daily basis.

Keeping her right hand on the misty window of the nightmare wagon, Furan thought for a moment and believed that she could get more details from Nando. So, she smiled and said, "A while earlier, the Liege of Death killed 'Graceful Angel' Francois in the Radiance Church and destroyed the transmission circle. Such a terrifying outcome made people wonder if he had regained his top legendary capabilities. So, none of the legendary knights of Holm dared to come out again, and the new pope had to send the Sword of Truth back with two saints."

After a brief pause, she said, "In such a way, the pressure we suffer has been greatly reduced. We'll be on the winning side if Gregory does not leave Lance."

"What? The Graceful Angel was killed in the Radiance Church?" Antec exclaimed in surprise before Fernando said anything. With the support of the divine power circles of the cathedral, Saint Francois could have resisted a top legend for a while. Had the Liege of Death approached the demigod level after his resurrection? Even if he didn't, he had to have returned to his peak in the past, hadn't he?

Fernando also found it hard to believe. He had only been away for half a month, and why had the situation changed so fast? The organization was keeping a low profile after attacking Kritonia and Alfonsol, but how was the highest leader of the Church in Holm killed all of a sudden?

Suddenly, he realized that a secret agreement had to have been reached in the battle against Kritonia. The targets of the Liege of Death and the old fox included not just the Heart of Time but also the Graceful Angel. They intended to create chaos and cooperate with this side.

Looking at Fernando's changing expression, Furan thought of something. "Do you know what is going on?"

"I'm not sure. It's been half a month since I left Rentato. The Graceful Angel was still as alive as ever back then." Fernando did not propose his speculation.

Furan also did not think that a seventh-circle sorcerer who did not have a notable background could know that. So, she nodded, "Do you know anything else about the Liege of Death?"

"Earlier, our Union attacked the Heart of Time together with the Liege of Death." Fernando felt that it was necessary for him to raise some valuable intelligence in case he was underestimated.

Furan chuckled. "Wasn't it the Witch of Iceland and the Eye of Curse?"

Yours is just a wretched group without even a legend. Stop overselling yourself.

"I was there." Not in a good mood, Fernando said straightforwardly.

"What?" Antec was even more surprised than Furan.

Furan did not lose her calmness now that Antec shouted out his surprise. She smiled thoughtfully and asked, "Nando, can you tell me the details?"

Her eyes were wet and full of charm. Although the Lord of Frigidity would inform the legends of the coalition army of the major events, he was not close to the Stellar Mentor and certainly would not tell him all the details.

Fernando did not intend to hide in the first place. He told the basic story and concluded, "... At that time, the Liege of Death behaved as a level-three legend; otherwise, Kritonia wouldn't have escaped."

As for whether or not the Liege of Death was pretending, he was not certain.

Furan listened quietly and asked about the details now and then. In the end, she nodded. "Your intelligence is very valuable."

Suddenly, her face was rigid, and she sounded old. "Little girl, we are interested in what you said. We hope that you can come to my demiplane."

"Yes, Your Excellency." Fernando was stunned before he suddenly realized who the person who had just controlled Furan's body was. In Aalto, only the Stellar Mentor could have done that without causing a conflict.

Furan shivered hard and looked around in confusion. Then, she rubbed her head and said, "Did my teacher invite you just now?"

"Yes." Fernando respected the legends for their strength, but he was not intimidated by them. He seemed rather calm.

Furan smiled like the peaceful moonlight at night, which was entirely different from her usual look. Not only was Antec, a rookie, lost in it, but even Fernando was also rather amazed.

"For our teacher and for us, the issue about the Liege of Death is one of the most important things." Furan smiled.

Damn! This chick has combined illusion, divinity, and her own vibe so perfectly? Fernando struggled to move his eyes away from Furan's face, speculating that she was using illusion. In the meantime, he smiled. "I know that Prince Dracula, the primordial dragon of time, the elven queen, the Mother God of the Earth, and the Master of the Boundless Ocean are not sorcerers."

Even though there were plenty of legends among them, the sorcerers were actually playing a supportive role in the war and could not decide their fate. At such a moment, the “Liege of Death” who had recovered his strength was like a gift from the Goddess of Fortune!

Furan was briefly stunned, not expecting Nando to be unaffected by herself. She smiled and thought that the countryside girl had a lot of potentials!

After only one moment, she had a new understanding and more interest in Nando than physical ones.

“You are very smart.” Furan touched Fernando’s face with her right hand. “Let’s go to my teacher’s demiplane now.”

It was not until the two of them were melted into the mist that Antec was back to himself. He sighed. “Furan is only into girls. Should I borrow the transformation belt from Fernando for my use? No, she knows that I am a man.”

He turned to the mist and said enviously, “Fernando was involved in such an important matter. It’s so much better than staying in Aalto and helping with the maintenance of the dreams...”

.....

In the demiplane of “Starry Ocean”, none of the legendary sorcerers revealed their real appearances, but only affected the space and showed unusual phenomena. For example, on Fernando’s left side was a scorching fireball that felt like the sun, and on his right was a weird pattern made of the four main elements.

In their eyes, Fernando, who was not even an archmage, was not qualified to meet them at all. They wouldn’t have bothered to talk to him had it not been for the Liege of Death. That was the pride of legends of the Magic Empire.

“That’s all I know.” Fernando described the event in greater detail and stressed the old fox’s role, but he did not mention Douglas’ whys and his current research.

Right before him, the brilliant stars swirled and constituted into a fateful nebula. From the nebula, an old but clear voice said, "It's much more valuable than I imagined."

The Stellar Mentor was much more polite than the other legends, but he did not mention what the specific value was.

"I know why you've come to Aalto. We won't stop you from taking sorcerers away with you. There are indeed too many people here." The Stellar Mentor showed their attitude on behalf of other people.

Fernando was secretly relieved. That was the purpose of his intentional leakage. Although it was not important for the legends that he was persuading the talented sorcerers to leave, it was still possible that some of them would turn him into an experimental material someday when they were in a foul mood. Now that he had the endorsement of the Stellar Mentor, there would be no problem. His divinity told him that the Stellar Mentor would have accepted his request, but he did not expect that the guy would mention it before he asked.

Although he was impatient and mean, Fernando was not a reckless man. He had thought of and perfected most of the details.

After Fernando left, the nebula asked the twisting darkness nearby, "Did you notice anything?"

The darkness was vaguely showing the scenery of the abyss.

"There are signs of body modification, and she lacks the unique feminine qualities." Natravos, the Lord of Abyss, was one of the best experts in body modification, only slightly secondary to Viken, the King of Calamities who once stood at the cutting edge of the field.

"Do you mean that she might not be a female?" the Stellar Mentor asked.

"It's a possibility." Natravos grinned hideously. "If you don't mind, I can give her a test. Such a violent girl fits my appetite very well."

"Forget it. We cannot afford any accidents right now. She's a Red Eye noble of the Asso Empire, and she may be related to the Liege of Death.” The Stellar Mentor shook his head and thought of his student. However, he soon forgot about such trivia.

The Sun King said loudly, “Does she deserve any attention? Are you too idle? There are so many important things to do!”

Therefore, the Starry Ocean regained the everlasting peace, and the minds of the legends communicated and sparkled.

.....

In the days that followed, Fernando and Furan had a great time on the bed. Also, thanks to her introduction and Antec’s, he made friends with quite a lot of sorcerers who had potentials but could not improve in cities like Aalto due to the insufficiency of resources. The few female sorcerers that Furan introduced were particularly remarkable.

Those sorcerers were not very happy to leave at first. After all, many companions had been gathered here, and it was easy for them to exchange knowledge here as they were in Antiffler. However, after learning that the Liege of Death had “regained” his capabilities and did something great, they began to feel that the prospects of Holm were promising and changed their mind.

One day, Furan told Fernando that there was an elemental sorcerer in Holsava, a city to the north of Aalto, who hadn’t been doing very well. His name was Tuck. His talents were rather impressive, but he had been ostracized after pissing off Beto and was forced to live in Holsava City instead of Aalto.

Fernando immediately went there. Furan, however, was delayed by something else and was not with him for a couple of days.

Chapter 887: Track

887 Track “Are you saying that Tuck has moved away?” “Nando”, who now carried feminine charm, asked a middle-aged woman.

Because it was near the mines, the sky of Holsava City was covered by dust all year around, which made it dim and gray. He was now at the center of a dark valley, where the architectural style was more inclined to the mysteriousness and grimness that sorcerers preferred.

The middle-aged woman that Fernando asked was an ordinary person. She wavered and replied, “Yes, Mr. Sorcerer. Tuck moved away a month ago.”

The reverence and fear for sorcerers had been etched to the blood of the civilians of the Magic Empire.

Fernando looked around. The buildings here were mottled and heavy, with the traces of aging everywhere. Realizing that Tuck did not seem to have enjoyed his life in this place, he went on to ask, “Do you know where he moved to? Exactly how many years ago did he move out?”

The middle-aged woman thought in fear for a moment before replying, “Mr. Sorcerer, I remember clearly that it rained hard that day. It was exactly the middle of the last month.”

As a matter of fact, the sorcerers had a detailed and complicated regulation on years, months, and days, such as the Year of Winter, the Month of Bronze, and Day Thanos. However, it was impossible for ordinary people to remember those things. They mostly still referred to the months with their original names in the common tongue.

Fernando nodded. The magic he secretly performed told him that her words were trustworthy and without interference. The middle-aged woman was also not secretly a senior-rank sorcerer, which he had already confirmed.

The middle-aged woman was more or less relieved seeing the beautiful girl before him nodding her head. She was much more smooth when she said, “Mr. Tuck is a sorcerer who does not like talking. He mostly hid in his room for experiments every day. However, a few days before he moved out, when I ran into him in the lobby, I heard him talking about ‘Kufuray’, ‘my new life will begin there’, etc.”

She had been a civilian in the neighborhood until she was hired by Tuck as his servant.

“Kufuray...” Fernando repeated the name and soon found the corresponding place in the map in his memories. It was a city to the northwest of Aalto on the border between the territory of sorcerers and that of a dozen heretic churches that were against the Saint Truth. There weren’t abundant mines and unique resources in the city.

Why did Tuck go to that city? Fernando was puzzled.

Then, he performed divinity, and after making sure that there were no obvious dangers, he decided to go there and take a look. He could also observe the heretic churches by the way. He had always been curious about the gods’ forms of existence and the reason why the Church was preaching about faith. It was a pity that the Saint Truth was too powerful in Holm for him to observe and study. Now that he had come to Aalto, he might as well take a look at it by the way.

After his wish was fulfilled, he would return to Aalto and go back to Holm with the newly-recruited sorcerers.

Furan is one hot chick. It’s a shame that I can’t spend more time with her, Fernando thought regretfully before he chuckled to himself. However, she will definitely go crazy if she learns my real identity. It’s not bad to leave as soon as possible.

Now that the Liege of Death had raised the attention of the legends, their communication with Holm would definitely be more frequent. So, it would be a disaster if the old fox accidentally revealed that the envoy he sent was a guy named Fernando.

...

Kufuray City was a business city in the Magic Empire. It had a huge population and was significantly more prosperous than the mining city Holsava.

The sun was high. Fernando observed the city from the sky. Pedestrians walked like ants, and towers rose high intimidatingly. There was nothing wrong.

He descended and landed out of the city, not attempting to challenge the defense circles of the city. Then, with the credentials that Furan gave him, he passed the gate.

The moment he entered the city, Fernando felt that the bright sunlight was dimmed, as if he had come to a cold and obscure forest.

“The magic circles of this city have been kept running at such a level?” Fernando speculated.

On the street, the residents of Kufuray seemed familiar with each other. Fernando saw many people in groups of ten discussing something in a low voice.

“What’s happening?” Fernando thought warily. He cast a spell of distraction and approached them.

“Don’t forget to go to the priest tonight. He will pray for us.”

“I will. I have to repent.”

...

Similar words entered Fernando’s ears. There was nothing that deserved his attention.

Fernando sniffed. “It seems that the heretic churches have developed new followers here. Hehe. It’s better than believing in the Saint Truth.”

He listened to another few groups and found nothing strange. So, he went to the Office of Sorcerers at the center of the city and asked about Tuck. According to the rules of the Magic Empire, only if the sorcerers were registered in the local office could they enjoy the privileges, including subsidies, of the sorcerers.

Very soon, he left the office in satisfaction. Tuck was indeed here.

And I was worried that he might've lost his mind and run loose.

Fernando thought to himself and walked to 24, Right Angle Street according to the file. It was the residence that Tuck was given.

The Right Angle Street was near the city wall. It was as lackluster as Holsava City in the dust. The buildings here were also grim and ragged, as if they hadn't been repaired for a long time. Sorcerers never bothered to waste their time on the houses other than their magic towers. According to them, the civilians they raised were exactly for such things!

"Tuck is ostracized in this place too? But he hasn't been here for long," Fernando murmured, suspecting that it was Beto's influence.

Of course, he didn't think that Beto did it directly, or Tuck would have gone missing. However, Beto's dislike would be spread out from his circle and his followers to other cities, and somebody would try to please him.

Dum, dum, dum.

Fernando stopped before a two-floored villa and knocked on the door.

The villa was so old that it did not even have a common magic doorbell.

After a few knocks, there was no response at all, not even a magic pet or an alchemical puppet.

"Tuck is not here?" Fernando mumbled. What bad luck.

He tried knocking again, with a greater force to create bigger noises.

Dum, dum. Squeak...

After Fernando's movement, the door of the room was slowly opened. It was not really closed at all.

Fernando vaguely sensed that something was not right, but then he realized that Tuck was only a sorcerer who just rose to the senior rank. So, he boldly released the Secret Eye and investigated every corner with it.

The desks and chairs in the house had a thin layer of dust. There was not a living soul both upstairs and downstairs. There wasn't a secret room either.

"Notes in the library, and materials in the laboratory... Did Tuck leave in a hurry when he was preparing for an experiment?"
Fernando speculated according to the feedback of the Secret Eye.
"It's also possible that he did not leave but went missing..."

Otherwise, a sorcerer wouldn't have left his notes in the library instead of carrying it with him.

It puzzled Fernando. The guy who made Tuck disappear didn't take away the notebook? Why? That was a sorcerer's most valuable treasure!

His confusion brewed. After confirming that there was no danger, Fernando entered the study and decided to find clues from Tuck's notes.

"Earth, fire, wind, and water. I'm so sick of the four elements and cannot understand the content behind at all.

"Maybe I should try studying the mysteries of gods! All the churches have so many experts and fake gods. It means that the secrets of power and immortality must be behind it..."

"The thing that I accidentally obtained seems related to the mysteries of gods. However, I cannot study it due to the lack of materials..."

"I'm told that some heretic churches are preaching in Kufuray City, which still belongs to the sorcerers. This is truly a gift from the Goddess of Fortune.

“My new life will begin here!”

It was more like Tuck’s journal than a real magic notebook. Fernando was less puzzled. If the guy had left in a hurry, it was not entirely necessary to bring the notebook.

“Something is not right!”

Suddenly, a few words that were obviously written in a haste entered Fernando’s eyes. He could almost sense the fear in them.

“What did Tuck find?”

Fernando’s relief was gone. At this moment, he heard footsteps coming from the gate!

...

“Where are you hiding Nando? She’s supposed to be back the day before yesterday!” Furan came and questioned Antec.

Antec couldn’t be more innocent. “How would I know? I don’t even know where you sent her.”

“Hehe. If I know you’ve done anything bad because of jealousy, I’ll feed you to the nightmare in person!” Furan observed carefully and felt that Antec was not lying. In the end, she said, “That’s strange. It takes only half a day to travel between Holsava and this place. Why is she still not here?”

“What’s she doing in Holsava?” Antec asked curiously.

Thinking about other things, Furan answered casually, “I asked her to go and find Tuck. Although Tuck is not very likable, he’s still...”

Antec stood up all of a sudden. He was shocked. “Tuck? Wasn’t he allured to Kufuray by Beto with a trick?”

“What? Kufuray?” Furan was also shocked.

“This is bad. Nando hasn’t followed him there, has she?” Antec walked to Furan anxiously.

Chapter 888: Mysterious Kufuray City

888 Mysterious Kufuray City Fernando grabbed the notebook and cast “Advanced Stealth” on himself, disappearing from the study. He listened to the coming footsteps quietly.

One, two, three... More and more people were coming to the gate.

“Why are there so many people? Why are they so stealthy?” Fernando created spying eyes and dispersed them in order to monitor the whole house. Although the spell had a range limitation, everything in Tuck’s house was still under watch because it was old and small.

In a corner, a crystal ball suddenly glittered and displayed what was in the hall. Even Advanced Stealth could not cover such an effect.

In the hall, the men and women in plain clothes walked lightly like ghosts, as if they feared that they might wake up the owner of the house.

There were about a dozen of them. They dispersed around a creepy-looking man at the center.

The man had scarlet thin hair, a protruding forehead, broken eyebrow, half-missing nose, rolling lips, and eyes that only had whites left. He was so unnaturally hideous that he looked like a doll that a naughty kid stitched on their own, or a monster that would only appear in the illogical dreams.

He looked at the ceiling with his blinded eyes, and his ears, which seemed to have been bitten by dogs, slightly shivered. After the dozen strangers stopped at their respective positions, he suddenly opened his mouth and said, “God saves the people.”

His voice was not as ugly as he looked. It was distant and intimidating, as if it came from the infinite heights.

“God, please save us.” The men and women held their arms and slowly leaned forward in a weird posture.

Continuing the previous tone, the man said gravely, “Everybody suffers and pays for their sins after they are born. Everybody endures hunger, trauma, jealousy, and betrayal without one day of happiness. They can barely catch their breath under the infinite pressure. Also, nobody can escape death in the end. They can only walk toward their doom in fear.

“However, God tells us that death is eternal, peaceful, and devoid of miseries and pains. Faced with death, we must thank God for His grace so that we do not need to sink in this filthy and disgusting world anymore...”

As he went on, the hall was covered in a tranquilizing and alluring atmosphere. The dozen men and women listened attentively and seemed to have understood the truth of death.

“Is a heretic church that believes in the God of Death preaching here?” Fernando basically realized what was going on in the hall through the spying eye.

Since this city had been infiltrated by the heretic churches, such a condition should be perfectly normal.

The moment the idea popped up, he suddenly sensed that something was not right. “But why are they holding a ritual in Tuck’s house? Did they know that Tuck’s house was empty?”

With puzzles rising up, Fernando identified the people carefully and did not find Tuck who attempted to study faith. Furan had created an image of Tuck with her memories so that it would be easier for him to find.

“That’s odd. Are they related to Tuck’s ‘disappearance’?” Fernando observed those “believers” even more carefully.

“As long as we earn the grace of God, we will enjoy painless immortality in death...” The priest suddenly raised his voice and his right hand.

After he raised his right hand, the dozen men and women rose from the ground and danced a weird dance that Fernando had never seen before. Their postures were so weird that they did not seem to worry about joint damages or pain at all.

“It’s not like a regular religious ritual...” Fernando knew a thing or two about that. “Are the believers of the God of Death so special?”

As the dance grew weirder and weirder, the atmosphere in the hall became chaotic. They all took off their clothes and crawled before the priest.

The priest put down his right hand, but there was now a sharp dagger that emitted cold brilliance in it.

Fernando thought that the priest would reap the lives of the believers to please the God of Death, but the priest rolled his right hand and stabbed the dagger into his own chest. Blood immediately spurted out.

“Huh?” Fernando was completely stunned. He knew a lot of sacrificial rituals, but none of them required the suicide of the host first!

Blood dripped on the filthy floor. A man on the ground, as if summoned by God, suddenly extended his tongue and licked the blood.

Then, with obscure noises from his throat, he lunged at the collapsing priest like a wolf and bit the priest’s neck brutally, tearing off a cluster of flesh and swallowing it in a hurry.

The rest of the followers also went crazy. They jumped at the priest, gnawed at his flesh, and chewed it in the most reverential way.

Fernando felt uncontrollably nauseated as he watched the blood, skin, and broken flesh on the believers’ mouths. He had studied necromancy before, but he had never seen such a disgusting scene before.

A lot of blood was wasted when they crazily competed for food. It was gathered below the corpse into a pool.

The blood in the pool was suddenly vaporized, creating a hazy mist of blood everywhere.

In the mist of blood, a face was crawling out crazily.

The redness was fixed to the face tightly as if it were a veil. Only the rising parts, such as eyeballs, nose, and mouth, could be seen, which made the face unbelievably creepy.

The man shouted hoarsely, “Help me!”

Startled by the voice, Fernando shivered hard, and the drowsiness that came into being at some point left his body.

It was not until this moment that he realized that the priest was still reciting the prayer and the believers were still dancing in the crystal ball.

“What happened to me just now?” Fernando asked himself subconsciously. He soon realized that he was affected by illusions and entered a dream without him realizing it!

He looked around warily and thought to himself, It’s at least a senior-rank sorcerer, if not an archmage, who put me into a dream through the previous scene. What exactly does he want?

Then, he thought in shock, Was the archmage who created the dream the one who cried for help? He created the dream just to send a distress call?

Fernando did not rush out to investigate the dozen heretic believers. The caller asked for help in such a way was obviously to avoid certain surveillance. If he were to take action recklessly, something might happen to him.

“Is the man in trouble caged? No, if he is caged, his leaking strength couldn’t have affected me at all unless he is above legendary, in which case whoever cages him is too much for me to deal with. If he is not caged but hiding somewhere in the city, it must be at least a level-nine expert who has put an archmage into such difficulties. The guy may be around...

“Such a method is obviously sorcery. Then, why doesn’t he just ask for help from the Office of Sorcerers, which can reach out to Aalto? Maybe the Office of Sorcerers is secretly monitored by the expert, or maybe the people in the Office of Sorcerers have betrayed or been replaced...

“So, will the expert in the dark allow people to leave Kufuray City and get help for the sorcerer?”

Fernando shook his head firmly. It couldn't happen. Maybe he would be captured and killed as long as he attempted to leave the city.

At this moment, the dancing and praying believers slowed down. The ritual tonight seemed to have come to an end.

Fernando looked at the scene; his eyes unfocused. One thought suddenly flashed in his mind. “Is ‘the guy in need’ doing this on purpose so that I’ll be too intimidated to leave Kufuray and can only disappear like Tuck?”

He was very smart and therefore came up with a lot of possibilities. Hesitating, he did not know which one he should believe.

However, since he remembered Tuck, he brought out the notebook and read the following records.

“The ritual here is too weird. It is very different from what I know...

“The more I study the church that secretly develops in this place, the more scared I am. What are they exactly?

“No. Why have I never seen anyone leave the city? Why do the people who bring water and food return at the gate and never enter the city?

“I need to get out of here!”

After the scribble was hopeless blankness.

“Does everybody know that it is impossible to leave the city?”
Fernando was even more perplexed.

Inside the crystal ball, the believers stopped praying and were ready to leave under the priest's instruction.

Having a eureka, Fernando blinked to the hall and shouted, "Who are you? Why are you trespassing on Tuck's house?"

Since he was here for Tuck, he had to behave like he was searching for Tuck. That was the best way for him to buy himself more time without raising attention and doubts!

The priest who was as hideous as a monster replied solemnly and honestly, "We have been invited by Tuck."

"Tuck invited you to come here?" Fernando was slightly stunned, not expecting such an answer.

.....

With the credentials that their teachers gave them, Furan and Antec flew toward Kufuray City quickly.

"Right, whose turn is it to watch over the place right now?" Antec did not pay much attention to it before.

Furan thought for a moment and said, "His Excellency the Original Fire."

Chapter 889: Tracing the Source

889 Tracing the Source The priest, which looked like a stitched monster, looked at Fernando with his hollow eyes that did not have pupils. “He has offered this house to the great God.”

“Where is he now?” Fernando asked solemnly, feeling that it was getting weirder and weirder. Wasn’t Tuck planning to escape this place? How did he become the believer of an evil god all of a sudden?

Had he been completely twisted by the evil god’s priest, or even the evil god himself, into a selfless “contributor”?

The priest sounded as calm as before as he said, “He’s in the temple.”

“I’m his friend. I’m here for him. I would like you to bring me to meet him in the temple.” Fernando had been unwilling to risk going to the nest of those believers whose behaviors were weird, but logically speaking, he was here for Tuck, and he could have asked for help from the Office of Sorcerers in case of any danger. If he did not go, it was very possible that the mysterious hunter would notice some anomaly.

Of course, Fernando knew very well in his heart that this city might not be under the control of sorcerers anymore. He inferred it based on the cry for help.

The priest slowly moved forward and circumvented Fernando as if he could see. “Follow me, paranoid sorcerer. You will sense the almightiness of God after you come to the temple. You will know that Tuck has chosen a better path with his heart.”

He’s not stopping me? Having no time to think, Fernando walked out of the villa with the priest.

It was already late at night. The silver moon was hazy, and darkness was everywhere in the city. Few lights could be seen.

Following the priest unhurriedly, Fernando analyzed the whole thing. “A sorcerer somehow became an evil god’s believer after leaving such notes, the whole city has been blocked, and someone delivers water and food regularly... Are the sorcerers secretly doing something based on this city, or have some believers of the evil god infiltrated Kufuray and controlled it bit by bit?”

It was not difficult to come up with the two possibilities because the place was in the territory of the sorcerers after all. It was next to the churches of the other gods but beyond the reach of the dark creatures, elves, dwarfs, or the Saint Truth. The first possibility could also mean the cooperation with the evil god.

He weighed the two possibilities, hoping to figure out the situation and find a way of survival. Based on the fact that it was a sorcerer who cried for help, the second possibility seemed more likely.

The priest in the lead walked to the market area and opened one of the stores.

Many goods were placed behind the door. There was nothing special. The blind priest passed the messy place agilely without bumping into anything.

At the center of the store, stone stairs led to the basement, where bright and yellow light was leaking out.

Kufuray has such underground chambers too. No wonder the archmage can hide and ask for help. Fernando thought to himself. Then, he frowned and sensed the contradictions. “As I inferred before, the mysterious hunter must be at least a level-nine expert, or he couldn’t have forced an archmage who is capable of putting me into a dream to stay here.

“Would such an expert secretly investigate after knowing that his enemy is hiding in the city, or would he simply erase the city with his strongest attack?”

Fernando believed that none of the experts in this age had the kindness to care about other people’s lives. They would certainly do whatever it took to accomplish the mission as soon as possible in case the enemy's reinforcements came. So, how could the expert have decided to play hide-and-seek with the archmage in Kufuray? Was he not scared that a legend would pass by the place by accident?

It was obvious that the most effective approach was to destroy the city with thunderous attacks so that the archmage would be forced out or killed in his shelter. Whatever protection he was under, when an attack that was powerful enough to destroy the city arrived, the magic effects would definitely be triggered, and he would be discovered as a result.

There was another possibility, which was that the method of hiding involved the deep mysteries of time and space. However, an archmage was apparently incapable of that. If it was naturally formed, he could have stayed in the shelter peacefully without asking for help in a hurry.

More importantly, this place was not close to Aalto. Whatever happened, as long as the Office of Sorcerers was destroyed in the very beginning, nobody would notice anything wrong in ten minutes.

"Therefore, it's not that the mysterious hunter does not want to demolish the city, but his certain concerns prevent him from choosing such a radical approach. He is forced to play hide-and-seek with the archmage..."

Inferring the enemy's thoughts from their action, Fernando sensed more and more "truth". "Either the evil god in this place is beyond level nine and terrifies him, or it is this!"

Based on his previous speculation, Fernando believed that he had already seen through the mist!

"If the evil god has reached the level of legendary, the sorcerers would definitely be willing to cooperate with him in such a situation as long as he is willing to. He will be given a territory for his preaching. There's no need to be so stealthy at all..."

"Also, something has happened to many sorcerers in this place.

Even though the enemy can fake voices and mails, there are always irrecoverable loopholes, like the people who deliver food and water but do not enter the city, and the source of the food and water... In such an intense situation, it can hardly escape the attention of the sorcerers in Aalto...

“Therefore, this place can only be a secret laboratory of the legends of Aalto! Only they can separate a city within their territory from the outside world without causing any suspicion! Only they can mobilize a large batch of food without raising any attention!

“That’s why the mysterious hunter did not destroy the city immediately, which would’ve attracted the legends!”

The mist before him gradually dispersed, and the situation was manifested before Fernando’s eyes. However, he was even more stunned after he figured out the truth.

“We’re here.” The priest’s old and rigid voice echoed next to Fernando’s ears.

He trembled and woke up from his thoughts, only to discover that he had finished walking down the stairs without him knowing it. He was standing in the middle of a temple that was fully engraved with patterns of death.

In the temple, many people were praying on their knees. Their genders and ages varied.

“Tuck.” Before his God, the priest’s voice became low.

A man in an old black jacket moved backward to the priest and Fernando. He did not stand up and was purely moving on his knees.

It was not until he left the praying mass that he finally turned around and looked at Fernando. “Who are you?”

His eyes were lost and dirty.

Fernando identified that it was the real Tuck. He said solemnly, “I’m hiring a batch of talented sorcerers, and Furan recommended you.”

He specifically mentioned Furan and hid the information about Holm, hoping that whoever was behind it could be scared. Although it was highly unlikely, it was still worth trying.

“Hehe. Talented sorcerers...” Tuck stressed “sorcerers” before he said peacefully, “I’ve understood the real significance of my life. I will never study the boring magic anymore.”

“Is that so? I’m very sorry.” Fernando gave a polite and normal answer.

As a matter of fact, if anyone familiar with him were here, they would’ve noticed his strangeness immediately. How could the roarer not have spat on Tuck’s face and lambasted faith and god.

At this moment, tides were surging in Fernando’s heart, not because of Tuck, but because he had seen the truth of the whole thing!

“This issue can be divided into two parts. At first, the sorcerers were studying something with this cult. They blocked the city and forbade everyone from leaving for that purpose. Then, an archmage was hunted by someone and hid in a shelter in the city. He put me into a dream through a ritual and asked for my help.

“Then, the problem can’t be more obvious now. Both the archmage and his hunter are certainly aware of the specialties of this place. Otherwise, someone would’ve tried to destroy the city, and they would’ve been killed by the legends.

“Then, would a city that is under the control of sorcerers watch an archmage be hunted without doing anything? Even though the archmage felt that the sorcerers in this place had been controlled by the mysterious hunter, he could have caused trouble and attracted the legend who monitored this place. But he didn’t do that!

“Also, can a secret research base of sorcerers, which has blocked a city with great resources, be controlled so easily?

“It’s only possible if the legend who monitors this place is on the same side with the mysterious hunter. Or rather, the legend may be the mysterious hunter!

“That’s why the archmage, who sensed something wrong from a certain channel, did not ask for help. That’s why places like the Office of Sorcerers were easily controlled, because they had been under control in the first place.

“The legend hasn’t resorted to any powerful approaches probably because many other legends are still watching over this place. He doesn’t dare to cause too much noise!”

Although he did not understand the reason behind the situation, or whether he had been involved in an internal strife, Fernando had no time to think about that right now. He only felt that his blood was freezing. Did he have to challenge a legend now?

He did not wait for Antec and Furan to look for himself who had gone missing, because the legend would definitely kill him before they did. After all, it was the rule that many legends made up together—entering Kufuray was allowed, but exiting it was not!

Tuck nodded and returned to the praying team. Fernando thanked the priest mechanically and walked out.

“How can I save myself?” Fernando thought hard but could not come up with a way to escape a legend.

When he walked on the street under the chilling moonlight, Fernando felt refreshed and decided to consider the problem from the perspective of the caged archmage.

“Since the issue here has something to do with the legendary supervisor, it was a rather risky move that the archmage put me into a dream. Also, there wasn’t any clue in Tuck’s notes at all. It means that he asked for my help because he believed it was hopeful. It was not a random or desperate choice.

“Then, where does the hope lie exactly? Is it my wisdom, my magic abilities, or something else?”

Chapter 890: Risk

890 Risk

Under the moonlight, Fernando walked to Tuck's ragged house, trying to consider from the perspective of the trapped archmage.

"First of all, he has to choose his rescuer cautiously. If he asks for the help of a random sorcerer in the city, it's very likely that he will expose his traces. After all, not everybody can figure out the real situation as I can. One moment of carelessness, and he will be discovered by the mysterious hunter or the supervising legend."

It was something that Fernando confirmed at the beginning. For the trapped archmage, there were few opportunities for survival. He could not afford to waste any of them.

"Why did he choose me over Tuck or any other sorcerers? How am I different from them?"

Fernando believed that he certainly had advantages that could let the trapped archmage escape. That was why the archmage chose him and entered his dream to ask for help. He intended to find out the specific advances to decide his operation plan.

Fernando was both scared and excited when he realized that his opponent was a legend. His brain was much more active than usual.

"I am a seventh-circle senior-rank sorcerer, and Tuck is a sixth-circle one. The gap is not huge. I don't have obvious advantages. Besides, I never used any senior-rank spells in Kufuray City. It's certainly impossible for the trapped archmage to figure out my real capabilities, which means that my strength is not the reason why he chooses me. Well, faced with a legendary sorcerer, the strength of the senior rank matters little.

"My wisdom? I'm from Holm. Even if the trapped archmage knows me, he certainly does not know if I am a quick thinker."

To be honest, Fernando had basically guessed who the trapped archmage was. Few ninth-circle archmages could put him into dreams after they were heavily wounded, and even fewer could hide right under the nose of a legendary sorcerer. There weren't many archmages who were so good at dreams either. Only one archmage met all the conditions, which was Stanis, Antec's classmate whose cognitive world had half-solidified. He happened to not be in Aalto. Both the timing and his strength checked.

"It's not strange that Stanis heard about me from Antec before. However, those tales are certainly not enough for Stanis to choose me because of my wisdom.

"This place is separated from the outside world. My connections with Antec and Furan are pointless too..."

Fernando was puzzled for a moment, unable to figure out why Stanis entrusted such an important matter to him.

"Huh. I am wearing the transformation belt under the name of Nando. He has never met me before and couldn't have recognized me..." Fernando suddenly remembered that he was now Ms. Nando.

However, he soon realized the reason. When he was in the Office of Sorcerers, he had registered himself in order to ask about Tuck's whereabouts. He stated that he was Nando from Holm, endorsed by Antec and Furan. Taking the information into consideration, Stanis could roughly guess that he was Fernando based on Antec's description in the past, except that he was now temporarily a female. After all, Antec had few friends, and barely any of them was from Holm.

"In such a case, he may be hiding somewhere in the Office of Sorcerers. The most dangerous place is the safest place... Well, eliminating strength and wisdom, what factors make me more suitable to help him get out of the trouble? Seduction?" Fernando ruled out the possibility without thinking. He could not even meet the legend or the level-nine expert. How could he seduce them? Besides, with their strength, they must have appreciated all the beauties in the world.

What can it be? What can it be? Fernando paced back and forth before the ragged house, looking for the greatest difference between himself and other people, as well as the qualities that other people might describe and remember him by.

Suddenly, he stopped with his eyes widened. “If I were Antec, I would’ve described my friend Fernando as a weaselly, impatient, reckless, mean, and unapproachable man who roars like rumbling thunders when he throws a tantrum...”

The qualities that were of no use ebbed, and “impatience” popped up in Fernando’s mind. “Perhaps only an impatient and reckless sorcerer can create an opportunity for Stanis to escape, or at least he thinks so!

“What would an impatient and reckless sorcerer do? A cowardly and cautious man like Tuck would have decided to sneak quietly. His materials and his notebook are just distractions to eliminate doubts...

“An impatient and reckless sorcerer does not wait. He will break out unexpectedly... In such a case, he will attract the attention of the supervisor or trigger the defense magic circles, which will give Stanis a brief window... Well, since he has escaped here, the King of Nightmare must be one of the legends who are involved in the research. It is possible that Stanis can reach out to the King of Nightmare during the brief window...”

For a moment, Fernando felt that he was Stanis. It was almost like they knew what was on each other’s mind even though they had never met before!

“However, in such a case, it’s very possible that they will vent their fury on me. If there’s something wrong with the supervising legend, he can certainly kill Stanis and escape before the King of Nightmare arrives. Why is he confident to take the risk?”

Fernando couldn’t figure out the reason. He could only trust Stanis, who would know better than him.

“If I don’t take my chances, Antec and Furan will kill me to keep my mouth shut the moment they approach, and I won’t be able to take my chances. Even if I die, I have to die while I'm trying to leave!" Fernando made up his mind. Then, he sniffed. "That's really the choice of an impatient and reckless sorcerer..."

He was as mean about himself as he was about other people.

"However, I need to observe tomorrow and see if it is forbidden to leave this city, in case I'm tricked." Fernando was not someone who believed everything other people said.

...

After spending the night in Tuck's house, Fernando pretended to go sightseeing after the failed recruitment. As he expected, nobody left the city at all! The wagons that delivered food and water would stop at the city gate!

After he confirmed it, Fernando took a deep breath. He decided to attack immediately when the supervisors and the cultists thought that he would go back and prepare himself!

Pa!

A silver bolt of lightning as thick as an arm glittered in the sky and struck the city gate, breaking the magic defense and splashing the mud.

In the meantime, the space before Fernando twisted, and countless runes gathered into a dazzling, queer gate.

It was Chaos Teleportation!

At this moment, the whole city suddenly glowed. The magic symbols and patterns appeared and piled into overlapping magic circles.

Right when the magic circles were triggered, clusters of mist rose from the Office of Sorcerers and were connected to the magic circles.

Immediately, stars were rising, and the whole city became blurry. Nobody could see beyond one meter.

Fernando felt so drowsy that he passed out before he was teleported.

...

Struggling to open his eyes, Fernando sensed his body again. Right when he was glad that he was still alive, a beautiful and friendly beauty appeared before him.

“Furan, you’re here?” Fernando greeted her subconsciously, but he realized that something was wrong the moment he opened his mouth. Why was it a male’s voice?

Furan was as gorgeous as a figure painting when she was quiet, and it was a major contrast when she talked. She laughed, and her eyes were cold as she said, “Why? Are you surprised that a chick has turned into a man? You are a pervert! You turned into a girl and tricked me. You even slept with me!” The more she talked, the angrier she became.

“That... That was a mistake...” Fernando suspected that Furan figured out the function of his belt and nullified it when he was sleeping.

Furan chuckled. “No, it was not a mistake.”

When Fernando looked at her curiously, she said with a faint smile, “I asked the Lord of Abyss to perform body modification for you. It will be permanent and irremovable. You will always be a girl. Rest assured. I will take good care of you.”

“Stop messing around!” Fernando only experienced it out of curiosity and never considered a permanent transition. He immediately roared, trying to stop Furan.

“Sleep now. You will always be a girl after you wake up!” Furan giggled.

Fernando tried to support his body, but the scene before his eyes suddenly broke. Darkness arrived and quickly disappeared.

“Antec?” Looking at his friend at a loss, he found himself in a regular bedroom.

Antec chuckled. “You had a nightmare just now? Tell me. Let me analyze what it is about.”

“Have I been physically transformed by the Lord of Abyss?”
Fernando groped his body abruptly, only to discover that it was truly a girl’s!

“No,” Antec answered in confusion.

Seeing that the belt was still there, Fernando was immediately relieved. “Just now, I dreamed...”

Antec couldn’t stop laughing when he heard Fernando’s story. “That was the deeply-hidden fear in your subconscious! To be honest, I’m scared of her too. I stole you back as soon as possible because I feared that she might notice something. You’d better go back to Holm early.”

“What happened?” Fernando shifted the subject back to business.

Antec became solemn. “This is what happened. Stanis was ambushed by ‘Aurora Envoy’, who ranked the fifth among the night watchers, when he was out looking for materials. He paid a huge price to kill the enemy, but he sensed that he was followed by other enemies. So, not having the courage to return, he secretly hid in Kufuray City.

“However, when he was about to ask for help, he accidentally discovered that Archmage Prince, the Original Fire’s most trusted student, had secretly joined the Church and become ‘Bright Torch’, who ranked the sixth among the night watchers.

“Also, the Original Fire was engaged in an experiment and could not be distracted, and the whole city was watched by Prince. You know what happened later.

“After you passed out, the ‘Dream Transformation’ that my teacher secretly deployed was activated, allowing him to arrive in Kufuray and protect Stanis. The Original Fire, who came later, tried to capture Prince, but was one step late. The guy blew himself up, and even his phylactery was shattered.”

Fernando frowned. “Do you mean that something was wrong with Prince instead of the Original Fire?”

That could explain why Stanis was willing to take the risk.

Chapter 891: Ten Years Later

891 Ten Years Later “That’s right.” After learning Fernando’s question, Antec made fun of him. “You were suspicious that a legend surrendered to the Church? What can they gain from that? The common archmages can receive safety and the materials provided by the Church. What can a legendary sorcerer get? After the external problems are eliminated, they will be the first guys to be thrown away.”

Such a smooth and convincing explanation did not sound like something that a guy as cowardly as Antec could have thought of so quickly.

He must have remembered it when the King of Nightmare and Stanis discussed it... Fernando mocked Antec in his heart and said solemnly, “What exactly are the legends researching in Kufuray City?”

“The mysteries of faith, the deification of gods,” Antec said frankly.

Fernando stared at him with his red eyes, until it was impossible for him to remain calm. He moved his shoulder back and asked, “What are you suspecting?”

“I don’t know, but I’m certain that it is definitely not the answer, at least not the most fundamental answer,” Fernando said solemnly.

Antec was obviously relieved. He looked at Fernando sincerely. “It is an answer nonetheless.”

“Got it. I won’t pursue it any further. Asking a coward to bear too much pressure will make him too scared to go to sleep.” Fernando heard Antec’s meaning between the lines. If he asked further, it was possible that his safety could not be guaranteed.

Antec was not angry after being mocked. He patted Fernando’s shoulder with a smile. “The more scared I am, the better I will sleep.”

The smooth feeling on his fingers made him move his hand back quickly. He blushed again because Fernando was still “Nando”!

Fernando sniffed. Feeling that his body had already recovered, he said, “I should get out of here as soon as possible. The rotten secrets buried below the ground disgust me. I have goosebumps all over my body.”

In short, he felt that the secrets were dangerous.

“I have brought over the sorcerers you hired. They’re out of the city.” Antec was very scared that Furan would see through Fernando’s identity, in which case he would definitely become collateral damage. So, he had been trying to persuade Fernando to leave as soon as possible.

Fernando looked at Antec in surprise. “It’s rare to see you so prepared.”

“Hehe.” Antec enjoyed Fernando’s “praise”.

Fernando talked with Antec for a while. After making deals about future reunions, he walked to the door and turned the knob.

At this moment, a man who appeared to be in his thirties walked in. He was so plain-looking that he would have been unrecognizable in any crowd.

He eyed Fernando up and down and said in a low voice, “Although you are a pervert, you have the vision and analysis abilities that are better than other people’s. That’s not bad.”

“Am I supposed to be happy for your ‘compliment’, you idiot who cannot distinguish between dream and reality?” Fernando was as mean as usual.

The man was Stanis, whom Antec had described and painted for Fernando before, and the future King of Nightmare.

“Words cannot bring you any benefits, but magic can,” Stanis said coldly. “According to Antec, you have some different opinions on illusions and dreams. I hope that they are not too shabby, or it will be a waste of my time.”

Fernando chuckled. “I also hope that you won’t waste my time.”

The two of them communicated their opinions on illusions and dreams in the ward. Although it did not involve the detailed magic symbols and structures, they both benefited a lot from the brainstorming.

A while after Fernando left, Furan, who had been occupied in her teacher’s work, came. It was not exactly love between her and Fernando, but she couldn’t help but feel guilty when she thought that Fernando’s misfortunes were because of her wrong intelligence.

“What? She has returned to Holm?” Furan looked at Antec and could hear nothing else.

She did not say goodbye to her? Did the recent happiness not deserve a farewell at all?

Furan was rather sad that Fernando had left and ignored her charm.

Suddenly, Stanis opened his mouth and said nonchalantly, “You’re interested in a female body with a male soul? Antec is not bad. He has a soul that is even more cowardly than ladies. He’ll fit your requirement after some physical modification.”

“What do you mean?” Furan was stunned at first. Then, all the confusions when she was with Fernando surged up, and she glared at Antec. Fernando was not a professional actor at all. It was okay for a short while, but as they spent more time together, there were certain details that Furan found perplexing.

Antec stepped back in fear. “It... It was none of my business. Fernando was just a pervert who liked to be a girl.”

He did not have the courage to lie before Furan’s face.

Gloomily, Furan gritted her teeth hard and did not say anything for a long time. Right when Antec was frightened and trying to move closer to Stanis, she suddenly waved her arm. “I’ll turn him into a real female next time I meet him!”

.....

Ten years later, Rentato was warm and vigorous at the end of spring.

Fernando, still wearing his favorite red magic robe, ignored the knights and clerics in the city and soon reached the Roasted Fish Hotel.

“Old Green, you are still not dead!” he shouted the moment he entered the room.

Old Green narrowed his eyes and looked at him. “I’ll still be alive even after you are dead. Today’s letters.”

He threw a thick pile of letters to Fernando.

Ten years ago, after the Sword of Truth was sent back by the Church along with two saints, the situation was stabilized. However, as time went by, since the Church was caught in an impasse with the coalition army in Aalto and Tria, and the legends of the Church were distracted by the legendary sea monsters in the Boundless Ocean, the nobles in Holm began to have second thoughts and did not work as hard anymore.

The new situation reached an apex two years ago when the Liege of Death fully recovered and killed a grand cardinal in a head-on clash. Later on, the nobles would turn a blind eye to those in magic robes on the street as long as they were not with clerics. Also, more and more of them were secretly working with sorcerers, hoping that the Church could be struck out and a balance among the nobles, the sorcerers, and the Church could be forged.

An invisible hand appeared before Fernando before grabbing the letters and tearing them open. As per his expectation, he found Hathaway’s handwriting to be even more elegant now. On the letters were mathematical questions so complicated that even Fernando felt dazzled, having the illusion that he was not as good at mathematics as Hathaway.

Ten years might be too short to make a breakthrough in magic, but it was enough for a mathematical master with enough talents to rise!

“This girl is not too bad at mathematics,” Fernando remarked with his symbolic tone.

Green scorned. “This is your 39th similar remark. Is it really so difficult to admit that her mathematical talents are better than yours?”

Fernando did not hear that, for he had already sat down and dwelt in the world of mathematics.

“She has such a profound understanding of fluxion, no, calculus... She made decisive contributions...” The more Fernando read, the more shocked he became.

He had been writing to Hathaway and offering mathematical guidance over the past ten years, but when it came to the most cutting-edge fluxion, she only asked the basic definitions. Fluxion had been renamed into calculus by Douglas. However, in one of today’s letters, the knowledge on calculus that Hathaway gave was beyond his abilities, and he had to learn it first!

“When did she pick up calculus?”

Fernando thought suspiciously. He soon remembered something Douglas said, “A young friend believes that calculus sounds better than fluxion, and she has made great contributions to the establishment of this system. So, let’s name it as she says.”

At that time, he thought that Douglas was referring to Erica who dropped by a lot. He realized now that it had to be Hathaway. She had been writing to him as well as Douglas about mathematical knowledge!

Since when was she mathematically capable of co-establishing calculus with Douglas? Fernando grimaced, feeling that he had been left behind.

“Old man, Hathaway is still writing to Douglas?” Fernando raised his head and asked.

Old Green wiped the cup as usual and said casually, "Of course, your mathematical abilities are nothing compared to Douglas'. She wouldn't have asked for your guidance if Douglas weren't in Allyn all the time."

He certainly did not mind striking Fernando.

"Nonetheless, calculus has been completed years sooner than I thought. This will be the most dazzling achievement in the history of magic!" Fernando did not feel bitter but talked in excitement.

Old Green was stunned by how open-minded he was. He asked, "The most dazzling achievement? Hehe. Who could've thought that one of the contributors is a little girl who is incapable of magic."

He cared for Hathaway as a senior. Even though ten years had passed, Hathaway was still a little girl in his eyes.

"It seems that I need to treat her as an equal during our communication." Fernando put the letters back, ready to study them further after he was back.

Old Green looked around. Seeing nobody here, he asked in a low voice, "Are we taking action tonight?"

Fernando nodded solemnly before he said in slight discomfort, "You... You'd better be careful."

Having recovered his strength, the Liege of Death believed that it was high time that they occupied a major city with necessary infrastructure so that the defense he had been secretly worked on for decades could be established as soon as possible to resist God's Arrival. It had been ten years. Nobody knew how strong the pope was and how long it would take before he could perform God's Arrival. They could only make preparations as early as possible.

"Are you confident?" Old Green asked in concern.

Fernando nodded his head. "Of course, because the nobles will be on our side!"

Chapter 892: Accidents

892 Accidents

In Cocus of the Duchy of Calais...

Since it was right next to the southern swamps, it was extremely hot even though it was the middle of the night. Now and then, creepy birds flew out of the darkness with bloodcurdling shrieks.

At the edge of the swamp, Arnold, who had been staring at Cocus City, was suddenly amused. "Nielson, you never thought you could return to this city someday, did you?"

He was talking about his return as a master.

This place, as the capital of the Asso Empire, had the most perfect infrastructure for the defense that the Liege of Death worked out. Naturally, it became the target for the operation.

With his bloated fat jiggling, Nielson said with unusual, mixed feelings. "I thought that I would never visit Cocus again in my life... I remember that I was praised right here by the Liege of Death when I became a ninth-circle archmage."

Priscilla covered her anxiety with a smile. "At first, I thought the target was Rentato instead of Cocus."

The operation was mostly to be carried out by legendary sorcerers under the secret cooperation of legendary knights. However, after the churches were destroyed and the cities were occupied, a lot of senior-rank sorcerers were needed to maintain the order and prepare for the construction of the defense. Therefore, Arnold was waiting for the signal at the edge of the swamp with Nielson, Priscilla, Amanata, Fernando, and the other sorcerers.

Arnold clicked his tongue. "The Sword of Truth does not want to lose his territory."

"Huh, why is Douglas not here?" Priscilla basically figured out the reason. She looked around but did not see the archmage who left a deep impression on her ten years ago.

Arnold smiled. "Douglas said that his research had approached the most critical moment, and he was onto something. So, I said that he did not need to take part in the operation."

Then, he suddenly narrowed his eyes. "It has begun."

He received a message from the Liege of Death. The legendary sorcerers were about to take action.

.....

Below the thick mud, the ragged City in the Sky lay there just as usual.

Douglas sat in the square at the center of the city, faced with pieces of papers that had symbols and numbers all over them.

The law concluded from tremendous astrological records and the application of calculus allowed him to touch something marvelous, but there was still a gap for him to figure out what it was exactly.

The questions haunted him and kept him here for days, but despite that, he never found the perfect answer.

The secrets of planets, and the power source of the earth. The most essential secrets of the world seemed to be right before him, and all he needed to do was to push the gate and embrace them!

All he needed was one more moment!

In the square, several sorcerers, who were watching over the place, roamed with their kids. They were very curious about the contemplative archmage but dared not approach him.

The kids ran joyfully far away from each other, trying to win the fruits in their parents' hands.

.....

Aalto was set on fire. Buildings collapsed one after another. The defense circles did not seem to be of any use.

“What happened? Where’s our defense?” Beto, who was in the middle of a party, did not expect the Church to attack at such a moment, or that the defense of Aalto did not work at all!

Aalto was the western stronghold of the Magic Empire. It was first built to deal with the creatures in the Dark Mountain Range and only second to Antiffler in terms of sturdiness. After legendary sorcerers, vampires, dragons, elves, and other people were gathered here to resist the Church, the defense had been perfected and fortified without a care about the cost. The city was as strong as Antiffler after more than ten years. It was one of the trump cards that the coalition army hoped to offset “God’s Arrival” with.

However, the defense was not activated at the critical moment!

Furan was in a rather chilly mood as she panicked. “There’s only one reason why the defense is not activated. Something is wrong with the legend who is watching over the defense!”

“Who is it?” Beto, the twins, and Antec asked simultaneously.

Furan looked at them and snorted, “Are you idiots? The most important thing right now is to escape, not to find out which legend is wrong. Can you kill him? The grand cardinals and knights of the Church are right above Aalto, and you have the time to ask that question?”

She talked through the telepathic bond this time. While berating them, she ran to the basement of the villa. “Do not run out. We may be killed by the aftermath of the battle of legends. Do not go to our teachers either. They must’ve been stalled by the grand cardinals and legendary knights. Let’s get out of the city through secret channels and hide in the Dark Mountain Range first before we find out what happened!”

The proud students of legends were rather panicked. They did not know how to respond due to their lack of experience. Things would have been better if Stanis were here, but he had gone to the Dark Mountain Range for materials again.

Thankfully, Furan kept the basic calmness at this moment and showed her leadership. She pointed out the best way to deal with the situation.

Antec trembled hard in fear. He never thought that he would confront such grave dangers. He preferred to hide in the dark and defeat the enemy by creating dreams and illusions. Right now, the enormous noises in the sky challenged his heart all the time.

Suddenly, the purest light descended from the sky and purged all the unholy things as if it were a ruling of the god.

The light was reflected by a mysterious mirror that appeared out of nowhere and split into multiple streaks. One of them hit the house where Furan and her companions were at precisely.

A holy light burst out. With a tiny crack that sounded like the falling gavel in the hands of a judge, the whole house disappeared.

Beto, Furan, Antec, and the rest of them were only one step away from the basement, but they were all consumed by the aftermath of the Light of Judgment.

Seeing his body and his soul about to turn into holy light quickly, Beto only had one vague thought in his mind. Am I going to die so easily?

In the age of chaos and darkness, Beto wasn't certain that he could live to the natural end of his life even though he was a legend's student. He had pictured possible ways that led to his death, and all of them were heroic. Some involved battles with legends, while some were his desperate counterattacks after he was ambushed.

However, he did not know until today that he would die such an easy and unknown death. The aftermath of the battle of two legends had wiped him out completely!

It was not a heroic death at all. He couldn't even put up a fight! He was now familiar with the ordinary people who died in the previous battles!

“So, I am not the hero...” Beto’s consciousness completely dispersed.

Antec also sensed the momentary vaporization of his body and his soul. His fear was finally gone, replaced by vague sorrow. “I haven’t created a real dream yet...”

“I don’t have many dates in my dream yet...”

“I will never live to meet Fernando again...”

“To be honest, the Nando he turned into was really pretty, although not as pretty as Furan...”

Stunned, Furan watched Beto, Antec, and her other companions swallowed by the holy light. The brightness of their life-preservation methods glittered, only to be drowned again. She knew very well that she would end just like them.

“I don’t want to die here!

“I am an empress who will become a legendary sorcerer in the future. How can I die like a common sorcerer so easily?

“There are many wishes that I have not fulfilled yet. I need to settle scores with Nando and transform him into a real girl...”

Ambitions, desires, and wishes broke out, but Furan’s struggles were useless. After a brief predicament, she was also dissolved by the holy light, leaving nothing but subtle regrets behind.

The whole time, the two legends fighting in the sky never looked at the house at all.

The house had nothing but incomplete walls that were ablaze. Nobody knew that the flames were telling the story of a bunch of legends’ students struggling against their fall, only to die in silence.

Whatever big wishes and ambitions they had, they could only be buried in such an age!

After a hot wind blew over, one couldn’t even find any ashes anymore.

.....

The King of Nightmare, the Stellar Mentor, and the other legendary sorcerers fought a few grand cardinals and legendary knights hard, communicating with each other through the telepathic bond.

“They are unstoppable. Gregory is suppressing Dracula and the Master of the Boundless Ocean with the strength of a demigod.”

“Mecantron stopped Danisos. Ivan and Rudolf are fighting the Mother God of the Earth and the elven queen...”

“The Silver Moon hasn’t shown up?”

“No? What do we do?”

“We have to turn to the last resort! It’s time to put Kufuray to use!”

“Alright. We can only summon the Lord of Hell now!”

After the Silver Moon’s failed attack against the former pope, the legendary sorcerers decided to add another important leverage to the battle, even if it meant that they had to sell their souls to the devils!

Suddenly, the Stellar Mentor said with a stunned expression, “It’s useless! The blood sacrifice in Kufuray is useless!”

“It’s him! It’s Banham!” Somebody finally realized who the traitor was. It was Banham, the Original Fire!

It was not the Original Fire’s turn to watch over the city, so they did not suspect him at the beginning. From what they had seen, he must have assassinated the legendary sorcerer!

Now that their last trump card did not work, the Stellar Mentor, the King of Nightmare, and the rest of them were not willing to fight anymore. They began to look for opportunities to escape.

However, a middle-aged man suddenly appeared in the sky. His face was plain and his skin was dark, but he was graceful in his sacred crown and his platinum staff.

“Gregory!”

“The pope!”

“Isn’t he stopped by Dracula and the Master of the Boundless Ocean?”

Pope Gregory smiled. “Since the Silver Moon didn’t come, Dracula could only evacuate in advance. After he left, Harex certainly did not want to waste his life here either.”

After a pause, he looked at the bunch of legendary sorcerers. “None of you are at the peak of legendary. I wonder if you can take one ‘Light of Judgment’ from me together.”

When level-three sorcerers were up against a demigod, they would be killed instantly if they did not escape through their unpredictable spells. Furthermore, in the current situation, they were still being haunted by plenty of grand cardinals and legendary knights.

“Why has he given up pursuing the top legends but focused his attention on dealing with the rest of us?” That was the final thought of the King of Nightmare and the rest of the sorcerers.

Chapter 893: Darkness and Dawn

893 Darkness and Dawn In the high sky, the Witch of Iceland, the Eye of Curse, and the Liege of Death stood in a triangle far away from each other. At their center was “Heart of Time” Kritonia who was not so confident anymore, as well as the mature man Hoffenberg who had a pair of cold silver eyes.

Neither of the legendary knights was holding their longsword. They simply floated there empty-handed.

“It’s about time. I’ll go down and ask them to cancel the defense.” Hoffenberg raised his eyes and looked at the clear stars.

Atlant, the Eye of Curse, said with a smile, “Thank you for your cooperation, Your Majesty.”

Different from Kritonia, Hoffenberg was not controlled by the Liege of Death’s death, and he was almost a top legend. So, he was more like a partner.

Hoffenberg turned around and flew downward in a streak of light as his voice rang in the sky.

“Take action!”

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when Kritonia’s body suddenly blurred into ripples. A silver sword burst out of his body and slashed at the Witch of Iceland!

He was actually holding Hoffenberg’s “Sword of Truth”!

Caught unprepared, the Witch of Iceland only had the time to activate the passive defense and blink effects. However, the light of the silver sword could not be thrown away like a parasite. It slashed the magic defense and nullified the space transportation effects, cutting the Witch of Iceland precisely.

The Sword of Truth cuts everything!

Kritonia cared about nothing else and did not defend himself at all, as if the Liege of Death and the Eye of Curse next to him did not exist.

At this moment, he could only see the Witch of Iceland in his eyes.

The Liege of Death simply watched it without doing anything because he seemed to have been transferred to a different world!

The silver sword passed through the Witch of Iceland's body, which seemed to be made of ice. It was torn apart by countless illusionary gaps into dancing pieces, resulting in a great snowfall.

Even on the verge of her death, the Witch of Iceland could not believe that the Heart of Time would attack her, because he had been implanted with a terrible curse by the Liege of Death earlier. The moment he harmed them, his blood would immediately boil and kill him.

The source of the curse was from the top legendary essence of the Liege of Death. So, even the demigods such as the Lord of Hell or the God of Silver Moon could barely lift it without catching the attention of the Liege of Death, unless a demigod-level sorcerer cracked it directly.

It was absolutely impossible!

Such a sorcerer hadn't been born yet!

The snowflakes dispersed, and the Witch of Iceland perished.

The silver streak of brightness that Hoffenberg turned into zigzagged halfway and flashed to the front of the Eye of Curse.

Atlant had realized what was going on when the Witch of Iceland was attacked. However, instead of providing aid, he simply cast a spell to escape. Therefore, when the brightness that Hoffenberg turned into hit him, only a scream came through the spaces in between, but nothing better was achieved.

"You are a fast runner..." Hoffenberg said coldly and did not chase after him. Instead, he looked at the Liege of Death and thought to himself, Don't blame me. It's all because Aalto has failed, and you don't stand any chance anymore...

The intelligence half an hour ago decided his choice. Although the legendary sorcerers retained daily communication, they were incapable of establishing transmission magic circles everywhere and could only exchange messages through their demiplanes at fixed times. Since the legendary sorcerers of Aalto were in the middle of an intense battle, they certainly did not have the time to send intelligence to this place!

The Liege of Death seemed to have been abandoned by the world. He floated there. He was unable to speak, which made him realize that he had encountered a demigod.

In the sky of Cocus, a middle-aged man, who had a holy crown and a platinum staff, surfaced and said peacefully, "You should feel honored. The Lord has asked me to abort the pursuit of the dark creatures and come to execute you."

A top legendary sorcerer and a necromancer who had been a top legend for a thousand years were definitely most horrifying. Even Dracula and Danisos did not dare to say that they were stronger than the Liege of Death. In terms of the mysterious attacks, the survival abilities, and the resurrection methods, the Liege of Death was much more skilled than them.

Looking at Pope Gregory before him, the Liege of Death suddenly asked, "Who are you exactly?"

The curse on Kritonia had been somehow cracked, which made him realize that something was not right. He then sensed a vague feeling of familiarity from the pope; the familiarity that he had sensed from a certain legendary sorcerer many, many years ago.

Voices could not be spread out of the range of Gregory's power. He raised his head and said proudly, "You don't deserve to know."

The platinum staff was raised, and the projection of Mountain Paradise appeared. The praises of "You are one, and everyone" echoed in the sky.

.....

Old Fox Arnold felt anxious when he saw the dancing snowflakes. The terrible feeling came through the projection of the Host Star of Destiny.

“Run!” he roared desperately.

From every part of the swamp, gold knights and radiant knights came at them as elements and light. In Cocus, red robes arrived under the protection of the holy light. In the darkness, the night watchers reaped lives unpredictable.

Coming back to themselves, Congus, Nielson, Priscilla, Fernando, and the other sorcerers did not know what was going on, but they began to try their best to kill their enemies. In the meantime, they used life-preservation spells as soon as possible, hoping to escape even by means of suicide!

The battle was most intense.

Arnold searched for Priscilla and Fernando, hoping to give them a hand before he escaped.

At this moment, Kritonia saw him from the high sky. He narrowed his eyes and waved his right hand. The Sword of Truth immediately cut Arnold in a streak of brightness.

“You are too weak to be involved in this? Smartness without strength is nothing,” he mocked casually.

The magic effects on Arnold had been broken before they were activated. The sword passed through his body.

The cold and stinging feeling paralyzed Arnold’s soul and made him turn to Rentato subconsciously. He thought in confusion, Am I finally going to die?

.....

“Old fox!”

“Old fox!”

Struggling to the edge of the siege despite the wounds, Fernando saw the old fox hit by the silver sword just as he was about to cast Chaos Teleportation.

In his mind, the old fox was an extremely cunning old man. Whatever he said, there might be a scheme behind it. He was always at ease, and everything was under control.

Shouldn't he have more backup plans and more reinforcements? Was he dying just like this?

A dagger pierced out of the darkness into Fernando's back.

.....

Below the ground near Rentato...

Douglas sat at the center of the square in a daze, fully concentrated on the problem that was of paramount importance.

After working hard for a while, he raised his head in exhaustion and looked at the remaining sorcerers.

At this moment, a few little kids ran and played with each other. One of them accidentally threw away the apple in his hands.

In a parabola, the apple fell to the ground of the square.

The curve struck Douglas' head like a lightning and illuminated all the darkness. Everything he accumulated in the past was gathered into an answer.

“That's the case!

“That's the law of the motion of celestial bodies!”

As if he were crazy, Douglas picked up his quill and wrote on the paper next to him quickly.

All the fires in Allyn suddenly died out, and dull explosions came from the earth.

The sorcerers who stayed in this place looked at each other in bewilderment, having no idea what had happened.

It was night, and Rentato was supposed to be covered in darkness. However, a scorching sun hung in the sky and released light and heat.

Behind it, a vast and boundless universe appeared, and the stars functioned in both apparent and mysterious patterns.

“What happened?” The guards of the city who hadn’t slept yet were astounded.

.....

Near his death, Arnold suddenly saw the rising sun in the direction of Rentato, which was a major contrast to the darkness on his side. He struggled to put on a smile.

“Am I having an illusion?

“Or has he truly succeeded?”

In vague consolation, he was ripped into shreds by the Sword of Truth.

Fernando also saw that. Trying to prevent himself from being affected by the stunning effect of the dagger, he disappeared through Chaos Teleportation.

“It’s daytime in Rentato? Douglas’ cognitive world has half solidified? A feedback from the real world?”

They were the last thoughts before he passed out.

In the meantime, “Ceaseless Wind”, the legendary knight of Cocus, joined the battlefield and blocked everybody else who was trying to escape.

The ivory ocean of holy light consumed the sky. The Liege of Death's body turned transparent irreversibly.

Sensing the changes in Rentato, he smiled with complicated feelings. "The succession of magic never stops."

Pope Gregory seemed twenty years older all of a sudden, and his hair turned gray. He looked at the sun in Rentato and coughed. "It's only the half-solidification of the cognitive world. He's a new legend at most."

He needed quietness after God's Arrival and did not want to attack again, so he said to Hoffenberg, "You go and take care of it."

.....

The people he was familiar with collapsed, the old fox's blood spilled on his face, enemies were everywhere in the darkness, and it was impossible to escape... Fernando suddenly woke up from his nightmare, feeling pain all over his body.

"Huh." Somebody next to him sniffed.

Fernando looked in shock, only to discover that he was inside a spacious wagon, which was riding steadily without any bump. Inside the carriage, a most beautiful girl was staring at him expressionlessly.

She had a pair of clear and cold eyes.

"Hathaway?" Fernando recognized her although they hadn't met for ten years. He couldn't help but feel that the little girl had grown into a gorgeous woman.

Hathaway was wearing a common red court dress. She nodded her head as acknowledgment. Then, she thought for a long time, only to come up with nothing to comfort Fernando, so she simply said, "The obstacles to Douglas' legendary level are no more."

Fernando was back to reality all of a sudden. He roared in frustration and depression, "How is that going to help? The Liege of Death is dead, old fox is dead, Nielson is dead, everybody is dead!

“How is a new legend going to help anything?”

With her eyes glimmering, Hathaway stared at him for a while. Then, she picked up a thick, black-covered book nearby. “Douglas asked me to give it to you.”

“A book?” In his desperation, Fernando took over the book and looked at the cover, only to be briefly stunned.

It was “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy”!

Chapter 894: A Meeting of Three

894 A Meeting of Three

“Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy’... This is so Douglas...” Having known Douglas for years and communicated with him on magical knowledge often, he had a profound understanding of the guy’s naming style.

For some reason, Fernando’s anxiety and uneasiness were appeased when he saw the book. Just like when he studied magic every time, he forgot the dark reality, as well as the dark and hopeless environment, and completely devoted himself to the glamorous world.

It was a pity that there wasn’t a place where one could read magic books quietly, unless they ran far away. However, how far could they run if they only backed off?

Fernando’s mind was disturbed again, but he already opened the book subconsciously. The familiar handwriting entered his eyes.

The first part of the book was on the definitions of various symbols and scalar quantities. Fernando was involved in the discussion on the content before and soon understood them. Then, in the first article, Douglas pointed out three laws straightforwardly and established the mathematical preparations.

“The three laws of motion...” Fernando breathed hastily and could barely control his feelings. He read out the content aloud when he should have read it in his heart.

The three laws that Douglas concluded from nature were simple, straightforward, and apparently correct. One would feel that the laws went without saying the moment they read it. However, Fernando sensed more things from the three laws. The world he knew was dismembered into countless independent things that operated around the three laws!

The mysteries of the world were hidden in the phenomena that people believed to be natural and in the truths that they thought apparent!

After reading the three laws, Fernando felt that the whole world looked different in his eyes!

He completely forgot the heavy failure previously and the frustration brought by the Church. He was completely focused on the book.

In the second article and the third article, Douglas discussed and proved the objects' motion status under ideal circumstances and when they were restrained through strict mathematical approaches. Calculus that Fernando was familiar with was used as a main tool.

Fernando did not have much trouble understanding it. He felt that his long-time accumulation of knowledge had finally been summarized.

The more he read, the more admiration he had. Douglas' three laws were perfect! It was definitely the most in-depth description of motion in the history of magic!

However, his admiration did not last long. His mind was soon occupied by the title of the third article—"On the Law of Celestial Body Movement and Cosmic System".

The first three articles were like water that had been stored. They surged out in this article and gathered into something called "gravity". It was truly astonishing!

Also, Douglas discussed the shape of their own planet, the motion of the moon, the trajectory of comets, and the tides of the oceans based on them. Then, he analyzed and established an enormous universal system that included stars, planets, comets, and all the other natural phenomena!

"For a moment, the whole world is before my eyes..." Fernando forgot everything else and summarized his feelings in the notes.

His eyes had lost focus. A storm was brewing, and countless bolts of lightning were appearing.

Hathaway did not seem to sense Fernando's change. She was still calculating something with her pen and paper. The content was almost the same as the third article on Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy.

After reading the book, Fernando wasn't back to himself until a long time later. He grabbed onto the book so hard as if he feared that it would be gone.

It was too precious!

For a sorcerer, it was too precious!

After a long time, he finally roared, "Gravity! Is it the mysterious force that attracts the stars to move?"

Earnestly, he took out paper and pen from his magic pouch and began to deduce on his own.

The result clearly matched the astrological observations. Fernando said to Hathaway in excitement and confusion, "Is this the mystery of our world?"

"Yes." Hathaway nodded. Her silver eyes were still indifferent, but they were covered in a hazy mist, as if she was also touched by the revelation of world mysteries even though she was a princess instead of a sorcerer.

Fernando clenched his fist and suddenly knocked his head. "It's not an illusion! It's not an illusion!"

Casting a spell to his eyes, he looked at the sky through the thin curtain.

Stars were glittering brilliantly in the middle of the night, but in Fernando's eyes, many bright lines that bound and powered them were added among them.

"There can't be a magic circle that is more magnificent than that..."
Fernando complimented sincerely without any sarcasm.

Hathaway stopped her pen and looked at Fernando coldly. "Not desperate anymore?”

Fernando's face had a twisted expression, and his voice became low as he said, “After reading Douglas' Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy, I have a feeling that everything in the universe is under the control of sorcerers... Although the odds of success are low, I would like to shed the last drop of my blood for the pride and for the exploration of more mysteries.

“Also, given more time, when more sorcerers understand the laws of the universe and grasp calculus, there will be a population boom of senior-rank sorcerers, archmages, and even legendary sorcerers.

“For example, after reading the book, I am already confident to become an archmage in ten years although it hasn't been long since I reached the eighth circle.”

In his excitement, Fernando revealed his true thought.

Hathaway nodded. “You need time.”

It was her principle never to speak more words than necessary!

“Time... We are not necessarily running out of time...” Fernando thought hard and analyzed the current situation, looking for things that could be made use of.

At this moment, the wagon stopped.

“We're here.” Hathaway stood up, opened the door, and flew out.

She's flying out? Fernando's eyes were popping out. When did the little girl become a sorcerer? Also, she's at least in the fifth circle!

The one driving the wagon was Fernando's old acquaintance, “Blue Grace” Sharp. He sniffed and said, “You were a bad influence on Hathaway. She went to the royal library in secret and found the files about the Will of Elements.”

The Will of Elements, an organization of legends in the Magic Empire, was destroyed by the Sword of Truth, but the files and books were secretly collected by Hoffenberg.

Fernando's lips twitched. I only taught her mathematics, not magic! Don't blame it on me!

The wagon stopped at a corner of a quiet manor. Fernando sensed something the moment he got off the wagon and looked at the darkness on the left side.

Tall and strong, Douglas walked out of the darkness. He seemed even more mature than before, like a charming gentleman in his forties.

Looking at Fernando with a smile, he said straightforwardly, "There are four things. Firstly, I've become a legend. It's a brand-new class that I received from the feedback of the real world. I've named it 'Elect of Magic'.

"Secondly, a lot of archmages and senior-rank sorcerers survived. I've copied 'Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy' and offered it to them.

"Thirdly, not all of the legendary sorcerers were killed in the battle of Aalto. At least seven legends, including the Lord of Frigidity, the Lord of Abyss, the Umbral King, and the Owner of Souls, survived. Some hid in the Dark Mountain Range, some returned to the northland, and some went missing. I've asked someone to deliver 'Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy' to the Lord of Frigidity. The top legends like Prince Dracula, Danisos, and the Mother God of the Earth are not dead at all."

After a pause, he continued, "Fourthly, the empire has completely collapsed, and the Church has never been more powerful. However, it also means that the conflicts between the Church and the nobles will be more and more intense."

The current situation, the prospects in the future, and the individual efforts had been perfectly reflected in the four things. It was enough to show most desperate sorcerers the dawn of hope!

Even though Fernando had already made up his mind just now, he still felt that he saw the light in the darkness when he saw Douglas' confident smile.

However, he was still quite surprised. “You’ve copied ‘Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy’ and sent it to all the sorcerers?”

Although he kept saying that more sorcerers would make breakthroughs if they read “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy”, he knew very well that such a magic book that contained mysteries of the world was the great secret that every sorcerer cherished. It was their power source and the guarantee of their position and wealth. Nobody would share it easily unless the other person offered something equal or much more valuable in return.

For them, magic knowledge of such a level was almost their life!

However, Douglas had copied and offered “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy” to all the sorcerers?

It was completely against common sense and humanity!

Douglas nodded his head. “At a moment like this, we have to break the norm.”

He said solemnly, “Actually, I’ve never been fond of the ways that the sorcerers communicate in the empire. You should know that exchange of information helps us get more inspirations and figure out more things. Also, I have a feeling that, in the future, magic research will be more and more difficult when it presses into the nature of the world. All the sorcerers have to work hard together selflessly in order to move on.

“I believe that it is necessary to separate the magic knowledge that can be communicated and the magic knowledge that should be kept to oneself. Well, the former should be focused in the fields like mechanisms of magic and the essence of the world. Maybe we can give it a new name. Well, it’s about the mysteries of the world. Let’s call it ‘arcana’.”

“Arcana?” Fernando repeated it, feeling that something old and rotten was collapsed by a cool, refreshing breeze.

So be it! After all, there weren’t so many old guys around telling them what to do now!

“Arcana.” Hathaway lowered her head and pondered the meaning of the term.

“Arcana...” Sharp said in a low voice in confusion, puzzled why Douglas tried to create a useless new term in such difficulties.

Arcana!

Chapter 895: Decisions in Hull

895 Decisions in Hull The Hull Manor was at the edge of a forest. It was a resort where the Hoffenberg family had their summer hunting. Since it was only the beginning of spring, there were few guests and servants. It was quiet and peaceful.

The study in the manor was the place where King Hoffenberg handled state affairs during his holiday. It was protected by powerful divine power circles. However, it was three sorcerers who were under the protection of the divine power circles now.

Douglas lived in the place secretly as a guest of the royal family. He had to change his magic robe into the most popular high-collared coat nowadays, which made him slightly uncomfortable.

“Did you arrange for Douglas to hide here?” After they entered the study, Fernando asked Hathaway casually, trying to figure out whether it was her intention or the Sword of Truth’s.

He had no time to pay attention to the sky during the battle, but since the Liege of Death and the Witch of Iceland perished while the Sword of Truth and the Heart of Time were as alive as ever, it was not hard for him to infer what happened. The two noble knights must have betrayed them!

The losses were heavier than what Fernando could bear. He found it even less possible to trust the nobles and the knights right now.

Hathaway nodded her head. “Yes.”

She was a noble, but she had become a sorcerer. Plus their years of friendship, Fernando actually trusted her more.

Sharp chuckled. “Do you think that His Majesty does not know what Hathaway did? He’s only pretending that he doesn’t. We only did what we had to do. There’s not a single noble who wants the Church to completely destroy the sorcerers. It’s like what Douglas said. Our conflicts with the Church will be more and more intense from now on.”

He was uncertain about the future.

Seated on the high chair at ease, Douglas said peacefully, “With the Mother God of the Earth, the heretical churches, Dracula, the Silver Moon, the Dark Mountain Range, and the Boundless Ocean, there’s still a long way to go before the Church abandons the nobles. However, now that the coalition army has been crushed, it’s barely possible for them to stall most forces of the Church. The Church’s control over its territory will reach its peak. You have to be prepared to endure it.”

His speed was neither too fast nor too slow, and his voices carried the unique magnetism of a middle-aged gentleman. Although he was describing an ominous situation, Fernando and Sharp were eased and less panicked.

Is it the vibe of a legend, or has Douglas grown into such a charismatic leader? Such a question suddenly popped up in Fernando’s heart.

“I fear that endurance won’t help.” After calming himself down, he confessed his concerns. They were also the concerns of the Sword of Truth, as well as most nobles, because there was no hope of winning at all.

Douglas drank a mouthful of water before he continued with his soothing tone, “From the previous cases, it is not hard to see that the pope has to recover after every usage of God’s Arrival. In the jargon of the sorcerers, the cooldown of this divine power is very long, and the former pope has shown us the outcome of using it too often. So, we don’t need to be so scared of God’s Arrival.

“‘Silver Moon’ Alterna escaped in heavy wounds after taking a blow of God’s Arrival, which means that it is possible to resist God’s Arrival. After she recovers, we can find a way to summon the Lord of Hell or the Will of Abyss. It is not entirely impossible to surround the pope.”

The analysis was obvious, but it was difficult for anyone to calm down and think when they were in a panic. Clever minds could not see beyond themselves when they were covered in fog.

Hearing Douglas' analysis, Sharp was calmer and calmer, finding confidence again.

"However, summoning the Lord of Hell or the Will of Abyss requires complicated rituals and enormous prices. It's likely that the Church will discover and sabotage it in advance. Also, the Will of Abyss is crazy and bloodthirsty. He may turn out to be an enemy after being summoned."

Sharp expressed his own thoughts.

"Hehe. What a coward." Fernando looked at Sharp in disdain. "Although the Will of Abyss is crazy, we can make preparations in advance to guide him in the direction we like."

As a sorcerer born in the Magic Empire, Fernando did not reject summoning demons and devils even though he never liked those stupid evil guys.

Douglas smiled. "Perhaps I need to go to hell and talk to the Lord of Hell. He's a demigod who is sensible and capable of analysis. Perhaps we can find a way to allow him to arrive more easily. To be honest, I'm never a fan of blood sacrifice."

After he became a legend, he was capable of traveling in alternate dimensions even without the help of oriented Portals to Alternate Realm.

"You can wait for a moment. Considering the value of 'Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy', you will probably make another breakthrough soon." Fernando felt that it would be better if Douglas waited until he was stronger, in case the Lord of Hell despised such a "weak" partner.

"Improving myself is not contradictory to going to hell." Douglas nodded. "By my estimation, I will probably reach level three in thirty years, with reasonable combat ability."

He looked at Sharp. "This path is dangerous and difficult, but it will be absolutely hopeless if we don't do anything. Only if we walk one step at a time can we leave a path of hope in darkness and desperation.”

“Actually, the situation today is not too bad, that is, for the sorcerers. Ever since the fall of Aalto and the demise of the Liege of Death, the leaders of the Church have paid less attention to sorcerers but focused on the heretical churches and the dark creatures. It means that you will suffer less hunting in the future.” Sharp told them the important changes he sensed recently.

Douglas smiled in self-mockery. “There are merits to being weak.”

Fernando interjected in despise, “I thought that Ivan would burst into conflicts with Gregory after failing to become the pope, but he turns out to be as docile as a sheep.”

“The power of the clerics is from the God of Truth. Revolting against the pope chosen by the God of Truth equals to revolting against their god. No cleric has the courage to do that, which means that they will have no partners or supporters. Also, it’s said that the pope has a method known as ‘Excommunication’. It can block the connection between the clerics and the God of Truth so that their hearts of faith cannot be refilled. So, how can Ivan dare to challenge Gregory?” Douglas shook his head.

Hathaway suddenly said coldly, “There is Excommunication.”

“There really is...” Douglas nodded solemnly. “However, we need not be disappointed. Ivan probably won’t challenge Gregory directly, but it doesn’t mean that he’s unwilling to cause trouble or create enemies for Gregory. Perhaps his attitude toward sorcerers has changed. We can try to get in touch with him.”

The four of them discussed for a long time and settled many plans. Fernando felt the passion he had when he just joined the Union of Sorcerers again.

Douglas patted his clothes and stood up. “Fernando, your wounds are still not recovered. Take a rest now. We can talk about magic sometime later.”

“Alright. I’ll discuss ‘Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy’ with you later. It's definitely the most brilliant masterpiece in the history of magic." Fernando did not hold back his compliment.

Douglas smiled. "I'm glad that you think so highly of it, and I'm proud of my work too. However, the more I study, the more confused I am. Hehe. The unknowns are always so fascinating. What is gravity? What is the nature of gravity?"

Well... The depths of his questions stunned both Fernando and Hathaway, who did not know how to respond at all. Sharp, not knowing any arcana, shrugged and walked to the window, pulling the drapes.

The pure and warm sunlight sprayed in from outside the room, covering everything in gold. Before anyone knew it, it was already dawn!

"Fernando, I need your help to contact the other sorcerers. Let's try to establish another union."

"Don't call it a union. It reminds me of the old fox. Let's call it the Congress of Sorcerers."

"Fine by me."

"It does not sound good..." Hathaway remarked in a low voice.

...

Erica's heart was particularly heavy when she looked at the sorcerers around her who were desperate and helpless. The little organization she was in could barely deal with such a great tsunami.

She moved back to her room and sat on her bed while holding her knees. Thinking for a moment, she took out a black-covered book from the magic pouch. It was from Mr. Douglas from their last correspondence. Because of the escalation of the situation, she never had the time to read it.

Opening the book, Erica read it carefully, with subconscious admiration.

As she read on, her hands trembled so violently that she could barely hold the book steadily. Although she hadn't picked up calculus that Douglas mentioned in his letters, it did not stop her from getting a rough idea of what the third article said.

"Gravity...

"Is it the string on the piano of the Goddess of Magic?

"Is this the reality of this world?

"Magic is so much more marvelous than I thought!"

So astounded, she didn't even know that Atlant, the Eye of Curse, had come to reorganize her group.

...

After a squeak, a girl in a court dress opened the door of the room. The candle in her hand illuminated the dark room.

Where the light was gathered, a tall and slim young man looked back at her in fear, with a heart in his hands and a broken body in front of him.

Crack.

The candle fell onto the ground, and the beautiful girl covered her mouth, asking in disbelief, "You... are a sorcerer?"

"No, no..." His face livid, the young man shook his head in a panic, but he was unable to answer the question.

...

Blowing a melodic whistle, a black-haired and black-eyed young man trotted joyfully on the street. His handsome face and his unique scholarly vibe were particularly attractive for ladies.

"This play stinks. It's not even as good as the one in my head!" He clicked his tongue and criticized it. In the meantime, he couldn't help but remark, "Mrs. Audrey was too hot and passionate..."

Suddenly, a man, probably in his thirties, ran close from a corner and shouted in a panic, “Run! Run out of the city! The viscount knows that you slept with Mrs. Audrey!”

“What?” The young man’s face immediately turned pale. His easiness was gone. He took his luggage and ran off immediately.

By the time he got out of the city, it was already sunset.

“How beautiful!” He gradually recovered his calmness and chuckled. “This is a good opportunity for me to go to Rentato. I’ve always wanted to visit it anyway. I’m the man who is destined to become the greatest playwright!”

Against the sunset, the black-haired young man blew a cheerful whistle again.

Chapter 896: Still In Mundaneness

Chapter 896 Still In Mundaneness

In the study in the Hull Manor, the thick curtains were pulled to the two sides. Covered in gauze, the window let in the sunlight and created splendid golden light in the room.

Hathaway was calculating something behind the desk with the quill in her hand. Now and then, she raised her head and talked with Douglas and Fernando in simple words. If what she wanted to express was too complicated, she would choose an oral-and-written approach.

Douglas, standing before the window, looked solemn, as if he was deep in thought. He paced back and forth in the golden realm of sunlight. Occasionally, he came to a sudden stop and pointed out the critical immaturities in Fernando and Hathaway's thoughts. By the time they offered their rebuttals, he would start pacing again as a thinker.

The scene where they discussed arcana and magic was like a vivid painting. It was a pity that nobody was there to record the brilliant tableau in the history of magic.

Such discussions had lasted many days. All the confusion that Fernando and Hathaway had on gravity, the motion system of celestial bodies, and the three laws of motion had been perfectly answered, giving them copious returns.

"When I applied calculus to the ninth-circle spells, I realized that the difficulties of construction were significantly lowered..."
Fernando waved the paper in his hands.

On the paper that had been processed with magic, light and shadow coexisted, giving a strange cubic feeling to the magic model.

"Not just the ninth-circle spells, all the spells above the third circle have been mostly simplified. If the difficulty to construct and learn spells was 100 in the past, it's only 60 now," Douglas replied as he paced.

Staring at the paper in his hands, Fernando suddenly said with mixed feelings, "If calculus were established twenty years sooner, we would have plenty more archmages and senior-rank sorcerers today. The combat abilities of the sorcerers of the same rank would be doubled too."

Douglas paused and turned around to look at Fernando. "How is your recovery? Have you grasped calculus and gravity?"

"There isn't a problem for now," Fernando said affirmatively.

Douglas nodded his head. "Then, please contact the other organizations and express our willingness for cooperation. Also, remind them that they must lie low even if they do not have any materials in the next couple of years. We cannot try anything until the conflicts between the Church and the nobles reach the crest."

"In any case, those cowards dare not do anything!" Fernando said in disdain. Then, he put his quill and his paper back, as if he were ready to leave.

Nobody could deny that Fernando was a man of action.

Douglas turned around and looked at Hathaway. "Hathaway, you should return to Rentato. The Church and the other nobles will suspect you if you stay here for long."

"Okay," Hathaway replied, but her quill did not stop at all.

Douglas took a deep breath. "The Lord of Frigidity and the Eye of Curse have concealed their demiplanes. So, I need to pay a visit to hell first."

After a brief union, the three of them embarked on different roads for the future of the sorcerers.

.....

Crack.

The candlestick fell to the ground into pieces, and the broken candle died out after flickering for a while. The whole room was caught in absolute darkness, with nothing but the beastly moans.

“Shirley, don’t be scared, listen to me!” When the noises were gone, the sound of an agitated young man echoed. He had the pupils of a cat.

The girl breathed heavily but did not respond.

“Shirley, calm down, I’m not a sorcerer. Trust me, I’m not a sorcerer!” The young man was also breathing heavily, like the bellows that were being pulled hard.

The girl named Shirley gradually suppressed her panting. Out of the young man’s expectation, she said calmly, “Vicente, you calm down too. Whether or not you are a sorcerer, I love you all the same.”

Her words were like a marvelous spell that drove away the depressing and suffocating air in the room.

Vicente’s eyes seemed unusual and allowed him to see things in the dark. So, he agilely lit the candle on the desk, which had been slapped off by him just now.

The room was filled with dim light again. Vicente had already put down the heart in his hands and wiped off the blood. He rushed to the girl and asked excitedly, “Really?”

Shirley bit her teeth and nodded solemnly. “I don’t care who you are. I’m only worried about losing you. The Church won’t let go of a sorcerer.”

Vicente laughed like an innocent child. He even spun for a few circles before he hugged Shirley and kissed her temple. “Rest assured. I’m really not a sorcerer, and for you, I will never become one.”

“But the body over there...” Shirley pointed at the broken body on the long table in fear.

Vicente held back his delight and cleared his throat. “I discovered the possessions of some sorcerers at the edge of the swamps, including magic knowledge and mysteries about the human body.

“At first, I was indeed fascinated by the marvelous magic, but then I thought of you. We’ve known each other since childhood. You secretly taught me the common tongue and the Sylvanas language even though you were a noble. You declined so many distinguished nobles just to marry me, which made your father and your mother very angry. How can I abandon you and walk on the path that only means hiding?”

Vicente added sweet words to his explanation. Shirley’s lips curled, and she tried not to show her smile.

The nobles in this period still learned the language of the Magic Empire in private.

“So, I buried the books on magic at the edge of the swamps again and only brought back those about body mysteries.” Vicente pointed at a few books on the table.

Shirley asked in confusion, “Body mysteries?”

Vicente suddenly became solemn. He said with mixed feelings, “I’ve met too many helpless patients in the charity. They have no money to ask the reverends to treat them with divine power, and they can only count on the herbs and potions from the doctors like us.

“Other people may be unaware of it, but as a doctor of the charity, I know very well that the herbs and potions can only cure minor diseases. As for the patients who are in slightly more serious conditions, I can do nothing but watch them moan and scream as they approach the end of their lives. It pains me and makes me feel helpless. The doctors of the charity always become either cold or insane.”

Leaning into Vicente’s chest, Shirley touched his back. “I understand. You know that I often help out at the charity. I’ve seen a lot of deaths too. Many patients were only little kids, and they just died in front of me. At that time, I only hated that I was not pious enough to be a nun to have the divine power.”

“So, I’ve always wanted to find better recipes for drugs, but I realized that the human body is full of mysteries. I don’t know the structure of the heart or if there is anything else in our body. I don’t know how our body functions as a whole. Then, how can I find better recipes?” Vicente’s eyes were full of hope, which made him glow. “I want to understand the mysteries of the human body. I want to figure out what our body is made of!”

Shirley felt that Vicente today was more charming than ever. She nodded. “It’s a good thing, but you must not disturb the rest of the deceased in the cemeteries, which will be noticed by the Church.”

“I’ll look for bodies in the forest and the swamps. If I can’t, I’ll study animals first.” Vicente announced confidently, “After I become a famous doctor, I don’t think your mother and your father will prevent you from marrying me anymore.”

Shirley suddenly blushed. “As a matter of fact, I came here today because they... they already said yes.”

“Really?” Vicente almost jumped to his feet in excitement.

.....

The city gate of Rentato was unusually crowded and lively.

“How prosperous! As expected of Rentato!” The black-haired and black-eyed young man complimented, “I should thank the viscount for catching me. Without him, I wouldn’t have made up my mind to come to Rentato!”

Squeezing into the gate, he suddenly shouted, “Rentato, I’m here!”

“What a lunatic.” The citizens around all looked at him.

The black-haired young man, however, was not bothered. He encouraged himself, “Oliver, you are going to be a celebrity of this city!”

He looked around, searching for a fancy hotel. The fact that he was literate and could write plays suggested that his family conditions were not bad, except that his parents died too young and did not discipline him much.

“Haha. This is the place...” While talking, he groped for his wallet, but his smile was frozen all of a sudden.

“My wallet! Where is my wallet!?” Oliver shouted and looked around in a panic, but his wallet was nowhere to be found.

As the cold breeze of spring blew by, young Oliver felt the cruelty of Rentato for the first time.

Chapter 897: Les Mis rables

897 Les Misérables

All the pedestrians were coming and going fast on the street, but Oliver stood at the center like a statue.

As a young man, although he was brilliant in plays and quite experienced in certain aspects, and it was not his first trip outdoors, such a situation was still too much for him to bear. That was his living expense for the next couple of months!

What should he do? What was he going to eat? Where was he going to sleep?

Countless questions flooded into his head with frustration and anger, making him feel that the sunny afternoon was dark and that the crowd around him was indifferent and distant as if they were in different worlds.

“Bloody thieves!”

After a long time, Oliver burst out a howl that almost tripped over the passersby.

When he howled, he grabbed his suitcase tightly, fearing that another thief would emerge and steal his last possessions.

Not bothering the other people who were eying him as if he were a psycho, Oliver unleashed his feelings. After a while, he finally calmed down and began to consider how to survive.

“Calm down, calm down. Oliver, you have the talents, the appearance, and the physical strength to live through the difficulties.” Oliver encouraged himself and thought quickly, trying to find a solution from his experience, but most of his experience came from plays.

“That’s right. At such a moment, all I need is someone who appreciates me. My new life will begin there.” Finding a solution from his plays, he clenched his fists. “Oliver, your most precious belonging is not your lost wallet, but your mind and the scripts in your suitcase. As long as you show them to the gentlemen with good tastes, you will immediately get a decent reward.”

Having found a solution, Oliver regained the spirits of a young man. He took out a few thick piles of papers from his suitcase. Clutching them tightly, he asked the way while he fantasized what he would buy after he became rich; an extravagant house, several obedient and beautiful maids, delicate and delicious food, famous wines, hot lovers, and most importantly of all, a few goons to kill the bloody thief!

The Society of Plays, located in Alanmu Street, was not far away from the gate. Oliver saw the unique building that was supported by gray stone pillars very soon.

He paused when he saw the guards at the door. He remembered a commonly used cliché in plays, which was that the hero was refused by the proud guards because of his ragged clothes, and therefore had to achieve his purpose through other indirect approaches.

“I cannot make such a mistake.” Oliver felt that he was really smart to take that into consideration. So, he walked to a square nearby and combed his hair, which had turned messy during his earlier catharsis, in front of the pool that was as smooth as a mirror. He then took out a new black coat from his suitcase, replacing the dirty one on his body. In the end, he folded a handkerchief into a flower and put it in the pocket on his chest.

“An elegant gentleman.” Oliver nodded in satisfaction and walked to the gate of the Society of Plays again.

He did not bother to look at the guards when he approached the gate. He merely snorted condescendingly when they came to stop him.

The two guards, deceived by his easiness and his appearance, thought that he was a noble sir and moved back, daring not to stop him.

“Haha. Oliver, you are fantastic! You will make it!” Oliver complimented himself and walked faster.

“Hey! Hey! Let me tell you, I will be the greatest playwright in the future! You can’t be so impolite!”

Several minutes later, Oliver was picked up by two brawny men and thrown off the stairs.

“Get lost, fraud!”

“What an arrogant lunatic!”

They cursed and tossed Oliver’s suitcase and scripts out.

Crack.

The suitcase was opened when it hit the ground, and his clothes and scripts were blown away.

Watching his most cherished scripts fly before him and land in the dust, Oliver was at a loss for a moment before he roared in fury, “You will regret it!”

A young gifted playwright like me will definitely achieve something great!

Packing up his stuff in misery, Oliver wandered on the street aimlessly, not knowing what he could do or where he could go.

“I’ll find a shelter tonight and take a look in the city hall tomorrow to see if I can get a job.” Seeing that the dark clouds were rising, Oliver recovered from his frustration and gnashed his teeth. “I can create poems. I’m good at words. How will I be starved in Rentato?”

Gradually, he picked up his confidence. He found shelter under the eaves and hid below it.

Hualala.

A torrential rain poured, raising a mist on the ground.

Oliver was dazed by the scene before he suddenly turned happy. "My experiences today will inspire my future creations!"

Pa.

Oliver felt that his head was exploding. He struggled to turn around, only to discover that a homeless guy was glaring at him.

"This place is mine!" The guy pointed under the eaves.

The fury that Oliver had the entire day burst out. As a young man, he roared, "I occupied it first!", while he lunged forward and fought the homeless guy.

Suddenly, his face was frozen, and his eyes lost the focus, because another homeless guy came from behind him and knocked him hard in the head with a wooden stick.

Darkness, blood, pain, and coldness haunted Oliver, making it impossible for him to get away from the unimaginable misery.

After trying his best, Oliver suddenly sat up. The darkness before his eyes faded, revealing the dim candlelight before him.

"Where... Where am I?" he mumbled, looking at the shabby cottage. He felt that his head was in pain.

"My house."

A man's cold voice echoed. The door to the room inside was opened, and a stout, tough-looking baldy walked out. "You've been sold to me."

"What?" Oliver jumped off his bed in disbelief, only to be knocked to the ground by the man with one punch.

"Call me boss, do you understand?" The man showed his muscles. "Shut your mouth and listen to me."

His head felt dizzy after the punch. Oliver touched his swollen lips and looked at the baldy in fear.

The baldy chuckled. "As an outsider who does not have money or strength, you were bold enough to fight local homeless guys. Hehe. After they knocked you out, they stole your clothes and sold you to me. From today onward, you will be my subordinate. You will be freed when you have done enough labor to compensate for the money I paid for you."

This bad*ss does not seem too bad... Covering his lips, Oliver asked, "What do we do?"

"We bury," the baldy replied in disgust.

When it was only dawn, the baldy, who was named George, led Oliver to a morgue.

"The bodies that do not have relatives or money are stored here. It's our job to bury them in the new cemetery. We'll be paid by the Church and the city hall." The moment George opened the gate, the stench of decayed bodies spread out, making Oliver who never smelled such a thing before gag hard.

Many other burial men in ragged clothes were in the morgue. They were all George's subordinates.

"Hey, quite a few new babies are here today," George said in delight. Then, he strode to the newly-delivered bodies and searched them carefully for possessions that might be of any value. If their clothes were relatively intact, he would simply take them off.

Oliver sweated and shivered hard, feeling that he had come to hell.

After he was done looting, George laughed. "Boys, let's get to work!"

Oliver moved the bodies to a special wagon unwillingly. When he touched the cold skin, he almost jumped away. He felt that his hand was so dirty that he was almost stinking himself.

The burial men were together all the way from the morgue to the new cemetery. Oliver did not have any chance to escape. Baldy George also told him that he had connections in the Church and the city hall, and that if Oliver dared to escape, he would be buried in the new cemetery directly.

The stench of rotting bodies was everywhere in the new cemetery, causing the slums nearby to smell the same permanently.

“Only poor people live here. The reverends of the Church never bother to clean it here,” George complained and asked Oliver to dig holes.

The new cemetery had been preprocessed by the reverends. So, chances were few that undead creatures would show up. They were rather confident.

Holding the shovel, Oliver dug pits mechanically and numbly. In the middle of his digging, several bones appeared out of nowhere, forcing him to step back in fright.

“Has this place been taken?” George touched his bald head. “It’s alright. Just bury on the top of them,” he said unconcernedly.

Bodies were thrown down, and mud was sprayed on the top of them. Very soon, the land was even again.

George found a wooden tombstone and put it at the center of the cemetery. There were no sigils or epitaphs, only a shabby cross.

“Is my life going to end like this?” In the stench, Oliver thought numbly and confusedly.

...

In a manor in the suburb, the hall was ablaze with lights, and delicious food could be smelled everywhere.

“What’s his name? Well, Vicente, would you like one? This is the best cigarette from the Kingdom of Brianne.” A fashionable young noble, black-haired and blue-eyed, grimaced at Vicente while holding a few yellowish cigarettes in his hands.

Both his countenance and his tone were full of condescension.

Blushing, Vicente shook his head. “I’m sorry. I don’t smoke.”

“Yo, what a mama’s boy. No wonder Shirley likes you,” the young noble said sarcastically.

Shirley, who was not far away from Vicente, moved forward and raised her head. “Yes. I hate men who drink, smoke, and do not have any manners.”

Then, she dragged Vicente to a dinner table not far away and said in a low voice, “Vicente, please don’t mind. This is all my fault. I shouldn’t have asked you to join this dinner.”

“It’s alright. We are going to be married soon. I will have to face this sooner or later.” Thinking of his dream, Vicente announced proudly, “I’m very open-minded. It’s true that I’m not a noble who has been enjoying those things since childhood, but I’ll try to be better than them and make sure that your future life won’t be any worse.”

Far away, Shirley’s parents looked at them with cold expressions.

Chapter 898: Dignity of Nobles

Chapter 898 Dignity of Nobles

Deep into the night, in the luxurious main bedroom of the manor...

Shirley's father paced back and forth gloomily and complained to her mother, "It's all your good idea! You said that by agreeing to his proposal and allowing the poor boy to get in touch with nobles, he will lose confidence and leave Shirley voluntarily, but what happens in the end? He clutches her even more tightly!"

"I didn't know he was so shameless!" Shirley's mother said grimly.

Shirley's father scorned, "You do not know humans at all. Such poor boys only want to become nobles through marriage. The more we show it to him, the more he would crave for it. How will he leave voluntarily?"

"Why did you agree with me and accept the proposal if you think you know everything?" Shirley's mother roared angrily. "Tell me, what solutions do you possibly have? It's like Shirley's mind has been controlled by magic. It's impossible to talk sense into her! She even threatens me with her life!"

Shirley's father turned cold. He chuckled. "Of course I have solutions."

Shirley's mother was briefly stunned. "You have solutions? What are they? Why didn't you say anything earlier?"

Her questions revealed her panic and anxiety.

"I sent someone to follow the boy. He's very interested in herbs and potions, and he often goes to the swamps to search for strange plants." Coldly, Shirley's father raised his right hand. "After a while, we'll ask a mercenary to follow him to the swamps. Then, crack..."

He made a throat-cutting gesture.

“What? Are you going to kill him? Are you not scared that Shirley will hate us for the rest of her life? She often threatens us with her life!” Shirley’s mother asked nervously.

Shirley’s father put on a cruel smile. “How can she possibly suspect us? We are good parents who have been softened by her. If we want to kill him, why would we agree to his proposal?”

“You...” Shirley’s mother suddenly realized it. “That’s why you agreed to his proposal?”

“Of course. Why else would I have given in?” Shirley’s father nodded. “During the dinner, the few young men who are into Shirley seemed quite dissatisfied with that boy. Shirley will definitely consider them as the main suspects. Jealousy is always one of the greatest motivations for crimes.”

“Very good. I do not want to see the boy ever again!” Shirley’s mother smiled in satisfaction. “Honey, you are so smart. When are you going to do it? I need to watch over Shirley.”

Shirley’s father shook his head. “Don’t be hasty. As I said, jealousy is always one of the greatest motivations for crimes. Those young men are all nobles. There’s nothing they dare not do to civilians. So, let’s observe for a while. Maybe they’ll do it for us. In that case, we wouldn’t need to risk looking for a mercenary. That’s the reason why I held this dinner party.”

“You’re always right.” Shirley’s mother nodded with a smile.

.....

In a guest room near the main house of the manor...

The three most provocative nobles in the dinner had been secretly gathered.

“Andrew, I cannot hold back my fury,” a noble who had naturally curly hair said angrily.

The young noble named Andrew said gloomily, “Me too! It’s true that I like Shirley, but I will not go crazy if I can’t have her. If she is married to another noble, I will only be sad but won't do anything outrageous. However, she is going to be married to a civilian who has no hope of activating his blood power! This is an insult to me and the dignity of nobles. How am I going to face other people at parties? 'Hey, aren't you the Andrew who was bested by a civilian boy?'"

"That's right. I only hate that I cannot kill him right now!" Another young man, who had amber-colored eyes, waved his fists hard.

The noble who talked first nodded his head. "I feel the same. However, the boy is Shirley's fiancé right now. If we do anything, I'm afraid that the Brenzells will be infuriated. They are very influential in the neighborhood."

He appeared very frustrated. Brenzell was Shirley's last name.

The room was caught in awkward silence.

Suddenly, Andrew snorted. "In fact, we do not have to do anything in person."

"Huh?" His friends looked at him in confusion.

Andrew smiled. "I know a night watcher. All we need to do is to accuse the boy as a magic apprentice."

"He's a magic apprentice?" the amber-eyed noble asked in shock.

"Maybe, maybe not, but he will be one," Andrew said coldly.

Oh! The other two nobles, being no stranger to such tricks, immediately understood what Andrew meant.

The noble with the naturally curly hair asked another question, "But what if Baron Brenzell goes to save him?"

Andrew chuckled. "Since the Church occupied Aalto, those sorcerers have been hiding more stealthily. Many night watchers haven't killed any evils for a long time. It's said that the leaders of the Inquisition are not satisfied, fearing that the night watchers would lose their value. So, those night watchers definitely wouldn't let go of leads on sorcerers. As long as we find ‘proof’ before Baron Brenzell rescues him and force the boy to confess, will the baron dare to resist the Inquisition and the Church?”

“If there isn’t any proof, we will let him ‘die’ due to excessive interrogation before the baron saves him. After all, he’s just a civilian. Nobody really cares about it.” The young noble with amber eyes complemented the plan.

The noble with the curly hair said in concern, “However, will the night watchers be used to ‘creating sorcerers’? Will we suffer from it in the future?”

“Idiot, we are nobles!” Andrew scorned. “Alright, let’s gather some Thales so that it would be easier to convince the night watcher I know.”

When the three of them were in the middle of the heated discussion, a maid was standing outside their door. She was holding a tray with her right hand, and her left hand was frozen before the door, as if she were about to knock it.

Her face pale, she heard everything they said inside.

She was a human being with special blood powers. Although she never activated this bloodline and became a knight, she had excellent hearing, and she was sent to cater to the guests in this room by the Brenzells for that reason.

Holding her breath, the maid slowly left the door and walked to the main bedroom in a hurry.

“Very good, you’ve done a great job. I’ll take care of it. Don’t tell anything to my daughter in case she worries,” Baron Brenzell said in “fury”.

Hehe. This is a great plan. After tomorrow, there’s nothing I can do to save Vicente Miranda. Shirley, don’t blame me. I wish I could do something... He rehearsed how he would comfort Shirley. Well, after Vicente is captured, this maid should be buried in the garden.

No flaws should be left behind.

The next day in the morning, the maid, who had nightmares all night, woke up early and delivered breakfast for the guests, only to discover that the young nobles, including Andrew, were gone.

They've taken action? the maid thought worriedly. Miss Shirley had been treating the servants kindly and never abused them. She would be very sad if her fiancé died. Would there be enough time for the baron to stop it?

Concerned, she reached Shirley's bedroom without her knowing it. She then heard a happy melody sung by a gentle female voice.

The miss is very happy...

She thought subconsciously and wondered if she should let Shirley inform Mr. Vicente to hide until the baron took care of everything.

In her impression, the Andrews were much more notable than her master, so she was worried that Baron Brenzell could not stop it in time.

She lingered before the door and couldn't make up her mind. On one side, it was the miss who had been treating her well, and on the other side, it was the baron's order.

Suddenly, the door was opened, and Shirley looked at her in confusion, not knowing why she was at her door.

After a brief hesitation, Shirley asked gently, "Neece, do you have any trouble? Is there anything I can do for you?" She thought that Neece had come to ask for her help.

Neece shivered and made up her mind. She looked around and said in a low voice, "Let's talk in the room."

After the door was shut, Shirley heard the whole story from Neece.

Her face immediately turned pale, and worries surged out of her heart. If it were an ungrounded indictment, she believed that everything would be alright as long as she begged her father. However, there were a few bodies in Vicente's basement that he had dissected!

If it was discovered by a night watcher, who would believe that he was not a sorcerer except for herself?

Her parents were not satisfied with Vicente in the first place. They might help him under normal circumstances, but they would certainly not vouch for Vicente under such circumstances.

No, I have to inform Vicente and ask him to destroy the bodies or throw them back into the swamps! Shirley paced anxiously and decided to go to Vicente's house.

She considered asking servants or guards who were faster to send the message, but she couldn't tell anyone about the bodies!

.....

In the new public cemetery...

Oliver and another burial man were left by Baldy George, because the tomb watcher had just been buried in the cemetery today, and no substitutes were found yet. George was asked to supervise it for a couple of days and set off fireworks when there were signs of undead creatures so that the night watchers could come in time.

George certainly wouldn't stay in the creepy cemetery himself, so he left Oliver here. Now that you are bold enough to seduce my daughter, I'll let you know that I am the master of your fate!

If he weren't concerned that Oliver might escape, he wouldn't have left another burial man with him at all.

Oliver suffered unprecedented sufferings and pain recently. The pride and confidence on his young face were replaced by numbness and endurance. His heart matured.

"Love is the only candle in this miserable world..." he remarked in a low voice. Although George's daughter was not pretty and not exactly his type, she warmed his desperate mind.

Looking at his companion who always seemed ready for a fight, Oliver decided to take a walk.

“If you dare to escape, I’ll capture you and bury you alive!” the other burial man threatened him.

Oliver was in a bad mood again. He had enjoyed quite some beating recently. After he left the cottage of the tomb watcher, he roamed in the cemetery. The intense stench had little influence on him right now.

“The moon is so beautiful, but I am so miserable...” Oliver raised his head and looked at the bright moon. He was immediately in the mood for poems, but when he was about to write a sonnet, he suddenly stepped onto nothingness and screamed, “Ahhh!”

Pa, crack, crack.

A huge part of the cemetery collapsed, and countless bones and rotten flesh were revealed. The slackness of the burial men had left the earth unsteady

Chapter 899: Even A Rabbit Bites if Pushed to the Corner

899 Even A Rabbit Bites if Pushed to the Corner Late at night, the air in the new public cemetery was rather cold. The loud noise created by the collapse was sent by the wind and was thus already heard by the burial man from a distance. The burial man rushed over.

The burial man yelled and woke Oliver up, who was now feeling rather dizzy from being thrown to the ground.

“You bloody idiot! Look at what you’ve done! If you don’t fill the pit tonight, I’ll throw you in it! Damn!”

His words were nasty, and the fact that Oliver was still at a loss made him even more furious. He spat on Oliver and then walked away back to the cabin.

The viscous mucus hit the center of Oliver’s forehead, and he then started fiercely throwing up. He was throwing up so badly that his entire stomach had been emptied, and then the bitter bile came up.

It was not only because of the mucus. It was also because he found himself covered in sticky dead body fluid and rotten flesh. His left hand was still grabbing the set of half-rotten guts, and in his right hand, there was a thick femur.

The scene was worse than any nightmares he had never had. It was beyond disgusting!

Oliver hurriedly threw the guts and bone away and held his breath. He felt that the horrible odor could kill him anytime.

At this time, some blue light blinked and flashed past, which caught his attention.

Oliver’s eyes were sharp. Following the direction, to his surprise, he saw that the femur had cracked, and from within, the blue light was shining through the fine cracks.

The great curiosity and hope made him forget the killing odor and how dirty he was. His movement had become very gentle.

He carefully moved to the femur and picked it up with great caution.

There was indeed blue light coming out!

Oliver didn't check it immediately as he had learned his lesson. Instead, he climbed to the edge of the pit by grabbing a few bodies. After looking around and making sure there was no one else around, he cracked open the bone carefully.

He did it rather carefully, and the blue light was revealed bit by bit as the small pieces of bones on the outside were falling. Finally, Oliver got a light blue short stick in his hand, and the stick looked rather delicate and transparent.

Oliver was shocked, having no idea what it was.

Then he quickly hid the short stick in case George and the rest of the burial men would see.

Anything found from the bodies had to be submitted to George, who would make a selection and give the valuable ones to the city hall officials in charge of the cemetery and the priests. It had happened several times that George and his men immediately took Oliver's findings away when Oliver spotted something valuable. Not only that, George would not even pay him on time but just give him two bad meals a day.

Oliver wanted to bury the stick somewhere close and dig it out when he got a chance to leave this place. He would then get himself some money by selling the stick. However, at this time, he noticed the many small characters engraved on the beautiful stick, which was as blue as ocean water.

As a young man who loved opera, Oliver had spent lots of time studying characters and learning different cultures. Therefore, he immediately recognized the characters. It was Sylvanasian, one of the three most common tongues in the ancient Magic Empire!

Ms. Audrey's material was a great help to Oliver for understanding the characters. Oliver had lots of thoughts in his mind. He figured out the correct reading order and found that it was a piece about meditation! In the end, the owner even wrote down where he buried his treasures on the short stick!

Earth, fire, wind, water... Is this a sorcerer's meditation method? Oliver had heard many stories from bards and some operas, and they were about how an evil sorcerer did bad things to nobles and ordinary people, but in the end, the sorcerer was defeated by the clerics and nobles together. He had some thoughts on where this came from. He believed that it was from a sorcerer who did this before he or she died. Maybe the sorcerer hoped that this could be left to someone, but the person never came...

Oliver was a romantic person, and thus, he naturally longed for the mysterious life of a sorcerer who was always under the Church's chasing. As a devout follower, his conscience had plagued him multiple times for this, so he never did anything evil or tried to be a sorcerer himself.

However, what he had experienced in Rentato had made his belief less solid.

Why his Lord never saved him when he was suffering so badly? Why would the priests allow George and his men to do whatever they wanted and even protected them? Why could those clerics, nobles, and wealthy people enjoy luxurious coffins and tombs after they died, while a poor man, no matter how devout he was, could only be thrown into such a pit?

Did the Lord call this justice?

If so, he should save himself using a sorcerer's method first.

No one would know. In the future, he would be rich, and he could still be the same devout follower of the lord.

The conflicting feelings and thoughts appeared within Oliver's mind. Finally, he decided to bury the short stick first to save it for the future. After all, once becoming a sorcerer, he could possibly be spending his whole life living in fear and hiding. He did not want that.

Oliver buried the short stick beside a gravestone and left a secret sign for himself. He then hobbled back to the pit as he still had to fill it; otherwise, George and his men would definitely beat him up again.

Oliver knew that there would be no sleep for him tonight.

At this time, someone kicked him in his back and then punched him to the ground. Oliver felt pain all over his body, especially in his back.

“Damned lazybones! You did nothing! You wanna die?!”

It was Goldson, another burial man. He started beating Oliver up using all his strength.

Oliver could do nothing but to cover his head with his arms. Like a shrimp, he curled his body to protect his most vulnerable parts against the punches and kicks that were falling like raindrops.

After a while, Goldson started feeling a bit tired. “Get up and get the work done! Or I’ll throw you in it!”

Before Oliver responded, Goldson had turned around and walked back to the cabin. He did not know how Oliver was staring at a gravestone with a special sign behind him. There was blood in Oliver’s eyes.

Oliver knew that he would die sooner or later if he did nothing. But if he was going to die, they would die with him!

He slowly climbed up and walked to the gravestone. After digging out the short stick, he hid in the pit and carefully read it. After remembering the characters, he hid the short stick in front of his chest.

He then climbed out of the pit and picked up the iron spade left by Goldson.

He shoveled dirt into the pit to fill it, and the work only lasted for half an hour. With the spade in his hand, Oliver walked to the cabin with his face slightly flushed. His movement was quiet, for he didn't want to wake Goldson up.

Entering the cabin, Oliver heard Goldson asking while half-dreaming, "All done?"

That was way too fast.

"This one is blunt. I am taking a new one," said Oliver, who sounded like a sheer coward.

"Bloody slug," cursed Goldson. "Sharpen both the spades after the work's done."

The iron spades were given by the city hall. They could not afford iron items.

"Ok," said Oliver.

At this time, Oliver had come to Goldson and was now standing behind his back. The silver moonlight went through the window and covered him in silver-white. Under the witness of the moonlight, Oliver's shadow on the opposite wall raised the spade high in the air!

And then it fiercely dropped.

"Ahh!!!"

Goldson's bitter crying only lasted for a second and was cut off by his last breath. He had never expected that the useless, young coward from a rich family who only knew how to please girls would have the guts to murder him!

Goldson was dazed. He was never on alert when facing such a coward!

Fear had frozen on Goldson's face, and his unfocused eyes opened widely.

Blood dripped onto the floor from Oliver's spade. He spat on Goldson's head.

"You're good, uh? You've got something? You said you were gonna bury me, uh? Come! Come show me!" Oliver yelled at the body crazily.

After a few minutes, he slowly calmed down. After finding dozens of Fells from Goldson's pocket, Oliver put on Goldson's clothes.

After that, Oliver walked out of the cabin. The spade was still in his hand, and his left hand grabbed the short stick tight under his shirt. He then walked silently into the darkness.

The wind started roaring, and the night now looked even darker. There were now only dead bodies in the new public cemetery.

...

Shirley hurriedly came back to the village. Before she could walk to Vicente's place, she was stopped by a local peasant woman.

"Miss Shirley, don't go. Vicente, Vicente is a sorcerer!" said the woman in fear. "Fortunately, you two are not married!"

Shirley's head buzzed like she just got struck by a flash of lightning. She pulled the woman's arm and asked, "Vicente... How is it possible?!"

Were night watchers here already?

"Miss Shirley, you have no idea how terrible it was! They found lots of dead bodies in his basement! He's indeed a sorcerer! The clerics found it out..." the woman explained quite clearly to Shirley, but Shirley felt that she was going to faint anytime.

"Where is Vicente then? Did they catch him?" Shirley tried her best to stay calm.

The peasant woman looked very concerned. "No. They said he went to the marsh in the early morning!”

Shirley released a sigh of relief. As long as Vicente was still alive, there was still a chance!

She believed that Vicente had gone to the marsh to find the special herb because of what happened last night. He got lucky!

Shirley thanked the woman and hurriedly went back to the manor. She hoped that she could find Vicente in the marsh herself and tell him to hide for a while until her father solved the problem. He was not a sorcerer, so he only had to take out the magic book. However, she knew it clearly that as a noble lady, there was no way that she could go across the marsh and find Vicente there. She would probably end up getting lost there.

Therefore, she was about to send her servants there before her servants found out that the clerics were chasing Vicente. She was going to tell the servants that Vicente was the target of a few nobles' revenge plan.

As soon as she walked into the garden in her family's manor, a figure jumped out.

“Shirley, you like flowers? I found them in the marsh!” Vicente looked rather excited while waiting for Shirley's praise. In his hand, there were a bunch of scarlet flowers.

Chapter 900: They Were Only Dogs

900 They Were Only Dogs

Shirley was startled and almost burst out screaming. She hurriedly looked around and then took a step forward. She grabbed Vicente's hand.

Her reaction confused Vicente.

Shirley tried to keep her voice low by overcoming her fear and nervousness. "Vicente, you have to run. The night watchers found the bodies in your basement."

"What?!" Vicente could not believe his ears even though it was Shirley who told him this, and Shirley was the person he loved and trusted the most in the world. "Impossible... This is impossible. How did they find it? How did they know?"

There was no way that night watchers could search every single house in an area for their number was too small for this.

Seeing that Vicente was panicking, Shirley told him what happened as briefly as she could. "Andrew felt humiliated, so they found the night watchers to kill you in the interrogation room. My servant heard them plotting."

"I see, I see... I am not a sorcerer. I never want to... Why are they pushing me..." Vicente felt both angry and nervous. He was at the edge of a nervous breakdown.

Shirley tried to make it short. "Don't worry. I'll ask my father to help you. You'll only have to accept an inspection and the Lord will know you're not a sorcerer. But you have to hide in the marsh for a few days so that my father can deal with it."

Her clear explanation and calm tone comforted Vicente.

"Okay. I'll listen to you, Shirley," said Vicente.

At this time, he had to count on Baron Brenzell. It happened before that a noble stood out to protect a sorcerer suspect. However, the suspect still went through the strict investigation and made the church believe it was a mistake.

“There’s not enough time for me to prepare clothes and food for you. Be careful in the next few days. If everything goes well on my father’s side, I’ll ask a guard to carve the trees along the edge of the marsh with the symbol we previously agreed on,” said Shirley.

At first, the baron did not agree on Shirley and Vicente being with each other and even cut off the letters between them. So the young lovers had previously decided on some simple symbols to inform each other how they were doing. Now, the symbols had become useful again.

At this time, Vicente suddenly looked very nervous. “I see people coming...”

He had a pair of eyes as sharp as that of cats, and he could see way better than common people. They were now hiding in the garden and being surrounded by lots of plants and bushes, so it was hard for people coming from outside to spot them.

“The night watchers are coming...” murmured Shirley. As Vicente’s fiancée, she had expected that the night watchers would come to investigate, but she didn’t know they would be this fast.

Vicente was very nervous. Once the night watchers walked in, the two of them would be seen!

He couldn’t hide in a room in this manor because the night watchers would for sure search the rooms one by one!

Maybe he should hide here and wait for a chance?

At this time, Shirley suddenly looked up. “Vicente, you stay here. I’ll distract them. Five minutes later, you go to the marsh through the side gate of the manor.”

“It’s dangerous!” said Vicente. In common people’s minds, those night watchers were as horrifying as sorcerers, demons, and evils.

Shirley shook her head decisively and said, "I'm a noble. They won't do anything to me. Go and hide, now!"

...

Outside of the manor, the leader of the night watchers whose codename was Crazy Hound said to the rest of the night watchers, "You go to different directions and guard all the exits. I'll go into the manor with Tamer."

Under this circumstance, the night watcher called Tamer was much more useful than the rest of them because of the many magic creatures he trained.

"Sir, they all say that Vicente has gone to the marsh, and we are here only for figuring out the areas in the marsh that Vicente visits most often. Do we have to make this so big?" A night watcher believed that they should go to the marsh as soon as possible instead of spending too much time in the manor.

Although called Crazy Hound, he was rather cautious. "No matter when, we block off a place and then enter. This is our principle. Can you say for sure that there's only Vicente in this manor? How do you know his fiancée hasn't been lured? How do you know whether the baron is secretly supporting sorcerers or not?"

The night watcher who asked the question kept apologizing.

No wonder their leader had taken out the entire team. Crazy Hound was worried that there were nobles involved in this.

"According to the previous investigation, Vicente and Miss Brenzell are very close. If we keep a close eye on her, we probably don't have to search into the marsh," Tamer added.

At this time, Crazy Hound sniffed something and suddenly commanded, "Hide!"

The team followed his order immediately and hid in the fields and trees.

Half a minute later, a lady showed up beside the manor gate. She was dressed like a maid, but she wore a black gauze hat. The hanging veil covered her face.

She looked around and made sure no one was around. Then she hurriedly set off for the marsh.

“It’s Shirley. She can’t hide from my nose.” Crazy Hound grinned to Tamer.

Tamer also put on a creepy smile. “She must be informing Vicente. She can’t ask her maids or guards to do it.”

Very likely her maids and guards would sell her out if she decided to do so.

“You’re right. It seems that the task will be pretty easy.” Crazy Hound had the brutal smile on his face, for they would win the reward from the Inquisition as well as from Andrew. If they could make this even bigger and involve more people, they would earn even more!

When Shirley had walked some distance away, Crazy Hound whistled and gathered the team again.

“We follow her. Tamer, you stay here and watch the manor, just in case,” commanded Crazy Hound.

“Yes, leader,” said Tamer politely. He had many “pets”. Although he could not monitor the entire manor, guarding the main gate and watching the baron should not be a problem.

Crazy Hound decided to lead the entire team for fear that Vicente had got his helpers. They secretly followed Shirley through the green field, thin trees, and finally arrived at the marsh filled with miasma.

At this time, Crazy Hound’s eyes suddenly opened big, for he saw that Shirley had started walking back!

What did she do? How did she inform him?

No! They were fooled by her!

Crazy Hound was furious, but he knew that it would have been too late if he led the entire team back. So he and his team directly jumped out and closed in on Shirley.

“Who are you! What do you want!” Shirley shouted.

Crazy Hound said gloomily, “Miss Shirley, where’s Vicente?”

“I don’t know. How do I know? He hasn’t come back from the marsh yet,” said Shirley as calmly as she could.

“Then why are you here?” Crazy Hound was about to lose control.

Shirley responded coldly, “Come to find him. But when I see the marsh, I know there’s no way that I can find him in this place. I’m a noble lady! So I’ve decided to go back. He should just die in there.”

“If you don’t change your mind, I’d have to take you back to the inquisition.” Crazy Hound’s eyes started looking red.

“Dare you! I’m a noble!” said Shirley aloud.

Crazy Hound sneered, “So what? As long as a noble has anything to do with a sorcerer, he will also be put on the gallows.”

“Take her!” commanded Crazy Hound. “She’ll know what an interrogation is like in the inquisition!”

“You crazy dogs! My father will protest to the Church. You will be severely punished!” Shirley screamed for she could not believe her ears.

“Go ahead!” Crazy Hound was not going to change his mind.

...

“The night watchers took Shirley to the inquisition?!” asked Baron Brenzell in great shock and anger.

After confirming the information, he had gone outraged. “Those lunatics! They don’t even obey the laws! I’m going to see the viscount!”

He then rushed out furiously.

After half a day, the baron came back with an extremely shocked look on his face. Facing his wife, who kept asking what was going on, the baron finally said, "I don't know. I never expected this. The Church didn't care about nobles' opinions at all. They... They even threatened me. They said they'd take me in as well if they find anything against me."

"Are they out of their minds?! The nobles will protest together!" The baron's wife could not believe it.

Brenzell shook his head dispiritedly. "Protest? How? We can't defeat the Church."

...

In the interrogation chamber, the screams of a young lady lingered.

"She still hasn't said anything?" asked Crazy Hound.

The interrogator replied gloomily, "Not yet. She's more staunch than anyone I've seen. We've pretty much done the most severe damage to her body, but she still won't say a word."

"Use divine spells then," said Crazy Hound in despair.

The interrogator was shocked. "She'll die. She's a noble."

"It's okay. She's just a noble," said Crazy Hound. The attitude that the Church showed today had further supported Crazy Hound and made him even crazier. In his mind, a noble lady who was willing to marry a sorcerer was by no means innocent, and neither was her family. He believed that the Lord would also be on his side.

The interrogator finally put on an evil and cunning smile. "Alright. It's time for the nobles to understand who they are. They're only dogs raised by us."

He walked into the interrogation chamber in long strides. The screams slowly turned into bloodcurdling cries like a nightmare. Eventually, even the cries had disappeared.

“Dead. What a pity. She had a pretty beautiful face.” The interrogator walked out with the look of excitement still on his face. Obviously, he enjoyed the process.

It was all quiet now in the interrogation chamber, as if the girl named Shirley had never even been sent into this place.

Chapter 901: I ll Be Back One Day

901 I“ll Be Back One Day

Plants were strange and messy in the marsh. Some trees, besides their huge crowns on the top blocking the entire sky, had “legs” like human beings but wrapped with red vines going deep into the soil and mud. The plants made the marsh look rather creepy and dangerous.

Vicente was hiding behind a big rock, about half his height. While the ground under his feet was quite solid and dry, which was rare in the marsh, the horrible smell pouring in his nose made him feel dizzy.

At this time, Vicente was sitting on the ground, staring at something in front of him in fear. On the black mud, there was a python as thick as a bucket crawling to him. Its eyes were giving out the unusual green light just like two candles. And the terrifying air the python possessed had driven away all the other creatures in the marsh.

Vicente was not a coward. He dealt with dead bodies all the time, which forged his bravery. However, facing the python, he had lost his ability to move because of the overwhelming fear. He was neither a knight squire nor a magic apprentice. He could do nothing to protect himself.

His legs soft, his body trembling, his teeth chattering, Vicente tried to stand up but could use no strength. He could do nothing but watch the python slowly approaching him.

He had never spent this long in the depths of the marsh. In the past, he only followed the paths he was familiar with, and once he found the special plants he needed, he would go back immediately. But this time, he had spent five days here, and most of the fruits he picked on his way had already been consumed. Now, he had encountered one of the most dangerous creatures in the marsh.

The python took its time. It was not in any hurry to enjoy its lunch.

As it was becoming closer and closer to Vicente, Vicente could smell the stink from its mouth and see the strange scales forming weird patterns.

When Vicente had given up all his hope, the black python suddenly raised its upper body off the ground and stared at the muddy ground behind the rock with its big eyes. Sticking out, its dark-red, forked tongue was also covered in a layer of green light.

After a while, the black python suddenly turned around and left in a hurry!

Vicente had no idea what happened. He did nothing!

Finally, Vicente had a possible explanation for this. He buried the magic book and the pale palm behind the rock. Did they scare the monster away?

But they had been buried in the ground!

Gradually, he had a further guess. The black python probably sensed something that he could not. The black python probably sensed the air of death!

Maybe in the python's eyes, there was a hell in the rock!

After recovering a bit, Vicente forced himself to leave the magic book and the palm buried where they were and carefully set off for the edge of the marsh.

Half a day later, he approached the edge of the marsh in great caution. But he saw no signs or marks there.

Vicente was quite upset. He assumed that the trouble was pretty big and the baron was even having a difficult time dealing with it. After all, before he had some accomplishments, mistreating bodies was regarded as a very evil action. Even an ordinary man who did it would be put on the gallows.

He released a sigh and decided to wait for another five days. On his way back, he tried to gather more food.

.....

“Shirley’s dead?!” Baron Brenzell’s eyes opened wide. He felt that he was in an unreal nightmare.

This night watcher had two big eyes and wide forehead, as well as sharp teeth. When he did not talk, he looked quite honest; however, once he grinned or talked, his sharp teeth were revealed, which made him look rather terrifying. In the baron’s eyes, he looked identical to a demon.

Crazy Hound said, “Yes, to keep the secret of the evil sorcerer, she died under the divine power.”

“You’re out of your mind! All of you! How dare you torture her!” screamed the baron’s wife.

The Baron grasped the last clue of his reason and stared at the night watcher. “So, so you are saying... Shirley didn’t say anything! Before her death, she was still an innocent follower! You’ve got no evidence at all!”

The fire of anger and pain was roasting his guts in his chest. If necessary, he would collide his head against the gate of Cocus to death to tell the grand duke and the rest of the nobles that those night watchers had gone totally crazy, and they had to be removed!

Crazy Hound said, “The Lord told us that only the evil power could make her endure such severe punishment and confess nothing, and it was also the evil power that made her die before she almost confessed. Therefore, obviously, your daughter was lured by evil and had an affair with a sorcerer.”

“Insane... All of you... insane...” Hearing the ridiculous words, the baron felt that the entire world had become so unreal. He just kept murmuring.

Crazy Hound grinned. “So, based on this, it’s reasonable for us to suspect that your family also has something to do with the sorcerer because you two have agreed to marry your daughter to a vicious sorcerer. Please follow us back to the inquisition. This is the Lord’s will, and command from the cardinals.”

The baron and his wife’s world had collapsed. Their only daughter had just died, and they were still struggling with digesting the pain. However, the crazy night watchers had put their claws on them.

The night watchers rushed up in a crowd and caught the baron and his wife.

“Let go of us! We’re nobles!”

“We’re nobles!”

.....

In a house in the city, Andrew and his two friends were totally shocked to hear the result.

“How is this possible? Shirley... She died?”

“They’ve caught the baron and his wife with no evidence?”

“They can treat us the same way in the future...”

Their faces now looked very pale, and they couldn’t stop shaking. Their false accusation had led out a monster even more horrifying than a devil, whose name was “night watcher”!

.....

“They are no way close to their daughter.” The interrogator walked out of the chamber with a cold smile on his face.

“Got anything?” asked Crazy Hound.

The interrogator nodded. “A few years ago, when the war in Aalto was locked in a stalemate, they once secretly contacted a sorcerer. They cut it off later though when His Holiness killed the Liege of Death.”

“Good. This has proved that our way surely works. They were hiding deep, but we still found them,” said Crazy Hound proudly.

He reckoned that, with their purest belief, night watchers could identify the corrupted people using their instinct even without direct evidence, which was also a better way for them to claim their accomplishment.

The interrogator grinned. "I never like those nobles who keep swaying back and forth."

"Put their daughter's body on the gallows for a week and see if Vicente will come out." The expression on Crazy Hound's face had turned savage as he said, "As for the noble couple, I believe the executioner has been waiting long enough..."

.....

Andrew walked back and forth anxiously in the hall, waiting for information to come back from Cocus. His two friends had collapsed in the coach. What happened was totally beyond their expectation.

"Young master, Cocus told the nobles to stay calm..." The butler walked in, gasping.

Andrew felt that all his strength had been pulled out instantly. "I knew it, I knew..."

To their great shock, even if all the nobles were willing to unite together, they were just an idle threat to the Church!

Someone was knocking on the door at this time.

"Who is it?" asked the butler nervously.

"I'm here for my reward," said Crazy Hound, who just walked in.

Andrew and his friends were so startled that they jumped up. "You?!"

"So you won't keep your words?" Crazy Hound had a nice smile on his face.

"No, no... This is the rest of the payment." Andrew took out a bag full of Thales.

Crazy Hound weighed it and grinned. “Good. You’re a good partner.”

Then he said with a faint smile on his face, “Many thanks to you, Mr. Andrew. You’ve made us understand how powerful we are.”

Then Crazy Hound turned around and left. Andrew was standing where he was like a stone statue. The wind coming in through the gate made him feel cold from deep inside.

.....

A few days later, Vicente came to the edge of the marsh again but still found nothing.

He was very worried and decided to take the risk to go back secretly.

In the darkness, he sneaked back to his village. When he was about to “kidnap” a kid to get some information, he suddenly heard two peasant women talking.

“Poor Miss Shirley. I don’t believe she was corrupted and lured by devils...”

Under the Church’s propaganda, even a peasant woman knew how to use some big words.

“You’re right. Miss Shirley is such a nice young lady, like an angel. Goddamn Vicente! He lied to Miss Shirley! If it weren’t because of him, Miss Shirley wouldn’t die in the inquisition and even be put on the gallows!” The other woman agreed.

Shirley... died?

The women’s conversation was like a huge hammer that just gave Vicente’s brain a fierce strike. His vision suddenly turned blurry, and he almost lost his balance.

The two women kept talking, and he had understood what had happened when he was hiding in the marsh.

His soul had been pulled away by the agony, and his mind had blanked out. He walked back to the marsh like a zombie.

Maybe he was blessed by the Goddess of Luck. On his way back, no one saw him, and he didn't encounter any monsters.

“NO!!!”

After a while, an extremely painful cry burst out somewhere from the marsh, and it was even bitter than a lonely wolf crying to the moon.

Vicente's face was covered in tears, and his eyes were ablaze with a ferocious flame of anger. He kneeled down on the ground, and his hands kept digging into the soil as if he felt no pain. His nails were completely broken from the digging, and his blood dyed the ground.

A few minutes later, two black books and a pale palm were dug out.

He picked them up, and hatred was the only thing left on his face.

.....

“He never came?” asked Crazy Hound, who was hiding around the corner and staring at the body on the gallows.

Tamer smiled. “It's too obvious. Those sorcerers know.”

“Poor girl. She died for him.” Crazy Hound shrugged.

Gallows were only for “purifying” living people, so they didn't burn her.

Quite a lot of people stopped and reproached the evil woman colluding with devils and sorcerers. Only very few people knew Shirley in person and knew it wasn't true, but they dared not to say anything.

Among the crowd, a dark-skinned man stared at Shirley's body but remained silent. The way he looked at her was full of agony for he could not imagine the suffering that his lover once experienced, and he could not stop blaming himself for this. However, he eventually turned around and headed off for the city gate. He never looked back again.

Walking out of the gate, he suddenly took off the cross he was wearing. Gripping the cross in his hand, he made his vows. The tip of the cross pierced the skin of his palm, and his blood dyed it.

He put the cross in the wall beside the city gate silently and then slowly walked into the darkness.

“I will be back!

“I will be back to bring you back to life!

“I will be back, and I’ll bring destruction and death!”

Chapter 902: The Treasure

902 The Treasure On the wasteland overgrown with bushes, there were bones and skeletons everywhere.

A small group of traveling salesmen was going through this dangerous area under the protection of a dozen mercenaries. Their destination was the Kingdom of Brianne.

The wasteland was on the border between Holm and Brianne and was embraced by the big mountains where all sorts of magic creatures were living. Also, there had been rumors that this area was once the domain ruled by Viken, the King of Calamities and the governor-general of Great Holm. He was different from all the previous and following governors-general. Instead of only focusing on guarding Rentato, Viken had also conducted many experiments here close to the border. Therefore, on the wasteland, there were many strange creatures, and they were believed to be the shoddy products of Viken's experiments.

After Viken went missing, no one ever found the entrance of his demiplane, which was located here on this wasteland. No one knew why he went missing, and no one ever found the magic items Viken left behind.

Many sorcerers saw this as a great pity. A sorcerer close to top legendary level and the master of studying bloodlines must have lots of treasure and great knowledge in his demiplane, but they had all gotten lost in the long river of time.

"Similar stories are endless. Even now, some people are still trying to find Viken's treasure on this wasteland," said Hassan, the deputy leader of the mercenaries, with mixed feelings. "They should think using their butts. Even if they are blessed by the Goddess of Luck and find the entrance, are they able to get the treasures in the demiplane?"

"Viken was called King of Calamities, and he was a master of studying bloodlines and transforming bodies. I bet you a bag of liquor, that in his demiplane and magic tower, there are transformed monsters close to the legendary level. Umm, maybe people already found his demiplane, but all of them became the food for the monsters,” Hassan continued.

One of his subordinates was a teenage boy who looked quiet and scholarly. Hearing the deputy leader’s words, the look on his face slightly changed. He then forced a smile on his face as he said, “They became blind because of their greed; the treasure devoured their wisdom.”

“Oliver, you are surely a bard. You always say something interesting.” Hassan patted the teenage boy’s shoulder.

Hassan had known this young man for three to four months. Except for the fact that Oliver liked fooling around with women, Hassan felt that he was quite a good subordinate for he knew how to talk properly and how to do things in the correct way.

All men who chose to be mercenaries loved fooling around with women, so this was not a big deal.

At this time, the leader, Grigra said coldly, “Don’t talk like this next to a business team anymore. Night watchers will probably hear you.”

“We’re just telling tales!” Hassan said unhappily. What did this have to do with those night watchers?!

Grigra snorted, “I heard it from the nobles in the team that those night watchers have been acting crazy recently. They have burned a few mercenaries for discussing these sorcerer legends. The night watchers believe they are evil.”

“Really?!” Hassan was quite shocked. And so was Oliver, who was just immersed in his own thoughts earlier. They knew that those night watchers were lunatics, but he never thought that they would go this far.

“You can try if you want,” said Grigra casually. He then took a meaningful glance at Oliver. He was still on full alert toward the new member of the team. Grigra's instinct told him that this young man was hiding something from them. Maybe he was an escaped criminal. If it wasn't because he sensed no spiritual power waves at all on the young man, Grigra would have sent him to the inquisition already.

Oliver knew that the leader believed that he was suspicious. He lowered his head and had decided to leave the team before the journey ended.

Since he escaped from Rentato, his life had been in constant danger, and he was constantly nervous. Although he killed a man, he was not a sorcerer. Therefore, night watchers would not be chasing after him. But the mercenaries, adventurers, and sheriffs had still made his life full of risks, and he had to fight for himself.

Fortunately, he was very experienced, and he had learned some fighting skills. His smartness and the strange powder he carried had helped him come all the way to the border of the Kingdom of Holm, where he had decided to start all over again. The death of Goldson was not a really big deal, and thus, he would not be put on the wanted list all over the country. When he got to a remote area, he would be safe.

What he learned from his experience was that one could only wait for death if he got no power. Therefore, he started to meditate after abandoning his belief in the God of Truth!

However, up until today, he still had not entered the meditation environment.

Oliver was not disappointed. According to the blue, short staff, even a gifted person would need to spend six months to two years to master his spirit and then enter the blank state. He just started four months ago.

But why were earth, fire, wind, and water regarded as the four most basic elements? How did they form so many different things?

Oliver, a young man who was always interested in opera, could not control his imagination as he thought to himself.

After marching forward for a while, Grigra looked around and asked them to pitch the tents. Oliver was among those who were responsible for keeping watch tonight.

It was during mid-summer, but it was still cold on the wasteland.

Sitting beside the fire, Oliver looked pensive. He watched the stars in the sky and thought to himself that he was already very close to the treasure!

He had seen the strange, red rock, looking like a demon staying low on the ground.

He came all the way here for a reason!

What Hassan said earlier scared him, for he thought that the place he was looking was in fact the entrance to Viken's demiplane. But he knew the difference between legends and reality, and he believed that he was looking for the treasure left by another sorcerer, who probably settled down here to seek for Viken's demiplane.

It was getting late, and the wind had become even colder. The two mercenaries who went out earlier to patrol the area had come back.

"It's your turn now." They kicked Oliver.

They then reached their hands to the fire and started enjoying the warmth.

Oliver gripped the short sword in his hand and grinned to the man who was going to patrol with him. "I'll take this side, okay?"

"What's the difference..." murmured the man. He walked to the other side.

After walking to a remote corner, the smile on Oliver's face disappeared. Gripping the short sword in his hand, he left the camp and walked to the strange rock.

He got ten minutes to patrol this area. He had to find the place where the treasure was hidden within ten minutes. Oliver was on full alert, and his mind was clearer than ever.

Three minutes later, he had safely approached the strange rock without catching anyone's attention and was now trying to find something in the gap between the rock and the ground.

A minute later, Oliver still didn't find anything. Another minute passed, and there was still nothing. There was fine sweat on Oliver's forehead, but he remained calm.

Suddenly, a surprised expression appeared on his face. He dug quicker and inserted the blue stick in.

With a crisp sound, the blue stick had gone into some metal gear. After that, a blue light lit up from the gap and dyed the grass nearby blue.

Silently, a cave was exposed in the ground of the wasteland behind the strange rock. The path going deep into the cave was paved with dark gray stone bricks.

Oliver took out the stick and then hurriedly walked in. He walked faster and faster, and in the end, he started running as fast as he could. According to the characters on the stick, there was a gear inside for shutting down the entrance. To be safe, he had to find it and close the entrance before the mercenaries found him.

The sound of his footsteps resounded in the corridor. Finally, Oliver saw the round hall in front of him.

The round hall was divided into a few stone chambers, and all the gates were wide open. What was in each of the chambers was very obvious—bookshelves and all sorts of dazzling gems.

Oliver was dazed for a second because of such great treasures!

Obviously, this place was a treasure vault. Oliver didn't even know where to look. Wave stone, Sun stone, the Ice Crystals...

Oliver had seen those gems on noble ladies. He understood how precious they were.

“Haha, I’m rich now!” A hoarse voice laughed behind Oliver.

Oliver was shocked. He turned around and saw his team leader, Grigra, who was walking to him looking rather greedy and excited.

There was a longsword in his hand.

Oliver didn’t know what to do.

Grigra laughed. “I knew you were hiding something. I wanted to kick you out once the mission is completed. But I didn’t know you were hiding something this awesome! Thank you for bringing so many gems to me!”

He crossed his sword in front of his chest and said, “Thank God for bringing you to me and leading me to the treasure. To express my gratitude, I’ll allow you to die here!”

Gripping the short sword and the magic stick, he was so scared that he took a few steps back. Facing the team leader, who had almost reached the level of knight, Oliver had no confidence in himself.

Grigra did not want to waste any time. Without hesitation, he jumped at Oliver and lifted his sword.

Chapter 903: Passed

Chapter 903 Passed

Oliver, as a “warrior” who had been through life-threatening dangers many times, was not too panicked to move at the critical moment. He backed off sideways subconsciously and waved his short sword, trying to find a way to escape.

However, he was far weaker than Captain Grigra, who took advantage of the length of his sword and slashed nonstop, making it impossible for Oliver to draw near. He could not make the best use of the short sword and could not resist the attacks by raising his sword.

Clang, clang, clang.

After a few crisp sounds, the short sword fell to the ground, and Oliver’s right hand was bleeding.

Grinning hideously, Grigra stepped forward and cut horizontally, further reducing Oliver’s range of activity.

After only a while, Oliver realized that he had been cornered. He would have to face the flashing longsword whichever direction he went to.

Am I going to die?

When the longsword reached him, Oliver’s head was dizzy, and something seemed to be bursting out from within his body, turning his eyes bloodshot. He subconsciously grabbed the only thing in his hands and raised it against the longsword.

Pa.

After a dull noise, Oliver stepped back again. He was stuck to the cold wall. More blood flowed out of his fingers, dying the blue staff red.

“Hehe!” Grigra was not concerned. Oliver could not defeat him when he had a short sword, and it was even unlikely now that he was merely holding an uncanny staff.

The only thing that made him waver was that the short staff seemed rather precious, and his heart would be pained if it was broken.

However, he thought of the room full of gems and possible magic items, and his vacillations were immediately gone. There were so many valuable items after all. He could afford the loss of the staff, as long as he killed Oliver in time and closed the entrance in case other people competed with him for the treasures!

Making up his mind, he slowed down his longsword, blew away the staff, and pierced at Oliver’s chest.

Looking at the glittering tip of the sword, Oliver felt that the whole world was slowed down and that the sword was reaching his chest like a snail. However, only his mind was this fast. His body was as “slow” as Grigra’s longsword. He could only watch the longsword penetrate him without being able to do anything.

Am I going to die?

I don’t want to die!

After only a short while, Oliver was caught in a strange hollow state. Then, a string seemed to have been broken in his head. He felt that something flooded out of his soul overwhelmingly into the blue staff in his hands.

Crack.

With a weird “crack” coming from the staff, Oliver felt that he had opened a gate, and his whole body was enshrouded in an ocean of tiny silver electric arcs.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

The silver electric arcs that emerged from the staff hit Grigra’s critical parts without meeting any obstacle.

Grigra's face and chest were immediately blackened. His longsword hit Oliver's body, but it led to nothing more than a shallow wound.

How can I die... Shocked and confused, he looked at the short staff before him that was still sparkling before he collapsed without any strength.

He had long confirmed that Oliver was not a magic apprentice, so he could not use the short staff even if it was an extraordinary item!

How did it happen? Grigra died with his eyes wide open in regrets.

Holding the staff with both hands, Oliver breathed hard. His back was as hunched as a shrimp. He had such a headache that he almost bumped into the wall.

After a long time, he was finally back to himself. He slowly raised his head. There was vague blood in his eyes, his nostrils, and the corners of his mouth.

Did the blast of spiritual power when I became an apprentice activate the staff? He thought in confusion, But shouldn't the staff have a central mark? Has it been erased?

He shook his head and looked at Grigra, holding the staff tightly. The fearsome captain that always terrified him was lying there lifelessly; his face dark and his eyes wide open. He was obviously as dead as anyone could be.

Not entirely reassured, Oliver squatted and examined Grigra's body carefully. After the confirmation, he looked at the staff in both confusion and ecstasy.

"Is this the power of magic?"

He quickly calmed down. He shut the entrance and found another secret exit. Then, he put the books, the items, and the gems into the magic pouch left by sorcerers and retreated.

It was not because he did not want to stay here and improve his strength first, but because there was no food here. He would be starved in a couple of days. As for the animals in the wilderness, 90% of them were stronger than him, except that they preferred brutalizing each other.

...

Two days later, Fernando came to this place and searched for “Hysterical Dance”, an organization that had evacuated here. As far as he knew, although the Eye of Curse had been hiding recently, he hadn’t admitted failure yet but merged a lot of smaller organizations to make up for the losses in the previous incident.

If it weren’t for that, he wouldn’t have known where he should go at all.

Naturally, he was unaware of the specific location of “Hysterical Dance”. Only by reaching the area and passing the test of the sorcerers could he be allowed in.

“Huh, some magic traps are activated here.” Fernando moved carefully on the ground instead of flying in the sky due to the night watchers’ recent madness. With his spiritual power, he suddenly discovered an obvious trap with little disguise, suggesting that it was set up by a rookie.

“Is this the relic of a certain sorcerer?” Fernando was immediately in a better mood. It was not because he was greedy, but because the “Congress of Magic”, having just been established, lacked both materials and money. The Union of Sorcerers suffered the heaviest losses in the incident of Cocus. The two deputy presidents who were not killed carved up the property of the organization and escaped, leaving nothing but a City in the Sky that was still in debris to Douglas and Fernando. Had it not been for the sponsorship from Hathaway, Fernando’s visit to other organizations would have been very embarrassing.

So, he paused and cast spells to investigate the environment. After confirming his safety, he began to try to crack the magic trap.

About half an hour later, after a crack, the hill collapsed, and a gate was revealed.

After a thorough examination, Fernando flew in as enthusiastically as fire, only to discover that most gems, materials, and items were already gone.

“I’m one step late. If I ran into that rookie, I could’ve totally fooled... well, introduced him into the Congress,” Fernando remarked in obvious regrets.

Based on the magic books that had been taken away and the remaining battle traces, he concluded that it was the apprentice-level rookie who took away the treasure through divinity.

...

Grasses and woods proliferated in the valley that was covered in vague, erratic mist.

Holding the black-covered thick book, Erica read it in fascination and calculated now and then.

“So, we are on a planet...”

“Is gravity the essence of the power of earth?”

“Is Earth Element the source of gravity?”

“The planet operates in such a way...”

“No wonder we will land again after we jump...”

Whispers of remarks and discussions echoed around Erica. The sorcerers were talking about “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy” in excitement or contemplation.

The book disrupted their understanding of the world, making them feel that they had never really recognized it.

If it weren’t for the fact that the book was unprecedentedly creative, the cognitive worlds of many of them would’ve collapsed or consolidated, but even so, they still thought that their mindsets had been refreshed.

Is the world like this?

The world is like this!

Raising their heads and looking at the stars over the mist, they seemed to see the trajectories of the mysterious stars. Everything was now under control!

Erica read for a while before she put down the book and rubbed her head as if she had been exhausted. Reading the book was too painful, particularly when one did not have enough knowledge!

Douglas had once taught her calculus before, but it was only meant to lay a foundation, and a lot of details were still obscured to her. So, it was terribly difficult for her to learn the Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy. She meant to write to Douglas, only to find that he was out of reach.

Seeing that Erica was rubbing her head, the sorcerers around rushed to her like rabbits and begged her.

“Erica, it’s time to teach us calculus!”

“How do you think this question should be solved?”

“Should this magic model be processed with calculus?”

Their questions harassed Erica’s ears like dancing flies, making her even more upset.

However, when she looked at the earnestness on their faces, her heart was softened again. She could learn the book by herself with her basic knowledge of calculus, but they did not know anything about it and could only read the gravity-related content.

In the meantime, she couldn’t help but feel extremely proud. Many of them were senior-rank sorcerers who were much stronger than herself, but they had to ask for her guidance. Even Mr. Atlant asked her about calculus a while ago. Calculus was truly a paradigm-shifting breakthrough in mathematics!

Erica looked around and suddenly had an intense, uncontrollable delight. After the fall of Aalto, her companions had been as numb and desperate as undead creatures, but “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy” was like a lighthouse in the night that drove the darkness and despair away, filling them with hope again. It was not because magic was not powerful, but because we hadn’t done enough! Our understanding of this world was too shabby!

When there was hope, the succession of magic would never stop.

Erica’s lips curled, and both happy and worried, she began to teach her companions calculus.

At this moment, a sorcerer flew in and asked an archmage who was in the crowd asking questions. “Mr. Deputy President, a senior-rank sorcerer named Fernando is requesting to meet you in the cabin. He has already passed the test. Do you want to let him in?”

Before the deputy president replied, Erica suddenly stood up. “Mr. Fernando? He’s very good at calculus!”

That was Mr. Douglas’ words!

Most sorcerers did not know that Douglas had already become a legend.

“What? He’s very good at calculus?” Hardly had she finished her sentence when the sorcerers of the valley rushed out and disappeared, leaving only the sorcerer who came to send the message and Erica staring at each other.

Chapter 904: I m Here to Pick You up

Chapter 904 I“m Here to Pick You up

A cabin, located in the depths of the mountains, was surrounded by strange trees, bizarre rocks, howling beasts, and chirping birds.

Fernando paced back and forth in the cabin gloomily, considering what he should say to the leaders of “Hysterical Dance”, and how he could prevent himself from mocking them. If possible, he should also visit the Eye of Curse. Although the guy was not in the leadership of the organization, everybody knew that he was the boss behind the curtain.

Suddenly, Fernando sensed that dozens of sorcerers were flying over with his spiritual power.

He was quite shocked. A transparent wall of force field immediately appeared next to him, and the spells to break space barriers were ready.

What are they doing? So many people are attacking me? But why are they doing it so obviously, so that I would have a chance to escape?

Questions popped up in Fernando’s heart. His concerns were not gone until he saw quite a few acquaintances in the crowd who were earnest but not hostile, but he was still quite puzzled.

“Fernando, I’m told that you are very good at calculus?”

“Can you tell me the solution to this problem?”

“What’s your opinion on gravity?”

The questions from the sorcerers gathered into noises that were even more unbelievable than the howling and chirping. Fernando’s ears were humming, and he couldn’t be more agitated.

“Enough!” A thunderous roar burst out, dwarfing all the noises.

Fernando was not nearly as kind and considerate as Erica. Roaring was his major specialty.

Everybody fell quiet. Fernando said gloomily, “How can I teach you calculus if you keep talking? And how can I know your progress right now?”

Not considering that he was in their territory, or that they had many senior-rank sorcerers and even archmages who were stronger than him, he behaved as a tough teacher.

For him, there was only the extent of knowledge in arcana. Identities and strength mattered little!

After silencing the sorcerers, Fernando said seriously, “I’m here to discuss certain things with the president of ‘Hysterical Dance’. After it’s over, I’ll stay here for a couple of days and teach the basics of calculus from the start if you want. As for gravity, you should wait until you understand the previous parts.”

As an experienced sorcerer, he knew how precious Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy was and what a major shock it would be for the sorcerers. Therefore, he had foreseen such a reaction.

However, what he did not expect was the degree of their shock!

It seemed that he was not bold enough in his prediction!

His words made the sorcerers of “Hysterical Dance” back to themselves. They couldn’t be more surprised. It was one thing that they were asking questions bravely, but it was a whole other thing that he was ready to teach them so frankly. Shouldn’t knowledge like calculus and gravity be their greatest secrets?

Are they going to teach us just like that without asking for anything in return?

Not entirely convinced, one of the sorcerers reminded Fernando, “His Excellency the Eye of Curse has reorganized ‘Hysterical Dance’ into ‘Family of Sorcerers’. It’s supposed to be a partnership of all organizations.”

“And the leader is...?” Fernando asked directly.

Another sorcerer flew over from far away. He shouted, “Mr. Fernando, the Eye of Curse invites you to meet him.”

After being briefly stunned, Fernando nodded. “Alright.”

That’s not bad. He would have to meet Atlant again even if he had to convince the president first.

Their meeting was not held in Atlant’s demiplane but in a garden that was overgrown with all kinds of flowers.

“To be honest, I was thinking to capture you and elicit complete knowledge on calculus and the detailed interpretation of gravity from you.” With his eyes closed, Atlant said comfortably.

Fernando sniffed, not nervous at all before a legend. “They do deserve your effort. However, the knowledge will be shared with all sorcerers.”

“All sorcerers?” Atlant asked with a smile, as if everything were under his control.

Fernando chuckled. “Yes, Douglas believes that more people and more communications are required to better recognize the world, grasp the natural laws, and analyze mechanisms behind things. So, he has defined this part of knowledge as arcana, which is to be shared with other sorcerers. As for the detailed, applied magic knowledge like magic models, they are personal secrets that one can keep to oneself.”

“Arcana?” For the first time, Atlant thought deeply without a smile. “It sounds like Douglas is trying to establish an organization that is purely about the communication of arcana? Is it his definition and categorization?”

“We haven’t settled the details yet, but it is indeed our wish. Also, we hope to establish a steady ‘magic building’ on the foundation of this organization. Together, they will be called ‘Congress of Magic’ so that we can resist the Church together.” Fernando did not hide his purpose or raise the issue with tricks. He mentioned everything straightforwardly.

Atlant nodded. "I'm very interested in the organization that is purely about arcana communication. As for your 'magic building', let's wait and see."

With "Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy", one of the most important books in the history of magic, no sorcerers wouldn't be attracted by an organization with arcana communication. Of course, they would certainly decide which part of their knowledge they would share according to the actual circumstances.

"I'm not surprised by your answer. Really," Fernando said in slight mockery. One of the important reasons for the collapse of the Magic Empire was people's selfishness and irresponsibility. "My purpose is to pull 'Hysterical Dance', well, 'Family of Sorcerers', into the group. As for the future, I believe you will make the right choice."

Besides, as people became used to arcana communication, the academic organization would be more stable, and people would be willing to maintain it. It would be easier to unite them later. Atlant knew Douglas and Fernando's plan very well, and he could not resist it.

Atlant suddenly opened his eyes that were as deep as the cosmos. "I'll wait for you."

"Douglas must've already become a legend, right?"

"Yes, 'Elect of Magic'." Fernando tried to resist Atlant's eyes.

Their communication was simple and fast, and they reached an agreement very soon. When Fernando left the garden, he was suddenly at a loss. In the beginning, Old Fox went through all troubles just to talk legends into cooperation, but his persuasion was so easy. Besides the influence of Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy, it was also because he had a legendary sorcerer on his back, and Old Fox did not.

.....

A year later, having visited this side of the Storm Strait for a long time, Fernando returned to the Hull Manor provided by Hathaway and saw Douglas again.

“What’s the attitude on the hell’s side?” Fernando asked his concerns without any small talk.

Perhaps because he was too exhausted, Douglas’ hair was partly gray. He said solemnly, “I spent half a year in Burning Metropolis before I was asked to leave hell. I did not meet Maltimus, the Lord of Hell. I didn’t even get to visit the dukes of hell.”

“Is Maltimus showing that he is unwilling to meddle in the main material world?” Fernando frowned. “Considering his scheme-loving personality, how could he let go of such a great change and leave the things of the main material world aside? Has he been taught a lesson by the pope? Or is he covering something?”

“If Maltimus is covering something, with his smartness, he would’ve given me a random promise to get rid of me, but he didn’t do anything, which makes people wonder if he’s covering something up. That’s certainly not his style. So, perhaps his attitude contains the information that he really wants to tell us. For example, through such an attitude, he’s telling me that he is planning a major scheme that must not be leaked or described, and that he is not far away from success. He’s asking us to be prepared and cooperate with him.”

After a brief consideration, Douglas told Fernando his analysis.

Thinking carefully, Fernando said, “This possibility matches Maltimus’ style best.”

“So, we must not be sluggish. In a decade, if it’s short, or a century, if it’s long, something big may happen,” Douglas reminded Fernando.

.....

Twenty years later, in year 398 of the Saint Calendar, inside the greatest swamp of the Duchy of Calais...

A man in a black magic robe was roaming on the mud. He did not wear any hood, revealing his face that was nothing more than a bag of bones. He was so terribly slim and pale that it was impossible to tell his real age.

His left hand had lost all the colors of vitality. Pale and dim, it was covered in the vague of death. The moment it pressed a seven-headed swamp earthworm, the insect decayed with pus flowing out, turning into an undead creature.

Raising his head that was only slightly better than that of a skeleton, the man looked at the sky and said to himself coarsely, "Shirley, I'm here to pick you up."

"Sorry, I'm late."

As he spoke, he stepped forward. The deep black mud in the swamp suddenly bubbled as if it were boiled water.

Then, the mud was lifted and thrown to the sky, splashing everywhere, and monsters that had been rotten to the bones stood up!

Chapter 905: For Your Return

Chapter 905 For Your Return

Baron Brenzell's manor was much more deserted after the owner was changed several times. Wild grasses grew on the hills behind the manor. Under the morning sunlight, dew was rolling on them.

A dew dropped on a pile of coiled bones, leaving vague wet marks.

The bones of the serpent shivered, but it was back to peace again. Around the creature, there were a winged tiger with rotten furs and flesh and yellowish pus flowing everywhere, tremendous ghouls that spread out their hideousness and stench, and countless ghosts wandering in the sky that were in absolutely no fear of the sunlight... The hills seemed to have become the nether world that was full of undead creatures.

In the middle of the undead creatures, a man, who was nothing more than a skeleton, touched the rocks with his pale, dim left hand and looked at the city with his thoughtful eyes.

At the city gate, a middle-aged man in a bishop's robe was walking to the church solemnly.

"Good morning, Mr. Bishop." Everybody who passed him bowed and greeted him. He was Arroyo, a bishop of the cathedral of the city and a rigorous cleric.

Drawing a cross on his chest, Arroyo blessed habitually. "The Lord protects us all."

Just like that, he slowly reached the entrance of the church. Under the homage of a few knight squires, he stepped on the stairs and entered the gate.

Vague holy light surrounded the gate, making everything solemn and pure.

Arroyo stopped at the center of the hall and prayed devoutly, "Only Truth lives forever!”

Then, he left from a side door, reporting to the red robe the status of faith in the towns, villages, and manors nearby.

After the report was done, he began to inspect the entire church to check if there was any negligence or disrespect. After the inspection, it would be the time of prayer, repentance, and learning.

It was his monotonous life in the past thirty years, except that he had grown from an intern reverent behind the bishop into the most notable bishop in this church of this city. He had witnessed the rise and decline of many families in the city.

“We must thank the Lord’s blessing.” He prayed sincerely in his heart.

Then, he realized that he reached the room where the transmission circles were deployed. So, he confirmed the intactness of the place with greater wariness, making sure that nobody except the designated personnel came in.

“Very good. Nothing is wrong.” His grim face put on a smile as he looked at the shimmering transmission circle.

Suddenly, he frowned, feeling that the transmission circle was so evil that it was like a gate to hell or abyss.

An idea automatically popped up in his head. Some cleric has betrayed, and the Lord of Hell is invading this place!

“No, it must be destroyed!” The moment he made up his mind, he suddenly had the understanding that he could not destroy the transmission circles quickly enough with his divine power. The only solution was to concentrate his power and detonate himself!

With a strong sense of sacrifice, he stepped forward and announced, “Only Truth lives forever!”

The few reverends who followed him were stunned at the holy light that was emanating from Arroyo. Then, the whole world was reduced into darkness after an explosion.

BOOM!

The transmission circles were blown apart, and the room simply collapsed.

The red robe who supervised the most important church sensed it in utmost shock. He could not believe that a bishop would betray the Lord and destroy the Lord's transmission circles voluntarily.

Then, two ninth-circle spells popped up in his head. Brain Scourge and Memory Meddling!

However, even a legendary sorcerer couldn't have played the two spells so marvelously that the victims would help him achieve his purpose voluntarily without any resistance!

Such sorcerers were most difficult to resist, and they were most dreadful!

BOOM!

In another place of the city, the core that controlled the divine power circles was drowned by the brilliance of self-detonation too.

BOOM! BOOM!

After hearing the two consecutive explosions, the slender man at the center of the hills outside of the city stood up. His eyes were both gentle and cruel.

Hooooooooo!

The undead creatures on the hills, in simultaneous howls of death, rose from the ground overwhelmingly.

The slender man floated toward the city. Behind and below him were the undead creatures who had returned from the abyss of revenge!

The guards at the city gate were checking the people who were entering the city when they suddenly sensed that the sky was dark. They raised their heads subconsciously, only to tremble in fear and paleness.

In the sky, the monsters who had nothing but bones and rotten meat left obscured the sun and brought death. Amid them was an evil necromancer who did not wear a hood.

Their legs trembled, and they collapsed on the ground. The people in lines ran about in fright, only to fall too as the army of undead creatures drew near.

The undead creatures did not let out any noise or go on a rampage. Ignoring those people, they flooded to the gate, entering the city through the gate, over the wall, or from the sky.

“Enemy incoming!”

Clerics and knights stood up from different places of the city, confronting the necromancer in the sky.

The necromancer seemed to be in a trance. He mumbled to himself, “I am Vicente. I am back...”

“Kill him!” Holy light and long spears were tossed at Vicente.

With immense hatred on his dry face, Vicente raised his head and let out a devastating howl.

As the sound waves spread out, many fuzzy banshees were dancing. All the flying clerics and knights hit the ground like raindrops. Those who could not fly trembled in fear as they watched it.

Vicente’s face became cold. Looking at the red robe who was struggling to resist Banshee Wailing, he raised his left hand and pointed at the red robe.

Countless streaks of black hair immediately burst out of the red robe’s body. He became as withered as a corpse. Then, he fell from midair helplessly, splitting into multiple pieces, but there was not a drop of blood.

Vicente looked down at the city and suddenly descended, landing before a middle-aged knight who was holding a longsword.

“Don’t... Don’t... Don’t kill me...” The middle-aged knight waved his eyes in panic and moved backward. The knights around him were too frightened to help him.

Vicente said coarsely and earsplittingly, “Andrew.”

“You... You know me. You... You are Vicente!” Andrew’s eyes widened as he recognized the terrifying necromancer before him. The man looked exactly the same as twenty years ago except that his face did not have the slightest flesh anymore!

Vicente walked to Andrew slowly. “It was you who reported me and killed Shirley.”

“It... It was none of my business. ‘Crazy Hound’ did it. I never thought that Shirley would get killed.” Andrew was almost in tears.

“Crazy Hound? Where is he?” Vicente asked coldly, ready to invade his brain if he did not get an answer.

Andrew was willing to confess anything to save himself. “‘Crazy Hound’ is appreciated by the grand cardinal of the duchy for killing a lot of sorcerers and promoted to Cocus.”

“Cocus? I will find you...” Vicente looked toward the north. His eyes were full of coldness and irresolvable hate.

Then, he stared at Andrew again. “Who else was involved?”

“There... There’s also Lotell, Goon, the Tamer, and the Bone Digger. They are in the Inquisition here.” Andrew revealed the names of all the people who were involved in the case.

“Very good, to thank you for your honesty, I will not kill you in person.” Vicente put on a cruel smile. The army of the undead creatures behind him raged forward and drowned Andrew.

“NOOOOOOOO!”

Miserable and painful screams echoed nonstop while the undead creatures ripped and swallowed Andrew’s flesh until there was nothing but bones left.

Vicente looked at the nobles who were gathered in the place. After they pushed Lotell and Goon out, he waved his hands, rotting the two nobles and turning them into zombies.

“Vicente, we had nothing to do with what happened. We are very sorry about the death of the Brenzells too. We will not stop you from seeking your revenge, but please do not kill the innocents.” The knight in the lead tried to calm down and begged sincerely.

Vicente said coldly, “You could’ve saved her, but you didn’t do anything.”

Then, the army of the undead creatures surged forward, consuming all the nobles.

After several minutes, Vicente reached the gate of the Inquisition on piles of bones. Most of the night watchers here, including the Tamer, had been killed in the battle just now.

“The Lord will not spare you!” The remaining interrogators in the Inquisition glared at Vicente.

Without saying a word, Vicente simply let the army of the undead creatures devour them, leaving only screams and the Bone Digger whose hair had been grayed.

“I only regret that I did not find out your whereabouts!” The Bone Digger seemed zealous and devoted.

“You’ll have plenty of time for regrets,” Vicente said coarsely and softly, not intending to argue with him.

Pale fire emerged from the soul of the Bone Digger, burning him and making him cry in pain.

“The Lord will... Ahhh! ... will punish you!

“NOOOOOOOOO!

“Ahh! Damn it. Have mercy! Have mercy!

“Have mercy!”

Vicente walked to the cemetery without looking back, leaving the begging man behind. Gradually, the screams died down. Since the ordinary people were too scared to breathe, the whole city was as quiet as if it were dead.

In such silence, Vicente entered the cemetery and reached the tomb that he had seen too many times in his dreams.

The tomb opened without a sound, and the coffin rose straightly.

Vicente walked to one side of the coffin, fell on one of his knees, and opened the coffin gently.

“Shirley, I’m here to pick you up.” As the gap grew larger and larger, his cold eyes were more and more tender, filled with love and guilt.

Inside the coffin, a skeleton was lying quietly.

Vicente leaned down and kissed the mouth of the skeleton softly. As if he were in a dream, he said, “Shirley, it will be fine. Everything will be fine. We will be together forever.”

A tear dropped from his eye onto Shirley’s face.

Corrupt the soul and pursue death, not for an eternal life, but for your return!

Chapter 906: Undercurrents

Chapter 906 Undercurrents

The rotten mud was releasing a strong smell. A wild wolf, having barged into the place in panic, was deeply mired in it. Howling, it tried to pull its leg out, only to be trapped deeper and deeper, until the mud consumed its ears and nose and interrupted the screaming.

It was what Vicente saw when he returned to the swamps. The place where he was usually active was now occupied by a creepy man in black.

All the parts on the man that was exposed to the air had nothing but bones left. Red, needle-like fire was bouncing in his hollow eyes. His clothes were filled with unusual patterns sewed with glamorous gold lines.

Noticing Vicente's return, he asked with a voice as depressing as the dead, "Where have you been? An envoy from the Congress of Magic is coming."

Vicente replied casually, "I visited home and took care of some stuff."

By the way, I picked up Shirley.

"You visited home? You took care of some stuff? Did you destroy the church and the Inquisition in the city?" The black-robed lich exclaimed in shock and fury, "Do you have any idea what great trouble you are bringing us into? Do you want our organization to be destroyed?"

Now that the Church had absolute advantages, the massacre by a necromancer would definitely be regarded as the greatest provocation. It would lead to the hunting of legends!

"Congus, it's my business. If you are unsatisfied, I can withdraw from the organization." Vicente replied simply without any argument.

The lich was exactly Archmage Congus, the leader of “Supreme Soul”. In the incident of Cocus, he managed to survive with the many life-preserving skills of the school of necromancy. However, “Supreme Soul” suffered a destructive blow later, and only a few members escaped. He had to lie low for quite a while.

A few years later, when the situation was less intense, he left his shelter and tried to reorganize “Supreme Soul”. Then, he accidentally learned that the Liege of Death’s demiplane was never discovered by the Church and seemed to have automatically closed. Therefore, he returned to the swamps near Cocus to search for the possible leads on the Liege of Death’s demiplane. Out of his expectation, he discovered Vicente Miranda, a self-made necromancer, in the swamps.

With only a few commonly-seen magic books on necromancy and the incomplete materials in the swamps, the man became an official sorcerer after only a couple of years. Congus, who intended to reorganize “Supreme Soul”, appreciated him and brought Vicente into “Supreme Soul”, promising that he would offer guidance.

However, what happened in the following twenty years made Congus unable to believe his eyes. Perhaps due to his lack of formal magic education, this Vicente Miranda had many ideas that were the opposites of the principles in necromancy, but for the same reason, he had succeeded in rectifying and improving many principles of necromancy. He made quite a few major breakthroughs in body structure and circulation. Receiving the feedback from the real world many times, he reached the ninth circle at a speed that Congus could not imagine!

Twenty-eight years, growing from nothing to an archmage. He was definitely a genius among the geniuses. Even in the heyday of the Magic Empire, there were few people who could compare to the record in Congus’ knowledge. Even Thanos, the Sun King known as the strongest sorcerer, took a longer time than Vicente did due to the specialties of Untraceable Destiny.

Of course, Congus had also gained tremendous benefits from Vicente’s breakthroughs. Together with Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy and Basics of Calculus from the Congress of Magic, his cognitive world was close to half solidification, and he was confident to break into the legendary level in fifty years.

So, Congus had complicated feelings about Vicente. He planned to treat and groom the man as a student, but the man had become as strong as himself so quickly that he, who had been busy re-establishing the organization, did not have the time to really bond with him.

However, Congus did not intend to suppress Vicente to ensure his power, because he knew that Vicente had perhaps sacrificed part of his flesh through a certain unique item. Otherwise, he couldn't have become an official sorcerer in such a poor environment with few materials. If he wanted to become a legend, he would need more theoretical breakthroughs and more time than Congus did. By then, Vicente would bow before him in respect without him doing anything.

Hearing Vicente's simple and cold reply, Congus held back his fury and said, "I trust that it will not happen again?"

"There's a 'Crazy Hound' in Cocus." Vicente did not hide it.

"Only one night watcher?" Congus was relieved. "I'll ask our branches and the other organizations to lie low for now."

Vicente nodded. "Who has come from the Congress of Magic?"

He was quite interested because he had read Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy and Basics of Calculus in Congus' place and was quite shocked by the ideas in them. He also applied them to his studies in body structure and circulation. Had he not picked up calculus, he couldn't have constructed magic models so easily or set a record of advancement however brilliant he was.

Therefore, even though he looked indifferent, he had been longing to meet Derrick Douglas, the author of the two books.

Congus floated before Vicente. "It's Fernando, one of the co-authors of Basics of Calculus."

He too had complicated feelings about the Congress of Magic. On one hand, he resisted their intention to annex “Supreme Soul”, but on the other hand, he appreciated them for publicly sharing Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy and Basics of Calculus.

“I can meet him.” Vicente touched the magic pouch in his pocket.

.....

In the forest where the Supreme Soul was hidden...

It was the day of which a small fair was being held, where people could exchange magic materials and books, so the place was lively and noisy. Vicente and Congus bypassed it and stepped into an underground palace.

“The meeting will be held half an hour later.” Congus sat behind his desk.

Vicente did not say anything. He stopped before Congus’ bookshelf, took out a thick book, and read it carefully.

Half an hour passed before anyone realized it. At this moment, the sorcerer at the reception brought in a lady who was as bright as fire.

“Fernando?” Congus asked in uncertainty because the gorgeous lady was too different from Fernando.

Fernando nodded. “The night watchers got their eyes on me. I have to change a bit before I go out.”

He pulled his belt. His breasts immediately collapsed, and he became a stout handsome man.

Looking at the transformation, Vicente said in disgust, “Pervert.”

Born a normal person, he always respected gender boundaries. Even if he needed to change himself, he would only focus on height and appearance.

Fernando was immediately enraged. “It’s better than you who makes everyone throw up the moment they see you!”

Vicente did not reply. He was too lazy to squabble with him.

Fernando lost momentum after his roars met no response, so he turned to look at Congus. “I would like to meet the author of ‘Theories of Body Structure and Circulation’.”

Recently, Congus had compiled Vicente’s research into books and traded them for the latest accomplishments of Douglas, Fernando, and one mysterious “Miss Silvery”.

Congus raised his skeleton hand and pointed at Vicente. “You just met him.”

“Huh?” Having become an archmage, Fernando finally noticed how young Vicente, who was also an archmage, was!

In the fair outside...

It was the first time that Oliver, who kept a mustache, had participated in such a lively magic fair with his friends. He searched for beautiful sorceresses while he looked at the magic books casually.

After twenty years, due to the lack of books and guidance, he was still at the fifth circle.

“Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy, Basics of Calculus... What are they exactly?” Having been hiding here and there, Oliver barely took part in any gatherings. Many things and many books were unknown to him.

The dealer looked at him as if he were a bumpkin. “Just take a look and you’ll see.”

“Huh. I can read them?” Oliver picked up the books.

After a while, he already forgot to pursue beautiful sorceresses or anything around him. He was completely devoted to the world in the books.

Such books!

Such theories!

.....

In the Bright Hall in Lance, the Holy City...

Aradeline, a level-nine red robe, walked into the sacred room in awe. He did not dare to raise his head before he paid respects to Pope Gregory.

At the beginning of this year, His Holiness killed the Mother God of the Earth with “God’s Arrival”, completely banishing sorcerers, dark creatures, and heretical churches into the Dark Mountain Range. It also marked the complete doom of the Sylvanas Magic Empire, the last of the three Magic Empires!

After paying respects to the pope, Aradeline realized that Ivan, the strongest saint, was also in the Bright Hall waiting for the pope’s instructions.

“You will organize the grand cardinals and the legendary knights to patrol along the edge of the Dark Mountain Range. Be prepared to conquer the place in fifteen years.” Pope Gregory calculated the time of his recovery and added some more time.

Ivan, who was handsome and masculine, lowered his head. “As you wish, Your Holiness.”

Watching Ivan leave, Gregory narrowed his eyes. Although he was not worried about the betrayal of saints with his trump cards like Excommunication, he still took precautions out of habit. For example, he kept Ivan busy in the Holy City or the Dark Mountain Range without allowing him to return to the north where he rose from. Also, he had dispatched the few grand cardinals close to him to different parishes.

After a brief silence, Gregory said to Aradeline kindly, “I appoint you as the bishop of the Snow Cathedral in the North Province of the Schachran Empire. I hope that you can work with Felix well.”

Sending his own men to the place was also one of the precautions.

“Of course, Your Holiness,” Aradeline answered anxiously.

Chapter 907: Gathering

907 Gathering “Hey, are you buying them or not? Don’t stand in the way of my exchange.” Seeing that Oliver read and studied “Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy” and “Basics of Calculus” before his stand in fascination, the dealer drove him away angrily.

“Huh?” Oliver shivered hard, coming back from the feeling as wonderful as Mountain Paradise. He waved the books hard. “Yes, I’ll buy them! Which organization are the authors from?”

He couldn’t wait to meet the sorcerers who had created such a marvelous mathematical system and astonishing theories and express his excitement.

Although he only skimmed through the books due to his lack of knowledge, he still sensed the pure beauty of mathematics and the shock of gravity that was beyond its age.

“Mr. Douglas of the Congress of Magic wrote them. The co-authors of ‘Basics of Calculus’ also include ‘Ms. Silvery’ and Mr. Fernando of the Congress of Magic,” the dealer said with obvious respect when he mentioned them.

In delight, Oliver took out a low-quality Wave Stone and packed up the books and the other materials he selected. He mumbled to himself, “The Congress of Magic! They’re all from the Congress of Magic! I’m going to join the Congress of Magic!”

The books of such a level were an unparalleled shock for a beginner!

After a few murmurs, he raised his head and stared at the dealer; his eyes glittering. The dealer stepped back in fear and said obscurely, “I... I never sold any unqualified goods.”

“Could you tell you where I can join the Congress of Magic?” Oliver asked in excitement.

Slightly relieved, the dealer said angrily, "If I knew it, I would've joined it myself!"

Then, he said seriously, "Over the past twenty years, the Church has been keeping the pressure on us. All the organizations can only develop in secret. How can you join them so easily?"

"I'm sure I can find the answer!" Oliver already made up his mind. Even though the Congress of Magic had few sorceresses, he would have to join them!

Therefore, he asked everyone in the fair and did not stop even though he was disappointed again and again. He paid a fortune for that.

However, his obvious action assured the sorcerers who watched over the fair that he was not a night watcher.

Finally, for the sake of "Soul Stone", one of the sorcerers gave him a tip. "Mr. Fernando of the Congress of Magic is visiting the place. You can go and wait there."

He pointed at a trail in the woods outside of the fair.

"Mr. Fernando?" Oliver was excited again and rushed to the trail to wait there.

The guards of the place spared someone to keep an eye on him, in case he leaked the intelligence.

After a dozen minutes, Oliver saw a stout man in a red robe, a lich, and a skinny man walking from the turn of the road.

"Although you are a horrible person, your 'Theories of Body Structure and Circulation' is worth a read," Fernando, who barely praised anyone, said.

Coldly, Vicente said, "Although you are a pervert, you know what you are doing when it comes to calculus."

He did not give in at all.

Fernando sniffed, holding his urge to roar with the desire for arcana communication. Within the Congress of Magic, Vicente's theories had been categorized as arcana.

He had a fairly good understanding of body structure too. His communication with Vicente and Congus went rather well.

Standing not far away behind and listening to them discussing theories that he could not follow at all, Oliver immediately felt that he had just entered the gate of magic, and a whole world was out there waiting to be explored by him.

"One day, I will join them in the discussions of the world and human bodies!" Oliver clenched his fists and set his goal.

At this moment, Oliver was almost certain that the short, red-robed sorcerer was Mr. Fernando, so he waited anxiously. When the three of them approached him, he stepped over and bowed in the standard etiquette of sorcerers. "Esteemed Mr. Fernando, I am a student who admires Mr. Douglas and you for your vast knowledge. I'm wondering if I could join the Congress of Magic and receive your guidance."

After that, he stood where he was uneasily, fearing that he would be declined and miss the opportunity.

After being stunned briefly, Fernando said seriously, "The Congress of Magic welcomes every sorcerer, but we have to make one thing clear first. Everybody who joins the Congress has to accept the atmosphere of open discussions and the stipulation that arcana is publicized to all the other sorcerers in the form of papers. Of course, the authors of such papers will be rewarded by the Congress of Magic and every reader."

"Arcana?" Oliver asked in confusion.

Fernando explained the definition of arcana, before he asked again, "Can you accept it?"

Oliver thought for a moment. Other than the magic models and some casting tricks, he did not have many arcana theories that deserved to be kept a secret, so he solemnly nodded his head. “Yes, Mr. Fernando.”

Not expecting that joining the Congress of Magic was so easy, Oliver was so happy that he felt unreal.

Fernando nodded his head. “However, until then, you have to receive our vetting. After all, we cannot allow any night watcher to sneak in.”

“That’s not a problem.” Oliver’s sense of unreality was gone, and he was back to the ground.

Listening to the conversation between Fernando and Oliver, Vicente felt that he was not needed here, so he turned around and left.

.....

In the Snow Cathedral...

Looking at the files at hand, Aradeline looked at the level-seven red robe who was in charge of the Inquisition in obvious discontent. “Why haven’t you captured the nobles? They are guilty of conspiring with sorcerers!”

The red robe said respectfully but without fear, “Mr. Aradeline, they are only suspects. We do not have any proof. The Lord teaches us not to punish anyone easily.”

“Proof? We don’t have any proof?” Grimly, Aradeline threw a book to the red robe. “Have you never read ‘Maul of Sorcerers’?”

The red robe glanced at the cover and said calmly, “Having been promoted to be an inquisitor from a night watcher, Crazy Hound certainly has a lot of experience. His ideas and approaches are very suitable to the places where the sorcerers are blatantly active, but Mr. Aradeline, this is the north where we developed first at the beginning. We have the purest faith. The nobles are trustworthy. They cannot be compared to their counterparts in Holm.”

Aradeline stared at the red robe with fury in his eyes, almost accusing him of misprision and betraying the Lord. However, when he remembered other similar things that he saw in the North Province, he held back his fury and nodded his head. “Whatever it is, we need to ask more if they are suspects.”

After the red robe left, he narrowed his eyes with a heavy heart. Something was not right with the North Province. He had to investigate in secret.

.....

Another twenty years passed, and it was the end of year 424 of the Saint Calendar.

Aradeline was as grim as before when he read the thick pile of documents before him. The problems of the North Province were graver than he thought. Many clerics conspired with nobles, accepted bribes, relished entertainments, and forgot that the sorcerers were not extinct yet and the war in the Dark Mountain Range was not won. Also, they seemed to have different opinions about the doctrines!

Everything was obviously led by someone in the upper level. All the leads pointed to the few level-nine red robes in this parish, who were all big shots who watched over the major churches like himself.

During the last twenty years, Aradeline eliminated obstacles and found clues bit by bit. Finally, he completed the preliminary investigation recently and decided to unveil the scheme.

According to the protocol, he had to report to Saint Felix, the grand cardinal of this parish, first.

He had never questioned the loyalty of Felix. As a matter of fact, no clerics had ever betrayed the Church so far. “Excommunication” and the existence of God prevented it from happening. So, he defined what happened here as addiction to entertainment and lack of devotion. A saint, who had got rid of the basic desires, would certainly not dwell in entertainments, nor would he be impious, or the Lord wouldn’t have granted him such great power.

Picking up the files, Aradeline reached the cathedral Felix was in through a transmission circle. He waited for ten minutes before Felix met him.

“The situation is very terrible.” Felix turned the materials and read carefully for a while before he reached the conclusion solemnly.

Aradeline agreed with him. “Yes, Saint Felix. We have to educate them soon.”

Looking at the closed door, Felix said to Aradeline, “You go and draft a plan first. Let’s discuss it.”

“Yes, Your Highness.” Aradeline bowed and turned around.

After only a few steps, he suddenly sensed the arrival of a horrifying holy light, and his mind was slowed to the minimum.

Before he sank into eternal darkness, he struggled to turn his head, only to discover that Saint Felix just dropped his right hand with a smile of mockery on his lips.

On Dec. 21, 424, Aradeline, bishop of the Snow Cathedral of the North Province of the Schachran Empire, was ambushed by sorcerers who conspired with devils and was unfortunately killed. The Holy City was shocked.

.....

In a place similar to a theater, the seats around the dais at the center had all been taken.

“Therefore, I don’t think that earth, fire, wind, and water are equal to elements. Rather, each of them should be regarded as a force...” Oliver waved his arm and spoke to the people below him confidently.

Chapter 908: Gradual Movemen

Chapter 908 Gradual Movemen

Inside the pope's library in the Holy City...

"Your Holiness, there's a piece of secret intelligence from the north." A red robe delivered the confidential file sent by the transmission circle in reverence.

Pope Gregory took over the letter and opened it, reading it carefully. The red robe, on the other hand, waited for his instruction, ready to dispatch His Holiness' order to all the parishes.

"Maltimus has secretly controlled a city in the Schachran Empire that is closed to the northwest of the Dark Mountain Range. He's planning to arrive through blood sacrifice." The pope appeared rather shocked. It was obvious that he did not expect that the Lord of Hell could have done so much right under his nose. It seemed that years of victories and the chaos at the edge of the Dark Mountain Range had blinded the clerics.

If Aradeline hadn't been murdered for accidentally discovering the conspiracy of hiding sorcerers and devils, which forced the dozen parishes in the north to investigate with full strength, he probably wouldn't have known anything until the Lord of Hell arrived.

Slightly riled, he picked up the platinum staff and rose abruptly before he announced, "Summon Ivan and Gwent to Godfrey City to the northwest of the Dark Mountain Range. I shall purge the polluted land myself."

He did not go there alone recklessly. After all, his enemy was a demigod. If he defeated Maltimus with a high price, it was possible that the stealthy Silver Moon would arrive from the sky. So, he summoned two saints to Godfrey City. One of them was a top legend, and the other was close to the peak of legendary. In such a way, there wouldn't be any problem.

"Understood, Your Holiness." The red robe began to draft the order.

Thinking for a moment, Gregory nodded. “In the meantime, compliment Felix for his remarkable investigation, which will offset his punishment for letting Aradeline be killed.”

“As you wish,” the red robe said respectfully.

After leaving his seal on the order, Gregory stepped into the transmission circle, planning to destroy the Lord of Hell’s hope before his arrival.

.....

An hour later, in the high sky of Godfrey City...

Gregory looked down below grimly without saying anything.

Ivan, who had golden hair, scratched his rising nose and said solemnly, “We’re still late.”

The city down below had been entirely enshrouded in blood. Painful and yet somewhat charming screams were bursting out. In the middle of the blood, corpses were floating up and down. It was most dreadful.

At the center of the city, a hideous gate, which was engraved with the skulls of countless devils and humans, was disappearing. The intense stink of sulfur was rising.

Gregory sniffed. “It’s not late. At least, Maltimus hasn’t got out of here yet.”

His greatest concern was that Maltimus would escape and instigate trouble everywhere instead of fighting him upon arrival. With the guy’s strength as a demigod and his cunningness, the “country of faith” under the God of Truth would be mired in continual trouble, and the sorcerers, dark creatures, and heretical churches that hadn’t been wiped out yet would have a chance to catch their breath.

If a demigod was determined to run whenever he sensed something wrong, it would be quite tricky even though the pope had God’s Arrival.

After saying that, he raised his right hand without any hesitation. Raising the platinum staff high, he said solemnly, “The Almighty God of Truth, you are one, and everyone.

“You are the moment, and forever.

“You are the creator, and master.”

Streaks of holy light burst out from his body and flowed on the surface, making him dazzlingly sacred.

In the meantime, the magnificent, solemn, divine, and transcendental vibe descended from unknown heights and completely covered the city.

Inside the city, a fuzzy shadow that had a pair of goat horns appeared. Releasing the horrible air of evil and corruption, it tried to get away from the locking of God’s Arrival.

Behind the creature, the nine-floored hell appeared in turns. The Bronze Castle, the Burning Metropolis, and the Silent Plain seemed real.

In all the cities nearby, the believers knelt and prayed, feeling touched. There were indescribable warmth and peace around them.

“You are one, and everyone.

“You are the moment, and forever.”

...

The prayer came to the sky of Godfrey City, hollow, vast, and shocking.

In the sky, the projection of Mountain Paradise showed up. The angels and the holy spirits all prayed, and hymns were echoing nonstop.

Gregory slightly narrowed his eyes and waved his platinum staff gravely.

From the seventh floor of Mountain Paradise, infinite light broke out and gathered into an ocean of holy light, drowning Godfrey City.

“NOOOOOOOO!”

Miserable screams came from inside the city. The enormous evil figure quickly collapsed.

Everything was soon over. The whole city disappeared from the surface of the planet.

Gregory’s face was pale, and his right hand was shivering beyond his control, but his voice was still rather steady. “Compliment Felix again. His intelligence is invaluable.”

It would’ve been a major disaster if he were slightly late.

“As you command, Your Holiness,” Ivan and Gwent said at the same time.

Gregory nodded his head. “Alright, return to the Holy City with me.”

From what he could see, the Silver Moon probably wouldn’t take any action.

At this moment, Ivan asked concernedly, “Your Holiness, should we postpone the Highest Conference of the Church next month until next year?”

“No, let’s stick to our schedule.” Gregory reviewed himself and felt that he was still in good shape. So, he was unwilling to show other people that he was weak. After all, he had rested for enough years, and he did not use God’s Arrival twice in a row.

“Alright, Your Holiness.” Ivan drew a cross on his chest and prayed in a low voice, “Only Truth lives forever.”

.....

“Oliver has redefined the four elements and included gravity in them. Then, what are elements really? They require strict definitions. I believe that there is a myriad of elements in this world. For example, it's impossible that gold, silver, and sulfur are the same element. They do not have many experimental similarities." Hathaway was never afraid to reveal her poor verbal skills during arcana discussions. Her silver eyes were full of excitement.

Douglas nodded. "That's a great idea. I feel that I'm enlightened."

Before he finished his sentence, Fernando walked in gloomily and said, "The Lord of Hell has been blown back to hell by the pope."

"What happened?" Douglas asked, frowning.

Fernando described the intelligence he received in great detail. In the end, he concluded, "I thought that he had a great scheme. So, it was nothing more than a secret arrival, which hadn't really been kept a secret at all. He was discovered by the Church in advance and enjoyed a 'God's Arrival'. What an idiot."

"Do you really think the Lord of Hell is an idiot?" Douglas showed unusual excitement.

Fernando thought for a moment but had to admit it. "He's not an idiot, so..."

He paused, because he thought of something critical.

Other people might be unaware that the Lord of Hell had been planning a major scheme since decades ago, but Fernando knew it very well!

"Therefore, the fact that he is blown back to hell by God's Arrival means that the real big scheme is upcoming. Otherwise, he wouldn't have come in person to distract the pope's attention with his heavy wounds as a price. Our opportunity will come in half a year at most." Douglas stood up abruptly as his excitement was replaced by calmness.

Fernando nodded and agreed with Douglas' deduction. Hathaway also rose and said with mixed feelings, "I'll go inform my grandpa."

The Sword of Truth was almost four hundred years old, and he had suffered heavy wounds in the fierce battles in the past when he always led the charge valiantly. He was now teetering at the end of his life. Also, ten years ago, a legendary ritual did not really succeed, and his longevity was only extended by thirty years. So, if there was still not an opportunity, the Congress of Magic probably would lose the firm ally who had been disappointed by the Church.

As a king, Hoffenberg could not tolerate the restraints on nobles right now.

“This opportunity comes a bit early. None of you has become a legend yet. We are still relatively weak,” Douglas said with mixed feelings. After the Congress was established, Fernando and Hathaway revealed brilliant talents, and so did Oliver who joined later than them. They all showed the potentials of being a legend. In other organizations that were in partnership with them, thanks to the Congress of Magic’s dissemination of knowledge, Vicente, Erica, Owen, Thomas, Terrie, and many other people were also making remarkable progress. They were regarded as future legends, but the time was still too short for the new-generation legends to be born.

“Hu. In any case, now that the opportunity has come, we cannot evade it.” Even a man as carefree as Fernando sighed. If they failed again, it would be barely possible for them to rise again.

“Thankfully, both Congus and Amanata are legends now. Together with the Lord of Frigidity, the Eye of Curse, and me, we are at least as good as the nobles in Holm.” Douglas smiled and comforted them.

Fernando chuckled. “You are a monster who can unleash the power of the peak even though you are only on level three. It’s a pity that it will take some more time before you really reach the peak.”

“There are as many unknowns in this world as there are stars. For an arcanist, there is never a peak,” Douglas replied subtly.

Hathaway suddenly interjected, “I’ve reestablished the Will of Elements.”

“Huh?” Fernando looked at her in confusion, wondering why she reestablished the Will of Elements. Was she considering withdrawing from the Congress?

“In the future, when the Congress starts to merge other organizations instead of uniting with them, the Will of Elements will be an example.” Hathaway had considered it for a long time and therefore said rather fluently.

Fernando’s lips twitched. “It’s really visionary of you...”

However, it’s certainly not a bad thing to have great hopes.

“Let’s not get ahead of ourselves but be fully prepared and seize this opportunity!” Douglas took a breath and clenched his right hand subconsciously.

Chapter 909: Chasers of Ligh

Chapter 909 Chasers of Ligh

In the Holy City, the Bright Hall was in the highest place, and the Hall of Scriptures of the Saint Biso Seminary was only second to it.

This building looked like the arena in the Sank Kingdom. It was flat at the center with a magnificent podium. There was not a dome. The seats around rose in circles to dozens of meters high.

Whoever stood at the center would see nothing but the countless people from the auditorium that were staring at him, and the pressure could be enormous. The sun in the high sky shone with a golden brilliance, as if God were watching the place, adding to the sacredness in the environment.

At the sunset, the remaining radiance of the sun beamed into the hall and covered everything in brilliant gold.

In the dazzling gold, however, the whole hall kept a weird silence, as if something horrifying was brewing and was about to break out.

“You are the incarnation of the Lord of Hell and the greatest devil. You stole the Lord’s power in the world while He is asleep!”

His words were still echoing in the hall and everyone’s heart, so deafening that everybody felt like they were dreaming.

Ever since the establishment of the Church, has anyone questioned the pope in public?

Ever since the establishment of the Church, has anyone disrespect the pope?

Ever since the establishment of the Church, has anyone accused the pope of being the incarnation of devils?

Can devils perform “God’s Arrival” and lead us to defeat sorcerers, dark creatures, and the heretical churches?

Feeling absurd and ridiculous, all the clerics were stunned. They looked at the pope, who was grim on the podium, and Saint Ivan down below, who seemed to be covered in a golden coat!

What's going on?

Why is the strongest and most pious saint opposing the pope?

Is he not scared of "Excommunication"?

At this moment, some said aloud, "According to the Canon, the Lord teaches us not to admire or worship idols. So, we only establish crosses. However, you have publicly announced that you are the incarnation of the Lord and His spokesperson in the world. You ask us to admire and obey you. That's only something that devils do!"

Another... Another person is accusing His Holiness to be an incarnation of the Lord of Hell!

The clerics in the hall were stunned. They then discovered that Saint Felix was walking toward Saint Ivan from the back. Then, they saw that Aleksey and Uriel, another two saints, left the crowd, followed by seven saint cardinals!

So many saints and sirs support Saint Ivan?

Is... Is His Holiness really the greatest devil?

"This is absurd! His Holiness has just heavily wounded the Lord of Hell with God's Arrival and driven him back to hell!" Saint Gwent attacked the traitors angrily.

"How can he convince other people otherwise?" Ivan declared resolutely.

Pope Gregory pressed his left hand and stopped the other saints from arguing with Ivan. He raised his platinum staff and said solemnly, "Whoever betrays the Lord will be deprived of his glory and caged in hell forever!"

Words were useless. The grace of the Lord would prove everything.

The golden brilliance suddenly turned ivory, sacred, and holy. The holy light on Ivan, Felix, and the rest of them flew out and dispersed in the sky.

“Excommunication?”

“Excommunication!”

All the clerics shivered. That was the best proof of the pope’s identity. If he were not the Lord’s Executor on earth, why on earth could he deprive the other clerics of the Lord’s blessing?

Saint Ivan must’ve been deceived!

However, they sincerely hoped that the pope would only punish the leaders. After all, it would be a heavy loss for the Saint Truth if so many saints and saint cardinals were lost.

Suddenly, Ivan opened his arms, as if he were embracing the people and the world.

Countless tiny angels surfaced around him, singing and praising him in hallowed hymns.

A giant hole was torn apart in the void up above, and the projection of Mountain Paradise appeared. Spots of holy light flew out and gathered into a pair of sacred, inviolable, lustrous wings!

“Excommunication” was eliminated, and Ivan’s vibe rose, giving the clerics feelings that were to the pope’s vibe.

“Devil! Open your eyes. This is the blessing of the Lord!” Ivan announced. “Our divine powers came from the Lord, and nobody except the Lord can take it back. Only devils will try to pretend that they can deprive us of our abilities. That’s the evidence that he’s stealing the Lord’s power!”

Although it was highly illogical, the clerics couldn’t tell it now. Even the pope’s supporters were astounded. Excommunication did not work! Ivan was close to the demigod level!

Could it be...

They were unwilling and dared not to think further!

“Your power is from the devils. Only devils are immune to Excommunication!” Gregory said before he raised the platinum staff.

Everybody was alarmed. Was it God’s Arrival?

At this moment, the sun was disappearing, and a silver moon seemed to be rising in the sky!

After a brief hesitation, Gregory performed “Light of Judgment”.

Ivan did not intend to fight the pope in the middle of so many saints and saint cardinals. The wings made of godhood on his back flapped quickly and blocked “Light of Judgment”, and the rebels activated the one-time legendary items they prepared in advance, vanishing from the spot.

Only by a public barrage could the pope’s years of intimidation be broken so that they could better develop in the future. They had to take the risk!

Not expecting that they would flee immediately, Gregory was one step late. He ordered with an awful face, “Ivan, Felix... have been corrupted by the devils and betrayed the Lord. All the grand cardinals, except for those who are watching over local parishes, will follow me to purge them in the north!”

In the Cathedrals of Seraphs in Olenburg, capital of the Schachran Empire...

Expressionless knights broke into the church. Under the leadership of some clerics, they began to arrest the so-called “heretics”.

Ivan, Felix, and the rest of them, after reaching the cathedral through the transmission circle, immediately changed its structure in case the pope came directly.

“Did everything go well?” In the cathedral, a man wearing a crown asked solemnly. He was as brawny as a bear and had a funny nose.

“Yes, Your Majesty,” Felix answered on behalf of Ivan.

The man was Rostov II, a level-three legendary knight and the current emperor of the Schachran Empire.

Smiling, he bowed at Ivan respectfully. “Please be crowned as the pontiff, Saint Ivan!”

“Please be crowned as the pontiff, Saint Ivan!” Felix and the rest of them also paid respects.

His face unchanged, Ivan raised his right hand and said solemnly, “I shall eliminate the heretics and restore the glory of the Lord with the pious believers!”

In 425 of the Saint Calendar, during the Highest Conference of the Church, the grand cardinals including Ivan revolted, resulting in the schism of the Church.

.....

In the Dark Mountain Range, a night watcher checked the time. After confirming that the Highest Conference of the Church should be over, he strode to the headquarters of the Dark Congress that had just been established.

“I am an emissary from the New Saint Truth. I would like to meet Danisos and Dracula.”

.....

When the Highest Conference of the Church was held, Douglas, sensing something, invited “Family of Sorcerers”, “Supreme Soul”, “Cabin of Palmeira”, “Will of Elements”, “Shadow Singers”, and other forces for a meeting.

Outside of the magic tower, the sorcerers below the level of archmage talked and exchanged items. Inside the magic tower, the legendary sorcerers and the archmages discussed the situation.

At this moment, Douglas changed his face. His demiplane appeared behind his back and shivered.

“According to the intelligence from hell, Saint Ivan accused the pope to be an incarnation of devils during the Highest Conference of the Church and established a New Saint Truth in the Schachran Empire. He has the support of three saints, seven saint cardinals, all the grand cardinals in the north, and all the legendary knights in the northern kingdoms.” Douglas soon calmed down and told everybody the news.

“What?” The news was so astonishing that many sorcerers brought out their crystal balls to confirm it.

Since nobody was covering it, they reached a conclusion very successfully and looked at Douglas in excitement.

Douglas stood up. “Hathaway, you will talk to King Hoffenberg and ask him to fulfill his promise. On the other hand, we will stand up openly according to the deal to show them that they are not supporting rats who only dare to lurk in the dark.”

“Kalolla, you will be responsible for the north coastline. Just stick to our grounds. There is no need to destroy the cathedral in this place.” Douglas looked at the Lord of Frigidity.

“Alright.” The Lord of Frigidity was not dissatisfied with Douglas giving the command. The man’s capabilities, talents, and achievements in arcana had deeply convinced him.

“We will be responsible for Colette,” Congus said voluntarily.

The Eye of Curse did not stay behind. “I’m going to the Duchy of Calais with Erica.”

“I need to go to Cocus,” Vicente said indifferently.

Knowing his past, Douglas nodded. “Then, you can swap with Erica.”

Then, he looked at Amanata, the Master of Shadows. “Would you like to go to Brianne?”

Amanata nodded his head as acknowledgment.

“The Congress will take care of Holm.” Douglas tightened his collar. “Now, we have to mobilize everyone.”

Clang!

The ringing of the bell from the magic tower gathered all the sorcerers around. They saw that the legends walked out in the middle of the archmages.

Standing on the stairs, Douglas described the news first. The sorcerers down below were too excited to believe it.

“This is our opportunity, and we have to seize it. After the Church gets the situation under control, perhaps we will never have such a good chance,” Douglas said honestly. “However, even if we succeed this time, it doesn’t mean that we will immediately have safety.

“On the contrary, to win the support of the nobles, we have to stand out and fight the Church openly. So, our success this time will only be the first step to reforge the glory of sorcerers. Every new step in the future will come with even greater dangers. Many of you may not live to see our real renaissance.”

All the sorcerers on the spot were caught in silence.

Douglas went on. “However, if we don’t stand out, we will only be paralyzed by the temporary stability in the dark and gradually swallowed by it. Our children, our students, and all the future generations will never live in freedom and peace. They will never get to learn arcana and magic without external oppression.”

The sorcerers felt the same. Many of them had never experienced the splendor of the Magic Empires. Ever since they were born, they had been hiding like rats in a gutter. They did not want their offspring to live such a life again.

Taking a deep breath, Douglas waved his arms hard and said, “The path to brightness is destined to be one paved with our bones and blood, but we do not have a choice!

“Although we are struggling in the darkness, we must never forget to pursue the light!”

Chapter 910: The City in the Sky End of TMA

Chapter 910 The City in the Sky End of TMA

After Douglas' speech, all the sorcerers on the spot left for different places silently but steadily, ready to fulfill the tasks that they had been given. They were not excited, not zealous, not provoked, but were taking action with determination after rational consideration.

We know what we want, and we know what we are going to pay!

After the sorcerers left in order, and the legendary sorcerers who were returning to their own organizations through their demiplanes had reached their destination, Douglas heaved a soft sigh and said to Fernando, "It's time that we take action."

Fernando did not say anything but followed Douglas to the depths of the cave.

At dawn, the vigorous sun was rising, driving the darkness away and bringing the light.

At this moment, the plain near Rentato suddenly had an enormous earthquake. Noises were bursting out from the depths, shocking the animals and forcing them to flee.

BOOM!

The ground collapsed into dark holes. Countless cracks were spreading out.

Terrifying magic waves broke out in the pits. The dazzling light from them almost eclipsed the sun in the sky.

Valentine, the grand cardinal who was responsible for Rentato, certainly couldn't have neglected such noises. He activated the divine power circle of Rentato quickly and led the red robes as well as the giants of the Inquisition to the place.

As a saint, he could not hide in Rentato without investigating or doing anything. The sorcerers could not be allowed to go on a rampage!

When had such a thing ever happened in the territory of the Saint Truth?

Even though the enemy had more than three legendary sorcerers, he believed that he was definitely able to save himself as long as he did not run into any of the top legends.

As he flew toward the plain, he asked a red robe to order the noble knights to follow them and provide help.

Therefore, bishops and reverends were sent to the camps of the Sword of Truth's Knights, the Verdict Knights, and the Saint Cross Knights, urging them to set off.

"The nobles are less and less active over the years. They are not nearly as enthusiastic as the beginning. We have to change that!" Having similar ideas, the clerics reached the camps.

"You should go surround the plain right now!" a bishop commanded the Sword of Truth's Knights.

"Blue Grace" Sharp was not here, so "Argent Punishment" Cesc stood out and replied coldly, "As per His Majesty's order, no knights are allowed to leave the camp without his permission!"

"What's the meaning of this?" the bishop cried angrily.

Cesc said expressionlessly, "This is exactly our meaning."

"Are you betraying the Lord? You have been corrupted by the sorcerers!" The bishop was outraged. "You will be tried and burnt at the stake!"

Cesc waved his right hand, and silver bolts of lightning immediately created black ravines before the bishop.

Staring at the bishop in the eyes, he said, "One more word, you die; one more step forward, you die."

“You!” The bishop was stunned. He never thought that a noble knight could be so disrespectful toward a servant of the Lord.

He looked around, hoping to find a knight who could defend the dignity of the Lord.

Swords were drawn, reflecting cold brightness under the sunlight. All the knights in the camp looked at the bishop maliciously.

They already had enough of those jackasses!

The Church was already divided. Let’s see if they are still so arrogant!

The bishop stepped back in fear, unable to believe that it was the Kingdom of Holm that had always basked in the grace of God.

In the Nekso Palace, the Sword of Truth, ensconced on the throne, stared at the void before him thoughtfully. Illusionary cracks appeared and vaguely manifested what was happening on the plain.

Outside of the temple, dukes, earls, and other nobles, who had been gathered, watched the closed gate and waited for the king’s order in silence. At this moment, they fulfilled their vow and gave everything to their liege that they pledged loyalty to.

Of course, had it not been for the years of oppression from the Church, which made them scared day and night, they wouldn’t have been so united.

The lights in the pits on the plain were more and more dazzling. A magnificent, terrifying pressure was leaking out. It could be vaguely seen that an enormous city was rising from down below.

When Saint Valentine reached here with the red robes and the giants of the Inquisition, he happened to see the mountain-sized city surpassing the horizon under the lift of the light.

“A floating city? Another sorcerer is trying to create a floating city?” Valentine thought in surprise. Hadn’t the plan of a floating city been proved a failure again and again in the Magic Empire?

“The name of the city is Allyn. In the language of Sylvanas, it means ‘City in the Sky’.” With a solemn declaration, a sorcerer in a black robe appeared before the floating city that was enshrouded in brightness.

“Douglas, the president of the Congress of Magic.”

Alarmed, Valentine recognized the sorcerer.

Over the past decades, Douglas had taken actions several times, saving a lot of sorcerers and killing many clerics and night watchers. His name was put on the Cleansing List.

Douglas stared at them thoughtfully and gravely. Suddenly, a weirdly-shaped celestial globe appeared before him.

“Paradise of Stars!”

The environment immediately became dark and boundless, with stars flashing here and there. Valentine and his companions were trapped.

There was nobody except Hoffenberg in the temple in the Nekso Palace.

However, he opened his mouth and said nonchalantly, “Douglas is indeed extraordinary. He’s planning to kill Valentine even though they are on the same level.”

“Hehe.” Somebody sniffed in the void before him. It was Pope Gregory, who was fighting against the heretics in the northern frontline.

As the monarch of a major kingdom, he had ways to secretly reach out to the pope.

The clerics who returned from the camps of knights in frustration were shocked and scared. After discussing for a while, they decided to confront the king and see if he was bold enough to publicly acknowledge that he betrayed the Lord!

Right then, the holy light that covered the city was concealed, and everything was back to normal.

“What’s going on?”

“How is this happening?”

The clerics looked at each other in shock. The terrifying waves were not gone yet, but why had the divine power circle vanished?

“It’s the Nekso Palace!”

“It’s Hoffenberg!”

They suddenly realized what it was about. The divine power circle had two control pivots, one located in the cathedral and the other in the Nekso Palace!

“Is he really supporting the sorcerers?” the clerics thought in fear and shock.

BOOM!

An enormous noise broke out in the district of nobles near the Nekso Palace. The clerics looked in fear, only to see a magic tower rising and taking shape quickly under magic effects!

It seemed to have been prepared for a long time, or the magic circles couldn’t be completed so quickly!

A magic tower is established in the district of nobles?

The clerics felt coldness to their bones.

BOOM!

A black, spiky magic tower was growing at a visible speed, but Zakley, the saint cardinal of the capital of the Duchy of Calais, could only watch it in shock and fright in the cathedral whose defense had been entirely activated because he saw “Ceaseless Wind” Raymond standing next to Atlant, the Eye of Curse!

BOOM!

In the capital of the Kingdom of Brianne, in Kasvig, the capital of the city alliances in the north coastline, and in the capital of the Kingdom of Colette, similar magic towers were rising one after another, announcing to the world the return of sorcerers!

As for the grand cardinals of those places (none of them was a legend because those places were not the Church's focus), some were killed, and some managed to keep themselves safe in the cathedrals thanks to the divine power circles. They asked for the help of the Church, but the Church, which was in the middle of a war with the North Church, could only deploy a few legends to them for now. They were outnumbered by the enemy.

The Inquisition of Cocus, on the other hand, had been strewn with bodies.

No, the bodies crawled and rose to their feet again, following Vicente.

Wandering in the Inquisition surrounded by the army of the undead, he saw the appalled "Crazy Hound" in the inquisitor's office.

"Vicente?" The previous massacre in the town made him know that Vicente was alive and back for his revenge.

Looking at "Crazy Hound", the man whose face had been worn out by time, Vicente said coldly, "You have the honor to be the first offering to revive Shirley."

As he spoke, "Crazy Hound" raised his hands and grabbed his own neck. He moaned painfully but could not utter a word.

Then, his body became rigid, and it was stored into a special coffin by Vicente.

...

Sorcerers entered Rentato one after another. Looking at the high magic tower, they had complicated feelings. The magic tower, as well as themselves, could finally show up in public!

On the plain, the vast, boundless cosmos disappeared. A lot of dead bodies were falling, but Douglas was still in the sky. The floating city behind him, on the other hand, began to ascend rapidly!

“He’s indeed a monster who has the combat ability of a top legend,” Hoffenberg remarked casually.

From the void, Gregory’s voice came out again. “What do you want?”

At this moment, he had to count on the power of nobles, so he asked straightforwardly.

“The Church’s introspection. The Church needs to know its boundaries,” Hoffenberg said so peacefully as if he were just talking about the weather.

“Introspection? Boundaries?” Gregory sounded angry.

“Yes.” Hoffenberg did not back off at all. He softly touched the Sword of Truth next to him with his right hand.

...

The floating city, which looked like an upside-down mountain, flew higher and higher. The buildings in them had all been repaired, and all the cracks were gone.

BOOM!

After it reached the planned location, light burst out, and the floating city shivered up and down softly.

The sorcerers near the plain and in Rentato all watched it with their hearts palpitating, fearing that it might fall.

The quake stopped, and the enormous city floated in midair steadily. The magic stripes and patterns glittered one after another, constructing an invisible rampart!

“It’s... It’s really flying...”

“That’s the floating city...”

The sorcerers covered their mouths in case they cried out aloud. The endeavor that the Magic Empires had never accomplished succeeded in the darkest age! The flying city was also a sign that their rat-like lives had come to an end!

The future might be even gorier, but there would be light!

The clerics, the nobles, and the ordinary people looked at it in astonishment. A city in the sky. Was it the Lord’s residence? Then why had it been stolen and occupied by the sorcerers?

Before the floating city, Douglas magnified his voice with magic and announced solemnly, “This is Allyn, the City in the Sky, and the headquarters of the Congress of Magic!”

His words were short and simple, but all the sorcerers who heard him wept.

Content from Chapter 1: The Burning Gallows to Chapter 910:
The City in the Sky End of TMA

eBook from 9Kafe